

THE TRIBES AND CASTES
OF THE
NORTH-WESTERN PROVINCES AND OUDH.

BY
W. OROOKE, B.A.,
BENGAL CIVIL SERVICE.

IN FOUR VOLUMES.
VOL. IV.

CALCUTTA:
OFFICE OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF GOVERNMENT PRINTING, INDIA.
1896.

THE TRIBES AND CASTES

OF THE

NORTH WESTERN PROVINCES AND OUDH.

VOLUME IV

M

Monas, Maunas — A sept of Rājputs found almost exclusively in the Benares Division. According to their own account they take their name from their eponymous ancestor Maunas or Monas Rishi. Their original home is said to have been Amber or Jaypur, and the legend goes that a party of them, coming to bathe at Benares, envied the fertile plain, which is now the Bhadohi Pargana of the Mirzapur District, and conquered it from the Bhars, from whom it took its name. Their immigration from their home in Rajputana is fixed by the tribal legend at some six or seven hundred years ago. The enquiries, however, of Mr Duthoit go to show that the Bhar rule in Bhadohi survived the Mahammadan conquest of Kanauj by some two centuries, during which it was in dependence on the Kantil Gaharwirs, and the rise of the Maunas power in Bhadohi cannot be fixed with certainty before the time of Sāgar Rāi, whose descendant Jodh Rāi, in the third generation obtained a grant of the pargana from the Emperor Shahjahan. At one time they enjoyed considerable property, and used, it is said, to give their daughters in marriage to the ruling families of Munda and Kantil, but in the general anarchy which ensued on the downfall of the Mughal Empire, they suffered from the aggressions of more powerful neighbours, in particular the famous Balwant Singh of Benares. The Maunas say that their Raja, Sri Ballesh Singh, was fraudulently induced to give up to Balwant Singh the royal grant (Shāhi farmān) by which he held the pargana from the Mughal Government. At any rate, whether this be true or not, the greater part of the Maunas territory was absorbed into the Benares Rāj and forms a considerable portion of the domain of His Highness the Maharaja of Benares. Naturally in the Mutiny the sept gave much trouble. They are now, as a rule, in great poverty, and till astenants the lands their torefathers used to own They are held in little estimation, and now-a-days give and take girls from the septs of the Gaharwâr, Bais, and Bisen of Mirzapur and Benares In Jaunpur they are reported to take brides from the Bisen, Raghubansi, and Chanpat Khamb septs, and to give brides to the Raghubansi, RâjKnmâr, Durglansi, and Bais

2 In Bhadohi of Mirzapur, which is one of the chief seats of the sept, the Maunas say that their original seat was Amber in Rajputana, and some fifty generations ago some of them started on a pilgrimage to Gaya Bhadohi was then ruled by the Bhars, and one of their Râjas ordered a Brahman, named Siva Man, to give his daughter in marriage to the son of the Râja. The Brâhman appealed to many of the neighbouring Râjas for protection: but they failed him, until the party of Maunas Râjputs took up his cause and finally captured Chauthâr, which was the chief stronghold of the Bhars. Thus they gained the country. Their last Râja was Takht Sinb, who was overcome by the first Râja of Benares Their gotra is Maun. They take brides from the Bisen, Bais, Bachgoti, BhâtKanyâ, Bhanwag, Rikhbansi, Raghubansi, Saunakh, and Tisahya septs, and give girls to the Gaharwâr of, Mânda and Bijaypur, Bachgoti, and Sombansi. The Maunas of Bhadohi do not intermarry with Baghels, as some of their brethren do There are two grades in the sept—one the real Maunas, and beneath them others, who were introduced by being allowed to eat with the genuine Maunas The latter marry in inferior septs and families

1 Distribution of the Maunas Rôjputs by Census, 1891

DISTRICTS	Number	DISTRICTS	Number
Agra	16	Balua	237
Bânda	2	Gorakhpur	24
Allahâbâd	1939	Azamgarh	401
Benares	682	Falghâd	1
Mirzapur	9141	Saltânagar	1
Jaunpur	1721	Ulabanki	62
Ghar pur	60
		TOTAL	14579

Mongil.¹—A sept of Rājputs in Ondh. They are said to have preceded the Bhars. One family of them is found in Sujanpur Ta'alaqa Adharganj.

Mughul, Mughal.—One of the four great Muhammadan subdivisions known in Europe under the form Mongol. Mr. Ibbetson,² writing of the Panjāh, does not attempt to touch upon "the much debated question of the distinction between the Turks and Mughuls. In the Delhi territory, indeed, the villagers accustomed to describe the Mughuls of the Empire as Turks, used the word as synonymous with 'official,' and I have heard my Hindu clerks of Kāyasth class described as Turks, merely because they were in Government employ. On the Biloch frontier the word Turk is commonly used as synonymous with Mughul. The Mughuls proper probably either entered the Panjāb with Dābar, or were attracted thither under the dynasty of his successors; and I believe that the great majority of those who have returned themselves as Mughuls in the Eastern Panjāb really belong to that race." In these Provinces they say that they take their name from their ancestor Mughul Khān.

2. In the last Census they are classed under three sub-divisions: Chaghtai, Qazalbāsh, and Turkman. Writing of Afghānistān Dr. Bellew³ says:—"What the origin of these new clans was, whether they were conquered and converted Pathāns, who became absorbed into the dominant tribe, and thus, by the mere force of numbers and other favouring circumstances of the period, gave them both their language and social code of laws; or whether they were kindred tribes of Turks imported by Sabaktakīn (that is, 'the one called Sabak;' as Alaptakīn, 'the one called Alap,' takīn being the distinctive affix of the names of Turk slaves), the founder of the Turk Tātar (as distinguished from the Mongol or Mughul Tātar) dynasty at Ghazni, is not clearly ascertained. Without excluding the possibility of their increase by the occasional immigration of other kindred Turk clans from across the Oxus, it may be considered more probable that the increase in the clans of the Ghilji took place, mostly by the absorption and adoption of subjugated native tribes; for we find several instances of Chaghatai Turk-clans living in close proximity to the Ghilji, yet quite distinct from them, and entirely ignorant of any kindred connection with them. Such Turk clans are the Bayat about Ghazni and Herat, the Carlûgh, Chûng, and Mughal Turk (Akka, Chirikcha, etc.) of Balkh, etc. Such also are the Mongol and Chaghatai Turk clans of Mangal, Jaji, Jadran, Khitai, etc., who are settled about the Pewâr and the head-waters of the Kurram river, and who were brought to these situations on the invasions of Changuis and Tymûr—the Tatar scourges of the world during the thirteenth and fifteenth centuries. These clans, with the exception of the Jadran, though they have almost entirely lost the typical physiognomy of their race, their mother tongue, and, indeed, everything else, but their names, which would connect them with their original stock, hold themselves entirely distinct, political relations always excepted, from the Ghulji, who are their neighbours.”

¹ Partabgarh Settlement Report, 1883.

² Panjāb Ethnography, paras. 506, 507.

³ The Races of Afghānistān, 161.

3 Other clans in these Provinces are the Qazalbâsh or Qizilâsh, “red heads,” Uzbak, Turk, Kai, Chak, Tajik. In the Panjâb the main tribes are the Chaghatai and Baris. Some of these, especially the Chaghatai, are claimed by the Bhatti Jadons to have descended from them when they were rulers of Ghazni and Zabulistân. The last Imperial family was drawn from the Chaghatai. The Jhejha also call themselves Mughul, but they are supposed to be slaves of Mughul or low caste Hindus converted to Islam by some Mughul nobleman. They are not suffered to intermarry with the Râjput Musulmâns, or with any of the pure Muhammadan tribes.¹

Distribution of the Mughuls according to the Census of 1891

Districts	Chaghatai	Qazalbâsh	Turkman	Others	Total
Dehra Dûn . . .	108			93	201
Sahâranpur . . .	477	1	30	1 516	2 424
Muzaffarnagar . .	805	16	832	578	1 731
Meerut . . .	890	5	40	1 181	2 106
Bulandshahr . . .	780	17	0	1 657	2 453
Aligarh . . .	16		101	780	902
Mathura . . .	119	56	15	215	395

¹ Williams. On the Census Report 76; Es a Lachhman Singh, Bulandshahr Memo 191 27

Distribution of the Mughals according to the Census of 1891—contd

DISTRICTS	Chaghtai.	Qazvini.	Turkman.	Others.	Total.
Agra	520	20	76	1,100	2,022
Farrukhabad	378	..	27	673	1,075
Mainpuri	100	117	217
Etawah	162	...	9	460	631
Etab	264	2	16	413	695
Bareilly	1,162	...	1	2,040	3,203
Bijnor	1,311	7	...	459	1,827
Budhan	600	20	3	618	1,450
Moradabad	713	77	2,016	9,629	12,435
Shahjahanpur	721	2	39	561	1,323
Pilibhit	339	406	745
Fatehpur	708	604	1,312
Banda	103	2	10	209	324
Hamirpur	408	408
Allahabad	42	467	509
Jhansi	65	213	278
Jalaun	122	...	218	317	657
Lalitpur	10	...	1	53	64
Benares	123	997	1,120
Mirzapur	66	266	332
Jaunpur	518	518
Ghazipur	227	...	18	319	564
Ballia	17	193	210
Gorakhpur	332	3	11	913	1,259
Basti	81	1,696	1,777
Azamgarh	139	...	266	1,632	2,037
Kanoun	10	10

ant of any kindred connection with them. Such Turk clans are the Bayât about Ghazni and Herât, the Cârîugh, Chûng, and Mughal Turk (Yaka, Churkha, etc.) of Balkh, etc. Such also are the Mongol and Chaghatai Turk clans of Mangal, Jâji, Jadrân, Khitâi, etc., who are settled about the Peshâvâr and the head-waters of the Kurram river, and who were brought to these situations on the invasions of Chinggis and Tymûr—the Tatar scourges of the world during the thirteenth and fifteenth centuries. These clans, with the exception of the Jadrân, though they have almost entirely lost the typical physiognomy of their race, their mother tongue, and, indeed, everything else, but their names, which would connect them with their original stock, hold themselves entirely distinct, political relations always excepted, from the Ghilji, who are their neighbours.”

3 Other clans in these Provinces are the Qazalbâsh or Qizilbâsh, “red heads,” Uzbek, Turk, Kai, Chak, Tajik. In the Panjâb the main tribes are the Chaghatai and Baris. Some of these, especially the Chaghatai, are claimed by the Bhatti Jâdons to have descended from them when they were rulers of Ghazni and Peshâvâr.

Imperial family was derived from the	1857	1861	1871	1881	1891
Bahrâich	429	20	883	1,847	1,393
Sultânpur	118		784	1,002
Partâbgarh	38	5	349	391
Bârâbanki	721	..	460	1,187
TOTAL	19,038	1,237	3,982	52,416	76,083

Mukeri—A Muhammadan tribe, which was separately enumerated at the last Census, but which is usually treated as a sub-caste of the Banjâra, under which head some account of them will be found.

Distribution of the Mukeri according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS	Number	DISTRICTS	Number
Mathura	1	Etahda	18
Farrukhâbâd . .	79	Hamirpur	75
Shâhjahanpur . .	201	Allahâbâd	140
Meerut	18	Jhânsi	36
Cawnpur	14	Jâloun	74

Distribution of the Mughuls according to the Census of 1891—contd.

DISTRICTS	Chaghtai.	Qazalbash	Turkman	Others	TOTAL.
Agra	520	26	76	1,400	2,022
Farrukhâbâd	375	..	27	673	1,075
Mainpuri	100	117	217
Etâwah	162	..	9	450	621
Etah	261	2	15	415	693
Bareilly	1,162	..	1	2,040	3,203
Bijnor	1,341	7	..	489	1,837
Budâun	809	26	3	618	1,456
Morâdâbâd	713	77	2,015	6,529	12,434
A tribe of cur	721	2	80	561	1,323

the Koeri and Kâchhi, and whom they regard as Kshatriyas and customs.

2 At the last Census they were recorded in nine sub-castes—

Internal structure Bhadauriya, who take their name from the Pargana of Bhadâwar, South of Agra, which also gives its name to a well known Râjput sept, Bhagta from Bhagat, a vegetarian; Hardiya or growers of turmeric (halâdi); Kâchhi, the name of a distinct tribe; Kachhwâha, which is also the title of a famous Râjput sept, Kanaujiya from Kanauj; Saksema from the old town of Sankisa in the Farrukhâbâd District; Sakta or worshippers of the female energies of nature (saktî); and Thâkuriya or the Thâkur sub-caste. In Faizâbâd we find the Hardiya or Hardiha, who are again sub-divided into the Bhaktiya or Bhaktiha and the Saktiya or Saktiha; the Kanaujiya and the Tanraha. In Farrukhâbâd they divide themselves into the Saksema, Haldiya, and Bâghwân, or keepers of gardens (bâgh). The Murâo sub divisions, according to the Census returns, are 232 in number. Those most important locally are the Bakandar and Mitha of Bareilly, the Bhukarwâl of Morâdâbâd;

¹ Partly based on notes by Mr. Râm Saran Das, Faizâbâd and the Deputy Inspector of Schools, Farrukhâbâd.

the Purahya of Shâhjahânpur and Pilibhit, the Bâhman of Basti, the Dhakuliya of Lucknow, who take their name from the water-lily (dhenlî) which they use, the Mewar of Sitapur, Hardoi, and Kheri, the Pachhwahân of Kheri, the Mahikpur of Gonda, and the Kalaphartor of Bârabanki

3. The Murâos are orthodox Hindus In Faizâbâd the Religion customs and occupation. Bhaktihas put a necklace (lanlî) on every child immediately after birth, this is done by the Saktihas immediately after initiation Their chief deities in Faizabâd are Mahâbîr, Pârvatî, Mahadeva, Sitala, and Phûlmatî The Saktihas worship Kâl, and two tribal godlings, Karai and Gorai There the Saktihas and Tanrahas eat goats, sheep, and pork, which the Bhaktihas, Hardihas, and Kanauiyas refuse Their occupation throughout the Province is gardening, cultivation, and, in particular, the growing of the more valuable crops, such as opium, tobacco, sugarcane, vegetables, etc They are a most industrious, hardworking, quiet people, and about the most thriving class of agriculturists in the Province.

Distribution of Males according to the Census of 1891.

Districts.	Bhadraur.	Bhagta.	Hardiya.	Kaohin.	Kaohwaha.	Kanaujya.	Sakana.	Sakta.	Thakurja.	Others.	Total.
Dehra Dón	500	91	52	700
Saharanpur	1	..	10	20	40
Muzaffarnagar	3	6	9
Meerut	13	13
Balandshahr	614	614
Aligarh	35	1,326	1,361
Agri	5	5
Bareilly	784	..	10,823	1,412	1,234	..	54,034	2,838	71,725
Bijnor	30	30
Budann	6,839	5,813	776	..	74,163	573	88,491
Moradabad	1,739	1,224	8	11	894	9,974	13,850
Shahjahanpur	1,429	..	4,347	..	7,672	251	13,191	1,160	28,350

Distribution of Marões according to the Census of 1891—conold.

DISTRICTS.	Bhadanuriga	Bhagta	Hardyga	Raohli	Kaohlwaba	Kanawiyu	Saksona	Sakta	Thakuriya	Others.	TOTAL.
Pilibhit	1,870	..	3,066	2,191	3,396	8	11,270	4,343	26,134
Cawnpur	9	215	26	250
Fatehpur	4,223	4	..	11,255	2,150	17,702
Banda	..	9	609	..	22	901	..	49	33	455	2,143
Hamirpur	1	97	98
Alahabad	..	959	72	10,028	..	1,428	..	743	13,236
Jilau	14	14
Jaunpur	82	82
Gorakhpur	..	103	260	145	142	652
Basti	..	4,650	24,478	1,900	1,860	32,948
Tarai	511	6	2,133	40	2,740
Lucknow	687	169	66	4,400	10,044	981	16,386
Unao	..	1	60	3,813	356	274	4,534

Muriya, Muriyari — An endogamous sub-caste of Mallah. Dr Buchanan¹ calls them Muriyari Malas, and says they came from the upper banks of the Ganges. Their only tradition is that their progenitor was a certain Kukdās, who came from the South country. Their social position is much the same as that of Kurmis and Koeris, and Brahmans will take water and certain kinds of sweetmeats from their hands. Those in Bhagalpur, who have taken to cultivation call themselves Maghaya or men of Magadha, and profess to look down on the boating and fishing members of the caste, whom they represent as having come from the North-West Provinces.²

Musahar.—A Dravidian jungle tribe found in the Eastern districts of the Province.³ Mr Nesfield, in his elaborate monograph on the tribe contained in Volume LXXXVI of the Calcutta Review, prefers to call them Mushera, and remarks that the ordinary derivation of the word, as meaning "rat-catcher," is probably incorrect, as "rat-catching" or "rat eating" is by no means the peculiar, or even a permanent, characteristic of the tribe, and the name in Upper India at least is pronounced by the natives of the country as Mushera and not as Musahar ("rat-taker") or Musalia ("rat-killer"). "In an old folk tale, which has recently come to my knowledge, the name is made to signify 'flesh-seeker' or 'hunter' (being derived from māsa, 'flesh,' and hara, 'seeker'), and a legend is told as to the event which led to the tribe being driven to maintain itself by hunting wild animals. Probably, however, both derivations are fanciful Hindi versions of a name which is not of Hindi origin."⁴ Mr Nesfield's account of the Musahars, however interesting and complete, must be accepted so far with caution, as he seems to have included among them the aggregate of the Dravidian tribes who inhabit the Vindhya-Kaumûr plateau and the valley of the Son with the hill country to the South of that river. Mr Risley⁵ rightly prefers to call them Musahar. The Mirzapur tribe have the following legend to explain their origin. When

¹ Eastern India, I, 177.

² Risley Tribes and Castes II, 107 sq.

³ These or some of the kindred Dravidian races of the Vindhya range, are probably those referred to in the Asiatic Researches (Jarrett's Translation II, 19) as people in the vicinity of Chunar "who go naked living in the wilds, and subsist by their bows and arrows and the game they kill."

⁴ Calcutta Review LXXXVI, 2.

⁵ Tribes and Castes II, 113.

Paramesar created the first man of each caste, he gave each a horse to ride on, and a tool to work with. The others took each his tool and mounted his horse, but the Musahar began to dig a pair of holes in the belly of his horse in which he might fix his feet as he rode. Paramesar saw his folly and ordered that his descendants should live on rats, which they should dig out of the earth. When Paramesar had finished eating, the Musahar began to lick his leaf platter (patari). Seeing this, Paramesar said "The low people. They shall always lick the platter," and so they have been degraded ever since. In connection with this Mr. Nesfield notes that the horse is a tabooed animal to the genuine Musahar, as the ass is to the Dom, the dog to the Bawariya, the sheep to the Kharriyas of Manbhâm, and the pig to the Minsalman.¹

2 Mr. Nesfield quotes several interesting legends to explain the origin of the tribe. They are called Traditions of origin.

Banmanush or 'man of the forest,' Deosaiya, from their great ancestor Deosi, Banrâj or "king of the forest," Mashkân or "eater of meat." Sometimes a Musahar will say that his is a sub-division of the Ahir tribe, but, in point of fact, they are the hereditary enemies of Ahirs, as all their legends testify, and many are the petty raids they have made against them for the possession of cattle and forest.² One legend traces their origin to the Chero tribe. 'At the foot of the Pipri wood lived a Chero warrior and king named Makara Durga Râi. He levied tributes from the peasantry on the Ganges plain near Chunâr. At a distance of twenty or thirty miles on the North bank of the river lived, in the fort of Gaura, an Ahir, named Lorik,³ who possessed large herds of cattle. Between the two princes there had been a long-standing friendship. The bond of union was a man named Sânwâr, who, with his twin brother Subchan, had been deserted by his mother immediately after their birth. Sânwâr was reared by Lorik's mother as her own child, and Subchan, the other orphan, was similarly adopted by Birmi, the wife of Makara, the Chero king. But the friendship was broken when Lorik in search of adventures left Gaura and went on a distant expedition to Hardi, a city much further East,

¹ Loc. cit., 26

² Nesfield loc. cit., 8

³ For the regular Loc k l read see under Ahir with his mistress whose husband was still alive¹ Meanwhile, Sauwar remained in charge of the cattle at a pasturage called Boha.

3 "When Lorik had been absent for twelve years, the mother of the woman who had eloped with him presented herself before Makara, and, throwing a basketful of gold before his feet, implored him to avenge the insult. She showed him how easy it would be to make a sudden descent on Boha and catch Sanwar unawares, and how he could then cut off the head of Sanwar as a substitute for that of Lorik, and capture the deserted wife of Lorik in revenge for the capture of her own daughter. The Chero king hesitated to incur the resentment of Lorik, but yielding to the solicitations of his wife Birmi, and after sacrificing five boys to his guardian goddess, he set out against Sanwar, taking with him Deosi, the bravest and most warlike of his seven sons. But Sauwar, as it happened, had left Boha for Gaura immediately before Makara arrived there with his forces. So the watchmen and keepers of the cows were left defenceless, and were without a leader when Makara commenced his attack. These were soon defeated, and the cows were about to be seized and driven to Pipri as booty, when the bulls turned round and, making a joint attack against the enemy, drove him back to his own side of the river.

4 "After sacrificing seven more boys, and thus making sure of the help of his goddess, Makara made a second attack on Boha, and, after killing Sanwar in single combat, carried off his head as a trophy. The cattle and Gaura, the stronghold of Lorik, fell into the hands of Makara. On learning this news, Lorik determined to revenge himself on the Chero king, and attacked Pipri, which he was unable to capture until one of his men entered the fort in disguise and drugged the liquor of the Cheros at the Holi festival, on which Lorik entered the place and massacred Makara and all his subjects. At the time of this disaster, Deosi, son of Makara, happened to be absent, and being taunted by his elder brother, Shyamjit, with deserting his father in his extremity, he was expelled by his family and driven to become a flesh secker or hunter in the jungle, and was known as Musahar. Hence his descendants are called Deosia and, to the end of his life, he continued to attack the Ahirs—hence the traditional enmity between the castes and the proverb Jab tak jivē Deosya, Ahir na chajē gāē 'As long as a Deosya is alive, the Ahir will get no good out of his cows'

¹ Hardi also appears in the Bengal legend and the woman is called Chaniyin—Cunningham Archæological Reports XVI 23

5 "Then he invented the digging instrument (gahdāla, gadhāla), characteristic of the tribe, and with this he one day slew Lorik, but was himself killed by Shyāmjit, son of Sanwar. Near the ruins of Pipri, at the confluence of two rivers, and in the very middle of the stream, there is an image carved out of a natural monolith of the goddess Behria, to whom Makara sacrificed—first five and afterwards seven boys,—and who was once the guardian goddess of Pipri. In her right hand she holds a dagger, sword, and in her left the half of a human skull for holding charcoal. All this is carved out of stone: a long red tongue projects from her mouth, smeared with the blood of human victims. According to the Musahar legend, she was originally the guardian goddess of Sānwar, the elder brother of Lorik, but when Makara, the Chero, had won her over to his own side by the sacrifice of so many boys, and when Sanwar had been slain, she left Ganra, the house and stronghold of the Ahirs, and took up her residence in Pipri under the patronage of the Cheros"¹

6 The legend further relates "that when Pipri, in its turn, was captured by Lorik and ploughed up with asses, she fled out of the fort to escape the threatened indignity, and posted herself in mid-stream in the confluence of the two rivers, where she still remains, nursing her wounded pride. The natives round Pipri now call her by the name of Nikundi, and she is doubtless one of the numerous forms of the death goddess Kāh. Pipri is now uninhabited, and has been so ever since it was ploughed up with asses by Lorik, the Ahir. No Ahir, or other Hindu, will live in it. But to Musahars it is sacred, as Gaya to a Buddhist, or Mount Athos to a Greek. Every Musahar (unless long separation by time and place has made him forget the place in which his ancestors were born, and from which they were banished) would see Pipri if he could before he dies, and would like to have his corpse thrown into the river by which the fort is surrounded. Meetings of the tribe are stealthily held here at midnight, and the imagination is left to guess at the orgies celebrated at such gatherings. Musahars attempt even to live there. But the Ahirs of the neighbourhood combine together to expel them, and thus the old traditions are kept alive"²

¹ Nesfield loc. cit. 1^o 57

² Nesfield loc. cit. 7^o 7

7 By another legend, 'Musahars are a rejected offshoot from Chhatris, ns, ly the previous one, they are a rejected offshoot from Ahirs. Between Chhandels¹ (as the story runs, and so far the story is correct) there was devilly and unceasing warfare. At last all the Chhandels were slain except a single woman, who escaped and fled into the forest. Her son became the founder of the tribe called after him Banmanuch or Musahar. But, as he could not prove his origin from the Chandel Chhatri, neither he nor his descendants have been admitted into the Chhatri fraternity''²

8 Another legend again is told by the Brâhmins. "Arjuna, one of the five heroes of the Mahâbhârata had retired temporarily into the forest to meditate on the 108 names of Siva. In order to test the steadfastness of his devotion and tempt him to break the current of his thoughts, the god caused a wild boar to run in front of him. But Arjuna, notwithstanding his passion for hunting wild game, was proof against the temptation, and completed his devotions before he got up to seize his bow and arrow. The boar on being chased by Arjuna, led him on through the bushes till he reached a hermit's hut, where Siva and his wife Pârvatî had already seated themselves in bodily form, in the disguise of a Savar and Savari, he holding a gaddia (the Musahar implement) and she supporting a basket on her head. Arjuna and the Savar both commenced pursuing the boar, and when the animal had been hunted down and killed, a contention arose as to who had the right claim to it. It was agreed that the matter should be decided next day by a wrestling match.³ Arjuna wrestled with the disguised god all the day till sundown, when he pleaded that he must go and repeat his evening devotions to which his antagonist consented. Through the intensity of these devotions it dawned on him that he had been wrestling not with a Savar but with the divine being himself disguised as a Savar, on which he was now meditating. Returning to the hermit's hut where the disguised Siva still was, he threw himself at the feet of his divine antagonist, received a blessing, and returned to his four brethren. Now, in the hermit tage where these events took place, there was a maiden of unknown parentage, who used to wait on the hermit and prepare his food, and whom the hermit loved and cherished as a daughter. The maiden had just completed her period, and had gone, as the custom is, to bathe and purify herself in the waters of the adjoining river. On her return to the hermitage she found Siva seated there in the disguise of a Savar, with Pîrvatî by his side in the disguise of a Savarî. The eye of the god fell on her. From the glance of that eye she became pregnant, and gave birth in due course to twins, one a male and the other a female, who bore an exact resemblance to the Savar and Savarî whom she had seen in the hermitage. The hermit, judging from the uncouth features and dark complexion of the babes that she had been guilty of unchastity with some wild man of the woods, sent her out of his hermitage. From the two children whom she had borne, one a male and the other a female, sprang the Musahar tribe, the men of which are still noted for using the gahdâla and the women for carrying baskets."¹

¹ Whom Mr. Nesfield would identify with the Chero.
Nesfield loc cit 11.

² These wrestling matches with divine beings are common in folklore; cf. Jacob—See Conway De monology I 239 II 131.

9 These legends are interesting as illustrating the connection between the Musahar, Chero, and Savar or Seon tribes. It is also curious to mark the survival of the custom of human sacrifice to the aboriginal gods and the traditional descent of the caste from a female ancestress, with which Mr Nesfield compares the descent of the Kanjar tribe from Nitharya, the husbandless mother of their deified hero Mana, and of the Aryas themselves from Aditi, the great mother of gods and men.² We may also note the tolerance of intercourse between brother and sister which marks a very early social stage.³

10 Mr Nesfield divides the tribe into three sub-tribes, which do not intermarry or eat with each other. These are the Jangali or Pahârî, "men of the forests and mountains," who have maintained the largest share of their primitive speech and customs and who stand entirely aloof from their descendants in the open plain, whom they regard as degenerate, the Delhî or Delhî, who have become partially Hinduised and live within reach of settled and semi-civilized communities, the Dolkârha, who have a peculiar occupation, for which they are disowned and condemned by their brethren, viz, that of carrying palanquins (dols) for hire, whence they obtain their name. But at present the tribe is clearly in a state of flux, and the more Hinduised branch of the tribe in Mirzapur have now the following occupational exogamous septs—the Khadiha, who work at carrying manure (khad), the Bhenriha, who say they take their name from living together in the jungles like sheep (bhenr) in their pen, the Kharwâra, who say they are so called because they collect grass (khar) and make platters (dahna, palari) of leaves, the Kuchibandhua, who make the brush (kuncha, Sanskrit kuncha) used by weavers in cleaning thread, and the Rakhiha, who are said to derive their name because they cower in the ashes (râkâ) during cold weather. Again, among the Musahars who live near towns, we find in Mirzapur two endogamous sub-divisions. Dhuriya, "men of the dust," and Jaiswâr, a name common to many low castes, and said to be a local term derived from their supposed connection with the town of Jais in the Râe Bareilly District of Oudh.

¹ Nesfield loc. cit. 15, 27.

² Lubbock Origin of Civilization 116, 27.

³ See instances collected in Westermarck's, History of Human Marriage 200 sqq.

11 As regards the division of the tribe into palanquin-bearers and men of the jungle, Mr. Nesfield quotes a legend that a Musahar, named Anseri, who lived on the Kantil estates in Mirzapur, used to work as a field watchman, but he and his sons, in the absence of the regular bearers (Kahâr), were once forced to carry a litter in a marriage procession, and were expelled by his brethren. Ansârî, the reputed founder of this sub-caste, is now beginning to supersede Deosiya, the eponymous leader, and this branch is beginning to take to fishing. Mr. Nesfield assumes that Ansârî means the divider (ansa meaning "half"), and hence he was the man who broke up the tribe into two halves—the Dolkârha, on one side, and the Bindrabani or Banmanush, on the other.¹ In Bengal, the organization of sub-castes and sections is much more elaborate, but there appear to be only two real sub-castes which are of local origin—the Tirhutya and Maghalya, who take their name from Tirhût and Magadha. According to Mr. Nesfield, the Dolkârha eat the flesh or carrion of horses and rear fowl, whereas the Bindrabanis, whether of the hills or plains, do not touch either. The complete Census returns show 137 sub-divisions. Many are borrowed from Rājput and other tribes, such as Ahir, Bachgoti, Bāghel, Bais, Chandel, Chauhān, Dabgar, Donwār, Dor, Gaharwār, Gusām, Gwāl, Gwālbans, Kewariya, Kharbind, Kharwār, Khatri, Lodhi, Palwāi, Raghubansi, Rāwat. With these are other local groups, such as Bijyapuriya, Bindrabāsi, Bishnpuriya, Ghāzipurīya, Jaiswār, Kanaujiya, Parabiya, Sarwariya. Those of most local importance are the Bankhadwā, Chanhān, Jangali, Jaiswar, and Mugbra of Jannpur, and the Baghochhuya of Gorakhpur.

12 In Mirzapur, though the internal organization of the tribe seems to be very unsettled, it appears that Law of exogamy the Khadiha, Kharwāra, and KuchBandhua are exogamous and intermarry on equal terms. Similarly, the Bhenriha and Rakbiha intermarry. This rule of exogamy is reinforced by the prohibition against marrying the daughter of the maternal uncle, sister, or father's sister.

Mr. Nesfield¹ states the rule of exogamy as follows — "On the mother's side, a girl cannot be given in marriage to the son of her mother's sister, or of her mother's brother. On the father's side, she cannot be given to the son of her father's sister or of her father's brother, or to the son or grandson of any of her father's aunts or uncles. Thus, on the mother's side the prohibition goes back to only one generation, and on the father's to two." On the other hand, among the more Hinduised endogamous sub-castes, the Dhariya and Jaiswar in Mirzapur, the rule appears to be that the descendants of the maternal grandfather (nāna) and that of the father's sister's husband (phūpha) are barred. At the same time they say that they intermarry with agnates or cognates after five or six generations, or when all remembrance of relationship has been lost. They have a tribal council (panchayat), presided over by a hereditary president (chaudhāri). The offences enquired into are charges of adultery and fornication. Inter tribal infidelity is punished by both parties being fined. The fine is heavy—liquor, pork, rice, and pulse to the value of Rs 30, eight annas worth of tobacco, and one rupee's worth of hemp (ganja). Connection with a man or woman outside the tribe involves excommunication, and such persons are called "those outside the tribal mat" (lāl bāhar).

¹ Loc. cit. 232.

13 Among some of the Mirzapur Musahars, the rule appears to be that, if husband or wife indulge in habitual adultery, either can divorce the other with permission of the council. According to Mr. Nesfield, "Divorce, except for the one offence of infidelity, is not practised or tolerated. Such an offence very rarely occurs, and the habitual chastity of one partner ensures that of the other. If, however, a wife is accused of unchastity by her husband, and has been declared guilty by the assembly, her position is one of great difficulty. No married man can take her in addition to his own wife, for bigamy is disallowed. No unmarried man, or widower, can take her of his own free will, without incurring the penalty of excommunication. A man cohabiting with such a woman could, of course, retire with her and live in a state of isolation in the corner of some jungle, as some couples do from choice, but if he sought to ally himself to one or two other households for mutual aid and protection, he would for some time be rejected altogether, and could only obtain admission at last by incurring what is to him the heavy penalty of banqueting the other households for several days in succession. The separation of man and wife is so much disliked and discouraged by tribal opinion that a wife cannot be divorced, except on the most direct proof of guilt, or by a successful appeal to some ordeal, if the accuser is rash enough to expose himself to such an uncertain test. Trivolous charges, or improbable suspicions, if the husband is so imprudent as to bring them before an assembly, are dismissed with contempt, and the accuser is hooted for his pains. Supposing, however, that unchastity is proved, and a sentence of divorce is pronounced by the assembly, the ceremony by which divorce is effected is as follows. An earthen pot is placed between the husband and wife, and an assembly is called to witness it. After it has been lying there for some time, the man gets up and breaks it with the tribal tool, indicating thereby that the union between them is broken beyond repair. This ceremony is called khapparkuchi or breaking the pot."¹ There appears to be a difference of practice as regards the levirate. Among some of the Mirzapur Musahars the younger brother of the deceased husband can claim the widow. If he abandons his claim and she marries an outsider, the late husband's brother has the right to the custody of the male children while the female children go with the mother. According to Mr. Nesfield, however, the widow, while she is still young enough to re-marry, has no claim upon the younger brother of the deceased husband, nor has he upon her. If she comes to terms with some widower who desires to re-marry, the union is sealed by them by simply eating and drinking together in the presence of witnesses who are invited to share in the repast.¹

¹ Loc cit., 236-237

11 Among some of the Mirzapur Musahars, the marriage is arranged by the brother-in-law of the Customs of marriage boy. The father of the bride then comes to the bridegroom's house with three or four relatives with a rupee and a quarter and a dish to perform the betrothal (barrelhi karni), a square (chawk) is made in front of the hut, and five platters (danda) are filled with liquor and placed in the square. The two fathers sit in the square opposite each other. The fathers change platters five times and drink the contents. The clansmen are then treated to liquor, and get a feast of pork and rice. Some of the more Hindused Musahars pay a Pandit four annas for fixing a lucky day before the wedding. Five days before the wedding day, they have the ceremony of the lucky earth (mal mangara).² On the same day the marriage shed (mauro) is put up. It consists of a bamboo at each of the four corners, and in the middle a bamboo near which is placed a representation of some parrots (suga) sitting on a branch. Near this is fixed, on a platform made of the lucky earth, the sacred jar (kalsa), which is decorated with mango leaves, and over it is placed a saucerful of pulse (urad) and a lighted lamp. The bride is bathed in a mixture of curds and water in which the bridegroom has been first bathed. At the bride's door, her father worships the feet of the bridegroom (pair pūja). Some curds and treacle are sent from the bride's house for the bridegroom, but he only touches it with his tongue. The bridegroom at the actual service marks the ploughshare fixed in the middle of the marriage shed with red lead, and then applies it to the parting of the bride's hair. They, then, with their garments tied, walk five times round the ploughshare, while the bride's brother pours a little parched rice into a winnowing fan which the bridegroom holds

¹ Loc. cit., 237

² For this ceremony see DI mysz, para 11

15 Next morning his father shakes the pole of the marriage shed, and the bride's father has to give him a present (mdaro kisi) One special portion of the ceremony is that the bride's mother takes the par away into a field at some distance, and warns the husband to treat his wife for the future with consideration During this exhortation, the bride is supposed to weep violently This and the shaking of the pole of the pavilion are probably survivals of marriage by capture. When the bride comes home, her entrance is blocked by her husband's sister, and then she has to cook for all the relatives Next day, as is usual with these tribes, the marriage jar (lalsa) and festoons (bandanwari) are thrown into a neighbouring stream The jar is taken out, refilled with water, and brought home With this water the bride makes some mud plaster and constructs a little shrine, at which she offers a small sacrifice to the evil spirits which live in the old trees about the village. The ordinary ceremony thus described is called charhanwa Besides this are the dola, which is done by poor people where there is no ceremony at the bride's house and the girl is merely brought home and the clansmen fed, and gurdwal, when two people exchange sisters

16 The ceremony which Mr Nesfield¹ describes is a rude form of the dola marriage above described "The girl sets out to the house of the affianced bridegroom, accompanied by her parents, or by any other male or female relatives who may be invited to go with her Previous to their arrival at the bridegroom's hut, a fowl's egg is placed at the entrance The youth to whom she is to be married then comes out to receive her The girl is presented to him by her mother Taking her by the hand, and holding her hand firmly in his own, he leads her up to the mouth of the hut, and breaks the egg with his foot On his completing this act (which he can only perform when holding her hand, so that it may be considered a joint action), the company present raise a simultaneous shout of lu! which means 'hurrah!' By holding her hand firmly in his own, he signifies that he has accepted her The Hindu ceremony of pau gratana, usually regarded as a purely Aryan rite, may perhaps after all be of non-Aryan origin By breaking the fowl's egg with his foot while he is in the act of holding her hand, he signifies that he has renounced all desire for any other woman and she, by allowing him to hold her hand while he performs this act, signifies to him and to the company that she, on her part, has renounced all desire for any other man, for the fowl, it will be remembered, is an animal which Musahars do not rear, and which they avoid almost as scrupulously as the horse. The girl is then made to enter the hut, the youth directing her to the door. On entering the hut she takes hold of the feet of the youth's mother and touches them with her forehead, signifying by this that she intends to do honour to her son as his wedded wife. The mother-in-law then gives her blessing in the following words (some of which are of Hindu and others of the Musahar language) Bhū maghū maharū hīo sokāgin ramāl kanto rasa hīo 'Remaining in the blissful state of marriage, do thou give delight to thy husband.' The youth then leaves the hut, the bride remaining with her newly made mother-in-law. This closes the first part of the ceremony.

17 "The next part begins with the cooking of a kind of rice (which, in the Musahar language, is called kutki)¹ into a paste or gruel thin enough to be drunk. This decoction is poured into cups made of the leaves of the Alakul tree, one cup being provided for each adult present, including the bride and bridegroom. Here it should be understood that rice is the sacred grain among several of the Kol tribes, a sanctity which it shares with barley in Hindu or Brahmanical marriages.² When the rice paste or gruel is ready, and each Alakul cup has been filled, the company are made to sit round in a ring, and the bride is brought out of the hut and made to take her seat in the middle with the bridegroom. The bridegroom then kisses her on the mouth in token that he is to be her husband and she in turn kisses his feet, and strokes his back up and down with her hand, in token that she is to be his and will tend him as a dutiful wife. This ceremony is called mukhra clumba

¹ Kutki is really a millet (panicum molle arc)

² No sanctity attaches to wheat in Hindu marriages; but rice and barley are indispensable in such ceremonies and little branches of mango. Wheat is nowhere, nor are any other grains but rice and barley recognised at such times. Barley is frequently alluded to in the Vedas as the food of the Aryas. Rice and mango are indigenous to India. The most natural inference to be drawn from this is that wheat found its way into India at a later date but was unable to deprive the older grain (rice) of its already acquired sanctity. On the sacrificial use of barley see Schrader Prehistoric Antiquities 29.

('kissing the mouth'), or munk dellna ('seeing the face'), or kar pherna ('moving the hand up and down') When the pair have given this public token that each has accepted and appropriated the other, the cups are distributed, one to each person, and every person present, including the bride and bridegroom, swallows the contents of his own cup Immediately after this, the following couplet is repeated in unison by all the company, excepting only the bride and bridegroom themselves, to whom the words are addressed Kutli ki pich handi, mahul ka dauna, Bodi boda byah bhayau lena na dena 'The rice paste has been prepared in the Mahul cup, the maid and the youth are married—no giving or taking' Then there is a general shout of Ku! or 'hurrah!' which means that the ceremony is completed

18 "It seems most probable that each of the two rites described above was originally a complete marriage ceremony by itself, but they have now been so long associated in practice that neither could be safely omitted The blessing pronounced by the bridegroom's mother on the bride at the close of the first rite implies that she (the bride) is now fully married 'Do thou give delight to thy husband' Similarly the words spoken by the witnesses at the close of the second ceremony imply that there is nothing left to complete the validity of the marriage 'The rice paste has been eaten, the youth and girl are married, hurrah!' What gives the binding force in the first ceremony is the joining of hands, while the groom breaking the eggs, and the formal reception inside the bridegroom's house or hut, the detinctio in domum, as the Romans would have called it, form a parallel ceremony of their own What gives the binding force in the second ceremony is the fact of the bride and bridegroom eating together some rice paste or gruel cooked in the bridegroom's own fire and thus the Romans would have identified with a marriage rite of their own, known as confarreatio" The prominent part taken by the mother on both sides is taken by Mr Nesfield to be a survival of the matriarchy¹ At marriages, Musahars pay worship to Deosa, the male ancestor and founder of the tribe, and sometimes a piece of cloth with some sweetmeats is set aside in honour of Savari, their more remote female ancestor, or to Mother Bansapti their great goddess and pro-

¹ He quotes similar customs among the Kura of Sarguja from Dalton, Ethnology 234

pector. In the worship of Devi it is, again, the mother of the bridegroom who acts as priestess and sacrificer: and, again, it is rice which is used as the sacred grain. The first act in this worship is to take some unhusked rice, remove the husk with her own hand, grind the grain, mix it with water, knead it, and cook it into a pancake. All this and whatever follows must be done with the right hand only. The pancake so cooked is then besmeared with honey, the wild honey which Musahars are so clever in collecting from the woods, and which is, therefore, a fit offering to the deified ancestor from whom they learnt the art. Taking this pancake with her, together with some rice beer, a piece of yellow cloth, some more honey, some wild fruits and flowers, some dūb grass, and a live kid or lamb, she proceeds to the clay figure or mound intended to represent Deosi. Then, after sprinkling some river water in front of the figure or mound in order to purify the spot (for Musahars, like Hindus, are worshippers of rivers, and believe in the purifying influence of their water), she deposits all her offerings, except the kid or ram, on a plate or plates made of Mahul leaves. She then strikes pure and new fire by the sacred process of rubbing one stick on another,¹ and with this fire she cooks the offerings. Her object in thus cooking the offerings is to enable the deified Deosi to inhale the scented smoke, a vaporous invisible being like Deosi, being not fit to inhale any but vaporous substances.² She then decapitates the goat with a single blow of the axe, and places the bleeding, uncooked head as an offering of blood and life before the image. Then, touching the earth with the forehead, she repeats or sings the following four lines (every word of which, except the second, is in the Musahar language):—

Deosi bāba hit timro magnu maharin Indra hadariya potis ri.

Boglo pokpa dudhali chimla niberi hit timri boglo pokpari,

Popaki imiriya chimla chimli thammo ri,

Kemali Indra hadariya kutmu chimlo teplis kero ri :

‘Come into the world, O Father Deosi! from the palace of Indra. Eat food cooked by the mother of the bridegroom: come and eat the food.

Having eaten these offerings, bestow thy blessing on the bride and bridegroom;

¹ For this, see Korma, para. 13.

² This is exactly the idea of the Homeric sacrifices—Iliad, I, 317. “High rose to heaven the savoury steam and the curls of wreathed smoke.”—Blackie’s translation.

Then return to the palace of Indra! O ancestor! and behold again the dances of the dancing-girls'

"The singing or intonation of these words completes the ceremony. The carcase of the victim is then carried back to the hut, where it is cooked in the evening for the marriage feast, with which the day is brought to a close. The bride and bridegroom are the most honoured guests in this banquet, and the festivities of the day generally close with some singing and music after Musahar fashion. Next morning the newly-wedded pair quit the paternal hut or cave and go out into the forest to seek their fortunes together and found an independent home."

20 Unlike many of the kindred tribes, the Musahars have protective ceremonies during pregnancy. When the pregnancy is announced, a sacrifice of pork and liquor is offered to Mahābali, a sort of ill-defined tribal god, who may perhaps be identical with Deosi. A cock and spirits are offered to Pahlwan, "the wrestler," who is considered an evil spirit (bhūt), some betel and sweetmeats to the goddess Phūlmātī, and a young ram to the Baghaut, or shrine of a person killed by a tiger. The customs, as in the case of marriage, differ in the two divisions of the tribe. Among the Musahars of the plains the mother, during delivery, sits on two bricks or stones, and it is immaterial what direction she faces. The cord is cut by the Chamānn midwife and buried on the spot where the child was born, a fire being lighted over it. They have the sixth and twelfth day ceremonies (chāthi, barahi) performed in the usual way. Among the more primitive branch of the tribe, as described by Mr. Nesfield,¹ "As soon as labour commences, a fire is lighted near the woman and kept burning till the labour is over. Into this fire, rice, grain, and rice straw are immediately thrown, and as soon as the child is born, its body is gently rubbed over with the ashes by the woman who acts as midwife—the child's paternal aunt. The cord, as soon as it is cut, is put with the after birth into another fire kept burning at the door of the hut or cave—a curious analogy to which is furnished in certain Irish folk sayings current at the present day, in one of which it is said that 'an after birth must be burned to preserve the child from the faeries,' the faeries being, in this instance, evil-hearted goblins whose propensities are the same as those of the Indian bhūts. The hair of a bear and a slip of wood torn from an daan or deodār tree are kept inside the hut, so long as the woman and child remain there. For one whole day and night at least a peacock's feather is dropped occasionally into the fire, which is still kept burning at the mouth of the hut. From the second to the tenth day, if the child is a male, or to the fifteenth, if it is a female, some powder of the burnt chir-aunji nut is rubbed occasionally on its body. The longer period being deemed necessary for the female on account of its power of resistance to malignant spirits being considered less. When all these ceremonies are completed, the mother and child have a final purifying bath in water mixed with the ashes of rice straw."

Birth ceremonies

¹ Nesfield loc. cit. 229

² Loc. cit., 246

21. According to Mr. Nesfield,¹ the plain Musahars place much reliance on the protective power of peacock feathers. They do not keep a bear's bone in the hut, and sometimes wash the bodies of the mother and child with liquor. It may be noted that the parturition impurity extends to all the women of the house, for the men, during eleven days after the birth, cook for themselves outside the house, and keep apart from the women. The husband does not cohabit with his wife for three months after her confinement. Mr. Nesfield² describes the custom at naming a child. "On the day fixed for the naming, a sacrifice is offered to Barké Bābā, the 'grandfather,' etc. Deosi, the founder of the tribe. Two names are given—one being the name of some Devi, or rather a name selected from among the numerous titles by which the Devi or ingenious goddess is known, such as Bangari, Nikundi, Bahiya, Britiya, Mohani, Rānkani, etc. The other name is taken from the tree near or under which the child was born, or from some hill near which or on which the family res de. Thus if a male child is born under a Jigan tree, it is called Jigan. Possibly in this custom we may see the germ of totemism on the male side, which, though undeveloped among Musahars, so far as I can discover, is found among certain other Kol tribes in Chutia Nāgpur. The name given to a daughter is fixed by the mother according to her own fancy. There is no ceremony of any kind attending the giving of the name, and no rule regulating the selection. The following are among the names commonly given to females Birmi, Mughni, Ghanni, Kumāni, Jajya, but I am unable to trace their meaning." The plain Musahars have the usual custom of boring children's ears, which is done at the age of five or six by a Sunnâr. This is called among them "the distribution of betel" (śāśa bakkeri), and is accompanied by a tribal feast of pork, rice, and liquor, and songs to the music of their drum (kuruko). After this the child must conform to caste regulations in the matter of food.

22 The plain division of the tribe burn their dead in the usual way on the edge of a stream, into which the ashes are thrown. When they return home they chew a leaf of the bitter nim, as a mark of mourning, and the chief mourner throws a piece of lighted charcoal behind him to bar the ghost. Like the kindred tribes, they fix up a bunch of reed grass (gurai) near the water's edge, which the chief mourner waters every morning as an abiding place for the spirit. On the tenth day, the clansmen shave their heads, and the brother-in-law (bahnai) of the dead man, who officiates as priest, offers a lump of flour to the dead man's spirit. When he comes home, he takes an earthen-potful of food and lays it out in the jungle for the use of the dead. Then a hog is sacrificed, and, being cooked with rice, is eaten by the clansmen. The death impurity lasts ten days. According to Mr Nesfield,¹ the tribe in Singrauli, south of the Son,² simply leave the corpse in the place where the man or woman died. If he or she died in the jungle, or in the open air, they cover the body with leaves and bushes and go away. If he died inside the cave or hut, no other covering is considered necessary. The place is thenceforth abandoned by the survivors, who take no relic of the dead with them when they migrate to another part of their hill or jungle. There is safety, as they believe, in this precaution. For if they took with them a limb or bone from the dead man's body, the ghost would probably follow, and they cannot be sure that its company would be more to their benefit than to their injury. Their safest course is, then, to leave the corpse intact on the spot where the departed breathed his last, trusting that the ghost will not forsake the vicinity of the body in which it lately reposed tumulum circumcolat umbra. Musahars of the Son valley have a ceremony almost as rude. They simply throw the corpse into the river or its nearest tributary. The body floats in the water and is carried out of sight, until at last, perhaps, it may reach the Ganges which river is regarded by many of the Kol tribes with a respect equal to that paid to the Son. The custom of river burial is exemplified in what Dr Oldham has recorded of a Savari woman whom he accidentally met with in the Ghazipur District. Her husband had died on the march and she had carried his bones in a sack for over a hundred miles in order to throw them into the Ganges.¹ Water burial must be a very ancient custom in the Musahar tribe, for this, according to the legend, was the way in which the corpse of Deesi himself, the reputed founder of the tribe, was disposed of.

¹ Loc. cit. 237.

² There are apparently no people in Singrauli who called themselves Musahars and Mr Nesfield is probably referring to tribes like the Korwas and Paraliyas who practise these customs but are very unwilling to give any information on the subject.

23 "Other Musahars have retained the water ceremony, but have made some approach towards cremation also. They carry the body to the river bank, and, having washed it in river water, tie a cloth made of cotton or of deodār bark fibre round the loins. The corpse is then laid on the ground, with its face upwards, and the head towards the north, the region of Indra, to which it is hoped the soul will take its flight. The spot on which the head and feet were laid is marked off for the purpose of paying future obsequies. The son of the deceased or, if there is no son, his brother or brother's son or other male relative next of kin, takes a handful of straw, (rice straw, if possible), and placing it on the face of the dead body, sets fire to it. The face is merely singed but it has had the contact of fire, the great purifying element, so much used in all parts of the world in lustral ceremonies. The chief mourner then takes the body by the feet, and, using all his strength, throws it into the river. In this simple rite we see the germ of the Hindu ceremony of cremation followed by that of immersion—a rite in which the Vedic custom of cremation and the indigenous custom of water burial appear to have met each other from opposite directions, thus giving rise to the composite ceremony which Hindus now practise. Among Musahars, as among Hindus, the contact of fire is interdicted to persons who have died of small-pox, for small pox is believed to be of the same substance with Sitala, the goddess who presides over the dreaded malady, and it is thought that by burning such a corpse, they will be burning or otherwise offending the goddess herself. The same interdict applies to persons who have died of cholera and for similar reasons. Other Musahars practise a rite in which earth sepulture is the leading characteristic, but qualified by some show of water burial and cremation, and this composite rite appears to be of frequent practice among Dehātī or village Musahars wherever they may be found. The body, as above mentioned, is washed in river water, and the limbs are bound round with a cloth of cotton or deodār fibre, and fire fed with rice straw is put on the face. The corpse, however, instead of being thrown into the water, as in the preceding rite, is deposited by the chief mourner in a tomb about two yards long and one broad, the earth having been excavated for this purpose with the tribal tool, the gahdāla. The face, as above, is placed towards the North. If the deceased was a man, the body is placed on the right side of the tomb, if a woman, on the left.

21. The explanation given of this is that man and woman were originally a single body, just as now man and wife are one flesh, and that the right or stronger half belonged to the male and the left or inferior to the female. It was further explained that when the two halves split asunder, each half became a whole and perfect body, one a complete man and the other a complete woman, and that the primeval pair thus formed were the first ancestors of mankind.¹ Some of the village Musahars leave the corpse in the ground for six months after sepulture, committing it to the care of their guardian goddess, Bansapti: at the close of the six months the remains are taken out of the earth and burnt, and the ashes are thrown into the river. The cremation ceremony that is now performed is called lakṣārī. Some of the lowest caste of Hindus, those that are halting between the custom of earth sepulture, handed down from their ancestors, and the rite of cremation as taught and practised by Brahmins, adopt a similar compromise, burying the corpse in the earth for the first six months, and then disinterring and burning what remains of it. Those tribes, or families, who practise this ambiguous rite, commit the body during the six months of sepulture to the care of the earth goddess, Bhuiyān (so commonly worshipped by the lower castes), just as Musahars commit it to the forest goddess, Bansapti, Bansati, Bānsuri, or Bandevi.²

¹ These aboriginal burial grounds are scattered over all the hill country of M. rasapur. From some excavations made it appears as if the body was partially cremated and then buried. These graves have the sides and tops covered with flag stones. On this see Lubbock Prehistoric Times 103. Mr. Newfield compares this with the Eve legend—Loc. cit. 239.

² Newfield loc. cit. 240.

25 The method in which the dead are propitiated varies according to the manner the corpse is disposed of. Some avoid the ghost by leaving the place and conveying no relic away with them. Those who dispose of the dead by simply throwing them into a river, make an offering of food and water every day for some nine days in succession at the foot of a deodār tree, the nearest one they can find to the spot from which the body was thrown. The soul of the dead is believed to reside in this tree as long as the obsequies are continued and from this tree the ghost descends to receive the offerings.¹ The offerings are usually made at midday, and are presented by the chief mourner, that is, by the man who threw the corpse into the river. They consist generally of cooked rice mixed with honey, the flesh and eggs of the tortoise, the flesh of the lizard (goh), the porcupine (sah) the boar, the crab (lekra)—all kinds of flesh in fact which the man or woman while living considered a luxury. Different offerings are presented on different days, not all at once. Those who before throwing the corpse into the river lay it decently out, place the head towards the North, and put fire on the face, perform the same kind of obsequies as the preceding, but with more system and formality. Instead of presenting the offerings at the foot of a deodār tree, they present them at the spot where the body was laid out before it was thrown into the river. For the first four days the offerings are laid at the South end of the spot—that at which the feet of the deceased were laid—and the offerings during those days consist of rice beer, rice pancakes mixed with honey, the flesh and eggs of the tortoise. At the time of presenting the offerings, the mourner repeats the following words (all in the Musahar language) —

Timro h' tmu, Indra, hadaria potis !

Boglo magno pokha bahru bal

"Come, O dead one, from the palace of Indra !

Come and eat the food of the world

Take it and return to thy palace ! "

26 The offerings remain for some time at the spot where they were laid after which the mourner removes them to his own cave or resting place (in which he is forced to live apart during the continuance of these rites, cooks the flesh and rice, throws one mouthful on the fire for the dead, addressing him again in the same words, and then takes his own meal of what remains. From the fifth to the eighth day the same process is repeated; but the offerings during these days are placed on the West side of the spot, the diet remaining the same as during the four days preceding. On the ninth day, the offerings are placed on the North side, that is, the part where the head of the deceased was laid, and the flesh diet is now changed from tortoise to crab. This is continued till the twelfth day. On the thirteenth day, the offerings are placed on the East side and the flesh diet is changed from crab to porcupine. This is continued for one day more. On the fifteenth, the mourner goes no more to the spot, but, after being shaved, re-visits his family, who then, with the Patiri or tribal priest, solemnize a feast of the dead, consisting chiefly of rice beer and hog's flesh.¹ Then follows the shaving of the head and face of the chief mourner, which is done not by the mourner himself, but by the brother of his mother or by some son of that brother, or by the husband of his mother's sister or by some son of his mother's sister. When the shaving has been completed, the shaved man and his shaver boil some strips of bark torn from an Asian or deodār tree, and, after straining off the fibre, wash their face and body in the sacred water. He is then at last fit to enter the family cave or hut.² Last comes the general tribal feast of the dead. For a woman the offerings are made for nine instead of fourteen days, as in the case of a man.

¹ On these tree spirits, see Tylor Primitive Culture II 215 and II 10

27. The explanation given is that the woman carries the child for nine months before it is born, whereas the father keeps his son with him for fourteen or fifteen years, that is, till he is old enough to marry and go out and maintain himself independently in the forest. In some parts, the period of mourning is extended for a married woman from nine days to twelve, and the explanation, then, is that three more days are added in recognition of three days of weakness and suffering attending child-birth. Thus, in the case of the married woman, the final feast of the dead, which closes the days of mourning, takes place either on the tenth or the thirteenth day while that for a man takes place on the fifteenth day. Again, there is a distinction as to the amount of hair to be shorn off before the mourner can be considered pure enough to be readmitted into his family. If the deceased was a man, it is necessary that he should be relieved of his beard and whiskers as well as of the hair of his head. If the deceased was a woman, it is enough that he should part company with the hair of his head only for, as a woman has no beard or whiskers, there is no need (they think) to have such appendages shorn off on her account"¹ 28 The ordinary Musahars, in Mirzapur, do not worship any Hindu gods. They worship, with prayers and sacrifices, one Sadahn Lal, about whom it is not known exactly whether he was one of their ancestors or not. He is worshipped in Sawan with the sacrifice of a hog and the oblation of liquor. In connection with him, ancestors generally are worshipped. They also worship the village deities (lakh) with a hog, liquor, flowers, and a piece of cloth. Disease and death are attributed to evil spirits (bhūt), to whom hogs and liquor are offered under a banyan or pīpal tree in which they are believed to reside. They recognise five different kinds of ghosts. Nat and Pahlwān, who are supposed to belong to the Nat tribe, Dautya, the spirit of a Brahman or Chhatra, Ahīr of an Ahīr, and Telhya Masān of a Tel. In Barabanki, according to Mr Nesfield,² they worship one Maganpal under the title of Banrāj or "forest king." As before described, they worship the tribal ancestors, Deosi and Ansari, the latter "under the name of Dūla Deo," which is now understood to signify the "dooly god." The offerings paid to this divinity consist of the head of a ram or goat, the eggs of the lizard (goḥ), and a piece of yellow cloth. These are presented to him on a large plate made of dhāk leaves. Treacle and butter are offered to him through fire. The month in which these offerings are chiefly made is Baisakh (April), the commencement of the marriage season amongst Hindus, when litters are in much request and when the god is therefore especially propitious."³ Like all jungle tribes, they worship Baghaut (whom Mr Nesfield's informants converted into Bhāgwat Deo), the ghost of a person killed by a tiger. They also have in their villages images of Mahābir or Hanumān, the god-monkey in his phallic form. "The great active power in the universe, according to Musahar belief, is Bānsapati, Bānsatti, or Bānsuri, the goddess who (as her name implies) personifies and presides over forests. By her command the trees bear fruit, the bulbs grow in the earth, the bees make honey, the tussar worm fattens on the āsan leaf, and lizards, wolves, and jackals (useful for food to man) multiply their kind. She is the goddess of child-birth. To her the childless wife makes prayers for the grant of offspring. In her name and by her aid, the medicine man or sorcerer expels devils from the bodies of the possessed. In her name and to her honour, the village man kindles a new fire for lighting a brick kiln. Woe to the man who takes a false oath in the name of Bānsatti."¹

¹ Here Mr. Nesfield is mistaken. The Patiri or Patari is certainly the tribal priest only of the Majhars or Manjhis, who are quite distinct from Musahars. In fact, Mr. Nesfield seems in regard to the latter, to have combined information, some of doubtful accuracy, regarding the mass of more primitive aboriginal population along the valley of the Son.

² Here, again, Mr. Nesfield must be incorrect. According to Watt, Dictionary of Economic Products S. V. cedrus, the deodār, is purely a Himalayan tree. There is plenty of the Asian (terminalia glabra) in the jungles of South Mirzapur.

¹ Nesfield loc cit 214 sq.

² Loc cit 223.

³ The conversion of Dūla Deo the Gond god of marriages (Central Province Gazetteer 106 275) into Dūla Deo the god of the litter is curious if correct. For Dūla Deo see Introduction to Popular Religion and Folklore 75.

29. "Bānsapti is worshipped by Musahars in their own houses or huts. They make a platform (chauri) in the corner of the hut, about one inch in height, above the level of the floor, and nine inches in breadth and length. This little square is made of clay, and the sacrifice is smeared with river water or cowdung. This is the altar on which the offerings to her are placed—an altar without an idol; for there is no mound, idol, or other visible symbol under which Bānsatti is worshipped. On ordinary occasions, the offerings consist of flowers, fruits, grasses, roots, &c., brought fresh from the jungles: and the days on which the offerings are made are Monday and Friday. If the worshipper has any special favour to ask, he cuts the ball of his finger with some blades of the sacred lusa grass, and lets four or five drops of blood fall on the altar, a survival, as we may readily infer, from the now obsolete custom of human sacrifice."² Her special festival is in the second half of the month of Baisākh. On that day it is supposed that Bānsapti is married to Gānsām (whom Mr. Nesfield takes to be derived from Ghaṇa-syāma one of the titles of Krishna),³ whom Musahars call Dāu

¹ Nesfield, loc. cit., 264.

² Nesfield, loc. cit., 263, 29

³ This, however, is more than doubtful, and it looks much more as if Gānsām, the local god of the Kols, was introduced into the Hindu pantheon as Ghaṇa-syāma, "the thick, dark rain cloud," a title of Krishna.

Gansâm, or "uncle Gansâm," or Bansgopâl To him, in his phallic manifestation, a cone-shaped pillar of mud is erected.

30. Among the village Musahars the phallic deity Gansâm is replaced by Bhairon, whose vehicle is a dog. A little mud pillar, in the shape of a lingam, is erected in his honour, and among the plains men of the Gangetic valley he has become a sort of village guardian deity. He is probably of aboriginal origin, and has been introduced into the Hindu pantheon in the form of Bhairava, "the terrible one," who, like his Dravidian prototype, in this form, rides on a dog, and is called Swaswa, "whose horse is a dog." Some of the village Musahars, in Mirzapur, consult for their marriage ceremonies Upadhya Brâhmans, who are held in contempt by their brethren. Four festivals are observed by the tribe in addition to the special tribal festival in Baisâkh the Phagua or Holi, the Khuchan or Khucharwâr, in the end of Mâgh (January—February); the Panchemyan, generally taken as equivalent to the Nâgpanchami, or snake fest, on the 5th of the light half of Sâwan, and the Kajari or women's festival in the rains.

31. Their ideas, as regards omens, do not differ from those of the kindred tribes. Friday and the number five are lucky. To meet a fox on the road is lucky, and a jackal the reverse. They swear on Bansapti and the tiger, and on liquor poured on the ground in honour of Panhar, who is really a member of the Panchopîr or Ghâzi Miyân cycle, but who, according to Mr Nesfield,¹ has become a god of wine in the hill tracts, and is represented in the plains by Madam, the deity of liquor (mada). They have a water ordeal, in which the two disputants dive, and the man who comes up first is considered to have been discarded by the pure element and loses his case. They have the common oath by swearing on the head of a son. When the oldest woman in a Hindu household drives out poverty (Daridr Khedna) on 15th Karttik by beating a sieve in the house, and then throwing it away, Musahars, who wish to obtain the powers of a sorcerer (ojha), lurk about, and, when the woman comes out, rush at her with loud cries and snatch her sieve from her. She is supposed to be a witch (tona), and the man who can first seize her fan inherits the powers. The man thus affected has to rush off and propitiate the offended deity by a sacrifice to Sadahn.

¹ Loc cit, 220

and crops by night, field labour, making of catechu, rearing the tussar silk worm. Now-a-days, in Mirzapur, their chief occupation is that of carrying palanquins. They are short, stout, hardy, little fellows, and make excellent bearers.

Distribution of the Musahars according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Banmā- nash.	Kharā- bind.	Kharwār.	Other sub- castes.	TOTAL.
Allahābād	361	...	1,142	1,503
Benares	2,560	333	2,883
Mirzapur	4,503	891	5,397
Jaunpur	1,010	253	1,660	1,989	4,912
Ghāzipur	1,535	723	2,258
Ballia	8	192	200
Gorakhpur	14,993	14,993
Basti	227	227
Azamgarh	1,877	1,877
Rāō Bareilly	412	412
Faizābād	2,140	76	2,216
Gonda	12	12
Sultānpur	2,011	324	2,405
Partalgarh	212	978	1,220
Bārahanki	68	80	148
TOTAL	6,122	614	10,209	23,657	40,662

N

Nāgbansi — A sept of Rājputs in Gorakhpur, of whom Dr Buchanan¹ writes — “There are in this District a good many Nāgbansis, some of whom call themselves merely by that name, while others call themselves Vayasas, a name which in the account of Shāhābād has been written Vais. The Vayasas or Vais, however, universally admit that they are Nāgbansis, and that they assumed the name of Vayasa from Vayaswara, a town between Lucknow and the Ganges, where they were long settled, and from whence they came to this District, some generations ago, in consequence of a famine. Some of these, with whom I conversed, agreed with the account which I received at Shāhābād, and looked upon themselves as descended of the great dragon (nāg), and, as such, claimed a superiority over all other Rājputs, the great dragon being a personage of a good deal more consequence than the Rishis, from whom the others claim a descent. They said, and perhaps believed, that should a serpent from ignorance or mistake bite one of them, the poison would do them no injury. But I had no opportunity of putting their faith to the trial, that was proposed by the chief of Nāgpur. Other Vayasas, however, altogether disclaimed this extraction and gave one as fully different of belief. There was, they say, a certain very holy personage named Vasishtha, well known to all Hindu scholars, who had a cow known to all, and named Kāmdhenu. This was a very precious animal, which was coveted by Viswamitra, king of Gadhpur, who threatened to take her by force. Vasishtha was much afflicted at this, and Kāmdhenu seeing his grief, asked him if he meant to part with her. To this he replied that he had no wish of this kind, but had no power to resist the king, on which a number of warriors sprung from the cow, overthrew Viswamitra and, having killed most of his armies and children, reduced him to become a Brāhman, in which character he became an eminent saint. On this occasion the Singhār Rājputs sprang from the horns of the cow, the Hāris from her bones, the Kachhoyas from her thighs, the Chandels from between her horns, and the Tilokchandras from the root of her nose. The great king Śālivāhana was of this tribe, and having had three hundred and sixty wives, was ancestor of many Rājputs, among whom are the Vayasas who derive their name from Vajaswara, as already mentioned. Those who claim descent from the cow, account in this way for their being called Nāgbansī, they say that a child of a Tilokchandra was in habit of feeding daily with milk a serpent which he found in a wood. After some time the serpent was highly pleased and told the child to call his descendants Nagbansī, and that he would make him a great Rāja, which accordingly happened. Bhīma was one day poisoned by his cousin Duryodhana and the body thrown into the river. It so happened that in that vicinity the daughter of a dragon had long been in the habit of prying to Siva, and was a great favourite, but on that day she had offered flowers which were rather decayed, on which the irascible god cursed her, and declared that she should have a corpse for a husband. The afflicted damsel (for the dragons of the lower world, both male and female, have human shape whenever they please) went to Siva's spouse and told her the hard sentence. On this the goddess upbraided her husband for bestowing so severe a punishment for so trifling an offence. It was, therefore, agreed that Bhīma should be restored to life after the fair dragon had married his body and he had by her a numerous offspring. The Nāgbansī Rājputs in the female line are thus descended of the devil, and if Bhīma's mother had been what she ought, might by the father's side be descended of the Moon, but the good man Pandu had nothing to do in the matter, and the lady, his wife, had Bhīma to the god of wind. This, I am told, is the story which the Nāgpur Raja wishes to be believed, and he probably thinks that the bar of bastardy so long ago and in such circumstances is no great blot on his scutcheon. In this District the tribe is very numerous, but have chiefly come lately from the West, and possess no considerable estates, so that no family can be traced to the time when the Cheroes, their real ancestors, held the country."

¹ Eastern Ind &c, II 161

2 This local account of the connection between the Nāgbansī Rājputs and the Tilokchandra Bais of Oudh is interesting. The Oudh legends will be found under the head Bais.

Nāi,¹ Nāo, Nān — (Sanskrit nāpita, according to some a corruption of nāpita, "one who bathes") the Hindu barber caste. In ¹ Based on enquiry at Muzpur and notes by Panit Daloo Prasad, Deputy Collector Cawnpur. Mr W Cockburn Jalaun. M Chhoti Lal Archaeological Survey Lucknow. Mr W H O S. Sagarve District Superintendent of Police Bareilly, and the Deputy Inspector of Schools Bareilly and Agra.

Bundelkhand he is also known as Khawâs which was a title for the attendant on a grandee, and Birtiya or "he that gets his maintenance (crisis) from his constituents." When he is a Muhammadan he usually calls himself Hajjim, which means in Arabic "a scarifier." It is curious that the Nâi, who is the great go-between of the country side, has so little in the way of traditions about his own caste. According to one account they are descended from a Kshatriya father and a Sûdra mother, according to Parâsara from a Kûveri father and a Pattikâra mother. Another tradition is that Siva created them to cut the nails of Pârvatî. The tribal saint of barbers is Seu or Sain Bhagat, whose name according to Muhammadan tradition was really Husain. He is said to have been a resident of Partabpura, a village in the Phillaur Tahsil of Jalandhar District. According to Prof. Wilson, whose authority was the Bhaktamâla, he was a devout worshipper of Vishnu and his descendants were for some time the family Gurus of the Râjas of Bandhgarh. One day he was so entranced in his devotion that he forgot to attend the Raja to shave him, when he came later on in the day to apologise he found to his amazement that the Raja had been shaved as usual. It then became clear that the deity had really come in person and officiated for his absent votary. His votaries are mostly barbers and are found in the Western Panjab.

2. At the last Census the barbers were enumerated in a Hindu and Muhammadan branch. Of the Hindus the following sub-castes were recorded: Banbhêru, which is said to mean "quarrelsome," Bari, which is the name of a caste who have been separately described, Golê, which is also a sub-caste of Kumbhîrs, Kananjya and Mathuriya, "residents of Kananj and Mathura" respectively, Sambhagat, who take their name from the tribal saint, Sribastab from the city of Sravastî, and Ummara, which is the name of one of the Banya tribes. But besides these there are many others. Thus to the east of the Province we find the Sribastab, Kananjya, Bhojpurja, or "residents of Western Beogal," Audhiya or Awallhiya from Ajudhiya, Magahiya from Magadha or Bihar, Dyakta who pride themselves on prohibiting widow marriage and taking only virgin brides (dyakta), and Musalmâni which is another term for the Hajjam. In Lucknow we have the Sribastab, Chamarmunja or "those who shave Chamars," the Kumbhîra who do the same service for Kumbhîrs, and the Usarha. In Jâlaun are the Sribâstab, Ummara, Husrentê, Bawar, and Bhe-niya. In Bijnor are the Golê, Paclhihi or "Western" and the Parbiya or "Eastern;" and the Bhimbri who are apparently the same as the Baubheru. In Bastinre found the Sarwariya, which is the name of a well-known Brâhman tribe and means "a resident of Sarjupâr or the land beyond the river Sarju:" the Kananjiya and the Turkiya or Turkish Muhammadan branch. Lastly, in Cawnpur we find the Sri-lâstâb; Ummar and Râthaur, the name of a famous Ilâjput sept. Here the barbers refer their origin to Srinagar or Kâshmîr. In the Hills again they are reported to have regular gotras like the higher classes, such as Chinnwal, Kasyapa and Bhiraîwâjâ. The complete returns of the last Census show 858 sub-divisions of the Hindu and 197 of the Muslimân branch of the tribe. Those of most local importance are the Bahlimi, Deswâla and Gaur of Sahâranpur, the Bulhra and Deswâla of Muzaffarnagar; the Turkiya of Bareilly and Gorakhpur, the Golê of Bijner; the Bais, Sulaimâni and Turkiya of Basti; the Parabiya and Turkiya of Kheri, and the Pirzâda of Gonda.

8 The Nâis generally observe the usual rule of exogamy which bars marriages in their own family, and those of the maternal uncle and father's sister as long as relationship is remembered. To the East of the province the marriage age is ten or eleven, and a man may marry as many wives as he can afford to keep. They have the usual triple form of marriage—Charkana, dola, and sagâi, the last for widows. In the first two the binding part of the ceremony is the worshipping of the feet of the bridegroom (pâwpûja, par pûja) by the father of the bride and the Sendurdân or marking of the forehead of the bride by the bridegroom with red lead. The dola form is adopted only by poor people. Widows are re-married by all the sub-castes except the Byâhta. The ceremony merely consists in dressing the woman in a suit of new clothes provided by her lover who also gives her a set of jewelry. From Jâsaun it is reported that Nâis will not marry in their own village because they consider residents of the same village brothers and sisters. One origin of this feeling may be the desire so strongly felt by barbers to keep the constituents or persons they serve (jaymân) in the same family; but at the same time it illustrates an important principle which is at the bottom of one plausible theory of the origin of exogamy. Thus Dr. Westermarck¹ maintains "that there is an innate aversion to sexual intercourse between people living very closely together from early youth, and that, as such people are in most cases related, this feeling displays itself chiefly as a horror of intercourse between near kin."

1. Nāis belong to all the recognised Hindu sects—some being Vaishnavas, some Saivas and some Śāktas.

Religion

As we have seen, to the West of the province their tribal saint is Sain Bhagat. To the East their clan deities are Phūlmātī, a form of Devī, Bhairon Bāba, who is a genuine village godling and has been adopted, as has been shown elsewhere,¹ into the Brāhmanical pantheon as Bhairava, one of the most terrible forms of Śiva, and Birtīya or Birtika. These deities are worshipped on any lucky day in the month of Chait — Phūlmātī with the sacrifice of a ram or chicken and the offering of a piece of cloth dyed with turmeric, Bhairon Bāba with only a ram, Birtika, who is a low class godling, with a young pig and an oblation of spirits. Their marriage and other domestic ceremonies are regulated by Brāhmanas, who to the West are drawn from the Kanaūjya or Sanādh tribes and to the East from the Sarwariya. In Basti they worship Mahahīr and Bhagawatī and to the West Sain Bhagat and some Muhammadan saints like the Miyaṇ of Amroha or Jalesar and Zāhirpīr. They cremate their married dead and dispose of the ashes in the Ganges or one of its tributaries. The unmarried dead are either buried or thrown into a river after a sort of perfunctory cremation (jal pratāh). They perform the usual śraddha but in a less complete way than as is usual among the higher and more orthodox castes.

- 5 The barber's trade is undoubtedly of great antiquity. In the Veda² we read—"Sharpen us like the razor in the hands of the barber," and again, "Driven by the wind, Agni shaves the hair of the earth like a barber shaving a beard." In early times they must have enjoyed considerable dignity, Upān the barber was the first propounder of the law of the Buddhist Church.³

6 A village song from Bundelkhand gives a very graphic description of his functions. Sibisē Nāi bira khilāri, Lekar sil naharū, chhāra karī tayyār churdari Choti pakar sabon kamūla, baghal, m chh aur dārhi Gila phirā aur men rākhkar

¹ Introduction to Popular Religion and Folklore, 67

² Wilson, 1st Veda 11. 233 A, 142 1. Rajendra Lalla Mitra, Indo-Aryans I, 219

³ Oldenberg Life of Buddha 150. Spence Hardy Eastern Monachism, 233

Lalam nukhîlî kârkhî, Mûnd mûnd kîr pet châlîvârî, khêti kârê na bârê, Petî baghâl dabâkar lola hâth lîyê ruggârî

"Of all men the barber is the greatest trickster. With his whiststone, nail parer and razor he gets ready his tool wallet. He catches people by the topknot and clean shaves them, arm-pit, moustache and beard. Leaving a round tonsure on the head, he points off the side-locks. By clean shaving he fills his belly. Neither field nor garden has he. With his wallet under his arm and his brass water pot in his hand, he makes his living. This, however, describes only one and perhaps not the most important function of the barber. Besides shaving and shampooing his constituents, he acts as a village menial, prepares the tobacco at the chaupâl or village rest house and waits on strangers and guests. As we have seen in dealing with various castes, his duties in connection with marriages and other similar functions are numerous and important. He acts as the general village match-maker, a duty which his wandering habits of life and his admittance into respectable households admirably fit him to discharge. He is always on the look out for a suitable match for the children of his employers, and his powers of lying and exaggerating the beauty of a girl and the qualities of a marriageable youth are highly developed. He also acts as confidential envoy and carries announcements of marriages, invitations and congratulations at pregnancy and child birth. In the absence of a Brahman he takes up the duties of a hedge priest and can bring a wedding or a funeral to a successful issue. But he will not bear news which is inauspicious such as that of a death. This is carried by the Bhangî, Chamar, Bahîhar, Dusadh or other village drudge. Besides this he is the rural leech, bone setter, tooth drawer and performer of petty operations, such as lancing boils and the like. For this business he takes the name of Jarrah who is usually a Nâi. If a Muhammadan he usually performs circumcision, but some Hindu Nâis perform this operation for their Musalman neighbours. Along with him are the Jonkâra or leech applier, which is the name of one of the Kori sub-castes, the Kamnahya or ear cleaner and the Mahâwat who is a Nat and does cupping with a cow's horn and carries some rude lancets and a bamboo pipe with which he sucks the matter out of abscesses and sore ears. The functions of these craftsmen all more or less closely touch upon those of the Nâi.

7 It is rather surprising then that with all these important and confidential duties intrusted to him, his social position is not higher than it is. We have seen that manual tribes have their own Nâis and most of the barbers who serve Europeans are Muhammadans, because this employment would offend his high caste Hindu clients. The Nai is not much higher in the social scale than one of the minor grades of handicraftsmen. The reason of this is that his duty of surgery brings him in contact with blood, and he has not only to cut the first hair of the child and thus contracts some of the parturition impurity, but he also has to shave and cut the nails of the corpse before cremation. He also shaves the heads of the mourners, and his wife, as we have seen in dealing with the birth customs of various castes, succeeds the Chamarin midwife and acts as a sort of monthly nurse. She also brings out the bride at the marriage ceremony where she is very much in evidence. All this tends to procure for her a somewhat doubtful reputation.

8 Nâis drink spirits and eat the flesh of goats, sheep and deer. They eat the leavings of Brahmans, Kshatriyas, Vaisyas and Kâyasths. All Hindus will drink water at their hands, and part of their trade is to attend feasts, wash the feet of the guests, hand round the dishes and remove the leavings. Chamârs and other out-caste tribes will eat lachch: cooked by them and many high castes will eat pakk: prepared by them.

9 The barber is one of the most important members of the village community. His wandering habits and his right of entry into households give him great facilities for the collection of gossip, and the place where he carries on his business, usually in the open air, becomes, like the Roman constrina or the Florentine barber's shop immortalised in "Romola," the centre of village talk and intrigue. He is a prosperous craftsman, receiving not only annual dues from his constituents, but special fees for marriages, confinements, circumcisions, and so on. The wit and wisdom of the country side is much devoted to the Nai. "These four are always foul—the barber, the midwife, the leech and the butcher" (Nâi, dâi, bai, quasâi, in ka sulak ladhi na jae). "In a barber's wedding every one is a Thâkur" (Nâi kî bârât men Thâkurê Thâkur). Hence he gets the mock honorific title of Thâkurji. "The barber washes others' feet but is ashamed to wash his own" (Ân kâ gorra dhoê naunya, âpan dhorat lejâê), and lastly, "Every one must bow his head to the barber" (Hajjâm ke âgê sab ka sir jhukta hai).

Distribution of the Nais according to the Census of 1891

Districts	Banbhara	Bali	Gold	Kanaujya	Malburja	Sambhagar	Sambalab	Umar	Others	Ilajum (Musal)	Total
Dehra Dun	204	43	36				77		631	272	1,283
Saharanpur	4118	302	32				28		3577	11088	19145
Muzaffarnagar	5324	579	2089			1	20		619	5507	14,229
Meerut	6894		12900				3		1400	8710	20007
Baladehahr	1741		6684		1				6063	3570	18650
Algarh			6500		335		236	*	13529	893	21853
Methura	18		5360		3009	2	43		5517	286	14295
Agra	20		112		16423		548		3949	281	21332
Farrukhabad				8	250		14643		89	616	10401
Mainpuri			83		4294		7116		3561	77	15160
Etawah					457		12696	87	2137	94	15411
Etah			203		2463		1411		2062	813	13933

Bareilly	2,532	...	13	...	10,261	...	1,039	1,026	18,470
Bijnor	127	54	...	55	10,585	19,322
Budaula	4,447	...	5,059	9	2,880	...	759	3,196	16,350
Moradabad	6	6,799	...	1	...	31	...	1,030	12,729	22,779
Shahjahanpur	199	...	13,475	...	1,217	2,883	17,777
Pilibhit	17	...	30	...	5,908	...	1,459	1,411	8,341
Cawnpur	30	48	11	...	22,469	...	1,151	328	24,043
Ratehpur	1	13,727	1,922	273	1,754	17,076
Danda	2	9,867	...	209	183	10,261
Hamirpur	3	...	916	2,297	1,328	108	4,022
Allahabad	9	99	...	488	15,331	8,769	2,581	3,709	31,070
Jhansi	281	5,133	...	2,004	23	7,836
Jaloun	33	...	7,053	...	854	16	7,956
Lahitpur	53	1,381	6,651	...	8,091
Benares	2,906	...	45	6,126	3	1,824	3,513	14,417
Mirzapur	4,043	11,900	...	595	2,397	18,935
Jaunpur	852	13,747	...	513	6,402	21,514

Distribution of the Nais according to the Census of 1891—continued

Districts.	Banbhara	Dah	Gold	Kanungo	Mathura	Banbhara	Subsidiary	Umer	Others	Hajim (Musam)	Total
Glasgow				8319		10	200		513	4900	14008
Kailash				11813			7		27	1871	13088
Gorakhpur				30306		02	91		10060	8060	50783
Basti				2559			7008		10613	13002	30102
Azamgarh				8357		19	3907		1140	0173	20001
Kunson									117		117
Garhwal									18		18
Tarai	519		451		0		326		20	9314	3039
Lucknow	1			176	4		10119		1094	9217	14631
Unao	300			14			19107		2000	585	2200
Pilibhar				117	100	14	1000		1877	1853	21608
Chhapra							11201		202	11250	23233

Harloi	129	...	16,915	...	245	1,419	18,738
Kheri	121	...	9,601	...	555	6,993	17,269
FaizAbad	1,495	13,196	...	1,114	4,777	20,582
Gonda	14,353	...	3,330	10,953	28,636
Bahrâch	5	5,167	...	6,347	9,601	21,420
Saltâpur	6	31	...	2,215	10,620	...	3,395	4,525	20,825
Parîâgarh	35	5	454	11,450	6	1,976	2,178	16,413
Bârâbanki	5	12,966	...	758	10,711	24,440
Grand Total	29,845	930	48,609	68,930	40,221	5,955	341,062	14,434	118,101	193,037
										862,024

HINDUS 668,037

MUHAMMADANS 193,937

Total . 862,024

Naithāna —A class of Hill Brāhmans who belong to the middle class and Bhāradwāja gotra "They ascribe their origin to Jwala-pur near Haridwar in the Sahāranpur District, whence they came some thirty generations ago and took service with Rāja Sona Pāla. They belong to the Ganr Division and owe their name to the village of Naithāna They are distinct from both Sarela and Gangārī, but the better class of Naithāna Brāhmans intermarry with the former and the poorer with the latter They affect service especially."¹

Nakhi —A Saiva order, so called because they allow their nails (nakā) to grow long This appears to be the only difference between them and Atits or Sannyāsīs Most of them live by begging, but some have a private income from trade They are very vain of their austerity (tapasya)

Na'lband —(Na'l "a horse shoe," band, "fastening") the farrier and horse shoer They are Muhammadaans, some calling themselves Shaikh and others Pathān These divisions are endogamous They observe the usual Muhammadan customs Those who are well to-do marry their daughters as infants, some defer marriage till 15 or 16 Widows re-marry by the Nikāh form which is equivalent to the Hindu sagā Among lower class Muhammadaans the term Nikāh, which properly means the orthodox ceremony of marriage,² has been appropriated in this degraded sense Widow marriage does not appear to be common, but a widow may marry the younger brother of her late husband or a stranger to the family Infidelity in the wife warrants divorce but the fact must be proved to the satisfaction of the tribal council They belong to the Sunni sect and specially revere, like many of the inferior Muhammadan tribes the Pānchonpur and Shaikh Saddu, the latter of whom is propitiated by the offering of a he-goat and sweet cakes fried in butter (gulgula) with garlands of flowers They also burn incense (lobān) in his honour. They so far follow Hindu usage as to offer sweetmeats (halwa) and cakes to the sainted dead at the Shabībarat and on Friday when there is sickness in the family

2 Their occupation is farriery and treatment of horses and is thus equivalent to the Hindu Sālotari

Occupation

(Sanskrit Sālikotra 'one who receives oblations of rice or corn" and hence a horse)

¹ Atkinson Himalayan Gazetteer III 269

² See Hughes Dictionary of Islam 318

On this see Max Müller Lectures on the Science of Language, I 16th note.

Nānakpanthi, Nānakshāhi — A general term which seems to be used in rather an uncertain way to denote various kinds of Sikh Iqārs. They all take their name and derive their doctrine from Nānak, a Khatri of Talwandi, in the Lahore District, who was born in 1469 A.D. and died in 1539 A.D. "Nanak combined the excellencies of preceding reformers and he avoided the more grave errors into which they had fallen. Instead of the circumscribed divinity, the anthropomorphous god of Rāmānand and Kabīr, he loftily invoked the Lord as the one, the sole, the timeless Being, the Creator, the Self-existent, the Incomprehensible, and the Everlasting. He likens the Deity to Truth, which was before the world began, which is and shall endure for ever, as the ultimate cause and idea of all we know or behold. He addresses equally the Mula and the Pandit, the Darve-h and the Sannyasi, and tells them to remember that Lord of Lords who had seen come and go numerous Mahammas, Vishams, and Siras. He tells them that virtues and charities, heroic acts and gathered wisdom are nought of themselves, that the only knowledge that availeth is the knowledge of God, and then as if to rebuke those vain men who saw eternal life in their own act of faith, he declares that they can only find the Lord on whom the Lord looks with favour. Yet the extension of grace is linked with the exercise of our will and the beneficent use of our faculties. God, said Nānak, places salvation in good works and uprightness of conduct, the Lord will require of man what he has done, and the teacher further required timely repentance of men, saying ' If not until the day of judgment the sinner abaseth himself, a punishment shall overtake him ' 1

2 And yet Mr MacLagan 3 says "There is nothing in his doctrine to distinguish it in any marked way from that of the other saints who taught the higher form of Hinduism in Northern India. The unity of God, the absence of any real distinction between Hindus and Musalmāns, the uselessness of ceremonial, the vanity of human wishes even the equality of castes are topics common to Nānak and the Bhagats, and the Adī granth or sacred book, compiled by Nanak, is full of quotations from elder or contemporary teachers, who taught essentially the same doctrines as

1 Cunningham History of Sikhs 4.

2 Panjab Census Report 145

Nānak himself Nor in spite of the legends relating to him, does he appear to have had any very remarkable following during his lifetime And yet the persons now returning themselves as his special adherents very largely outnumber the followers of any of the Bhagats or reformers of the same period. The particular success of Nānak's teaching, as compared with that of the other reforming teachers, had its foundation in a variety of circumstances, of which not the least important were the character of his successors and the nature of the people who listened to him. Most of the other Bhagats were men of the south-east, teachers from Benares, Rajputāna and Delhi Nānak alone had his origin in the Panjāh proper, removed equally from the centre of the Empire and of Hinduism, and found his following among castes who possessed such sterling qualities as the Panjāh Khatris and Jats But if Nānak had no successors, or successors of no moment, his following would doubtless have remained a trifling one, and it must not be supposed that the large number of Nanakpanthis shown in our tables would have been so returned if Sikhism had not had subsequently a political history "

8 "The Nanakpanthis of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries were a sect much as the Kabīrpanthis and Dadnpanthis are sects,—a sect with certain wide opinions differing from the ordinary Hindu orthodoxy and distinguished from other sects more by the character of its Gurus and the organisation of their adherents than by any remarkable differences of doctrine The Nanakpanthis of to day are known roughly as Sikhs who are S ūhs, followers of the earlier Gurus who do not think it necessary to follow the ceremonial and social observances inculcated by Guru Govind Singh Their characteristics are, therefore, mainly negative, they do not forbid smoking, they do not insist on long hair, or the other four kakhs, they are not baptized with the pāñul, they do not look on the Brahman as superfluous, and so forth The chief external difference between the Nanakpanthi Sikh and the followers of Guru Govind Singh is the disposal of the hair, the former, like the Hindu, shaves all but the scalp lock (bōdi, choti) and hence is often known as a Muna or Munda ("shaven") or Bodiwala Sikh, while the Sikh proper wears long hair. They are also known as Sajhdari The only form of baptism known among the Nānakpanthis is the ordinary Hindu practice of drinking the footnectar of the Guru and this is not very common It is known as Charanā paḥul or "foot baptism" as opposed to Khaṇḍē kī pāḥul or "sword baptism" of the Govindī Sikhs. It will thus be seen that from one point of view there is very little difference between a Nānakpanthi and an ordinary lax Hindu."

1. In these Provinces also the term Nānakshīhi seems to be a general term applied to all followers of Nānak, and includes six sections. Uddāsī, Nirmala, Kūbapanthi, Akāb, Satharashāhi and Ragretī. Some are said to be initiated by shaving the hair and washing the body with curds and water, others do not shave the hair and let it grow all their lives. Their body is bathed in Ganges water which the initiate has to drink, and he also washes the feet of the Guru and drinks the water (chāranamrita). After this the mantra or formula satya nāra is whispered into his ear, and when he reaches a higher stage he receives the mantra talwa masi mūha rāya. Any of the four great divisions (varna) may join the order and there is no condition of age. The habits and guise of the various sections differ.

The Nānakpanthis of the North Western Provinces and Oudh

- (1) Among Uddāsīs some have the hair shaved, some let it grow long. They wear a narrow waistcloth (kopin) dyed with red ochre (geru) and an anchala or cloth round the waist. They carry a water vessel (kamandal) like Sannyāsīs. Those who are heads (mahant) of a monastery wear a head dress (śāfa) dyed with vermilion.
- (2) The Nirmalas dress like the Uddāsīs, but keep their hair long and sometimes wear white clothes.
- (3) The Kūbapanthīs wear the hair uncut and wear a turban and ordinary clothes. They live a family life (grīhasth) and carry a white rosary.
- (4) The Akābīs wear the hair long and wear a waist band (jan-gāya) and a black and sometimes a white turban. They are sometimes family men and sometimes wandering ascetics. They wear an iron ring (chakra) in the turban and an iron rosary. To the Brahmanical thread (janu) they tie a small knife and wear an iron ring (lira) on the waist.
- (5) The Satharashāhīs are both house keepers and mendicants. They beat two sticks together and sing the praises of Guru Nānak or some other worthy of the sect. They wear a white dress with a strip of black cloth round the neck and a turban of the same colour. This cloth is usually of wool.

caste is, of course, entirely occupational and they intermarry freely with other Muhammadans

Distribution of Nānbāis according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS	Numbers	DISTRICTS	Numbers.
Meerut	89	Ghāzipur	64
Mathura	3	Gorakhpur	743
Agra	120	Azamgarh	59
Farrukhābād	135	Lucknow	243
Mainpuri	19	Unāo	48
Etawah	71	Rāo Baroh	12
Etah	10	Sitapur	73
Kudāon	21	Hardoi	56
Morādābād	65	Kheri	19
Shahjāhāpur	290	Bābārah	32
Cawnpur	25	Sultānpur	22
Fatehpur	3	Partābgarh	11
Lahitpur	1	TOTAL	2177

¹ Nandwānī¹—A sept of Oudh Rājputs, who were, in Sitapur, the predecessors of the Gaur Rājputs

Naqshbandī, Naqshbandīya—An order of Muhammadan Faqirs which was founded by Khwaja Pīr Muhammad Naqshband, whose tomb is in the Kasar-i-Urfan at Bukhāra. "This man and his father were both manufacturers of brocade, hence the name Naqshband or the 'pattern maker'." The sect was introduced into India by Shaikh Ahmad Sirbandī, whose priestly genealogy is traced back to Abu-Bakr, the first Khalīfa. The Naqshbandīs worship entirely by the zikr i-khafi or the 'silent process,' sitting perfectly calm and quiet, and repeating the Kalma under their breath. They often sit immersed in meditation (murāqaban), quite motionless, with the head bent, and the eye closed or fixed on the ground. All singing and music they utterly repudiate, and are extremely strict adherents of the institutes and traditions of orthodox Muhammadanism. The spiritual guides of the order do not sit apart from their disciples, but, ranging them in a circle, seat themselves by their sides, with a view of communicating their own mystic virtues to the minds of their followers by some sort of hidden magnetism.¹ They have a practice of going about begging with a lamp in their hands, whence the proverb Chiragh raushan murād hāsī, "The lamp is lighted and the wishes fulfilled."

¹ Sitapur Settlement Report, 39

Distribution of the Naqshbandis according to the Census of 1891

DISTRICTS	Numbers	DISTRICTS	Numbers
Sabāranpur . . .	7	Gorakhpur . . .	6
Muzaffarnagar . .	1	Azamgarh . . .	491
Mainpuri . . .	92	Lucknow . . .	5
Etāwah . . .	13	Faizābād . . .	27
Pilibhīt . . .	1
Allahābād . . .	15	TOTAL . . .	658

Narauliya—An influential Rājput sept in Ghāzipur, who claim to be a branch of the Parihār, and to take their name from Narwar in Gwālior. They are among the earlier settlers and say that their ancestors killed the Chero Rāja, while he was in a state of intoxication, and occupied his dominions. They are inordinately proud, passionate, and extravagant, and have lost a large part of their ancestral property. They claim to belong to the Kasyapa gotra.²

Nat³ (Sanskrit nata, "a dancer,") a tribe of so-called gypsy dancers, acrobats, and prostitutes who are found scattered all over the Province. The problem of the origin and ethnological affinities of the Nats is perhaps the most perplexing within the whole range of the ethnography of Northern India, and the enquiries, of which

¹ Panjab Census Report, 196

² Oldham Ghāzipur Memo I, 61

³ Based on information collected at Mirzapur and notes by Bābu Nadri nāth, Deputy Collector Kheri; M Niyās Ahmad Fatehpur A B Bruce, Esq., C S., Ghāzipur Bābu Sānwal Dās Deputy Collector Hardoi; M Gopal Prasad, Nāib Tahsilidar, Etāwah, the Deputy Inspectors of Schools Shāhjahānpur, Budāun B i not the result is given here, leave its solution almost as uncertain as ever. The real fact seems to be that the name Nat is an occupational term which includes a number of different clans who have been grouped together merely on account of their common occupation of dancing, prostitution, and performance of various primitive industries.

2. The same people are found also beyond the boundaries of these Provinces. Thus they appear to be identical, at least in occupation, with the Kolhâtis of Bombay, who are also known as Dombari, and are "rope dancers and tumblers, as well as makers of the small buffalo horn pulleys which are used with cart ropes in fastening loads. They also make hide combs and gunpowder flasks. When a girl comes of age, she is called to choose between marriage and prostitution. If, with her parents' consent, she wishes to lead a married life, she is well taken care of and carefully watched. If she chooses to be a tumbler and a prostitute, she is taken before the caste council, a feast is given, and with the consent of the council she is declared a prostitute. The prostitutes are not allowed to eat with other Kolhâtis, except with their own children. Still, when they grow old, their caste-fellows support them. They worship Amba Bhawâni, Hanumân, Khmndoba, and the cholera goddess Mariâi; but their favourite god, as they say, their only living gods are the bread-winners or hunger-scarers, the drum, the rope, and the balancing pole."¹

3. Of the same people in the Dakkhin, Major Gnanthorpe² writes:—"The Kolhâtis belong to the great Sânsya family of robbers and claim their descent from Mallanûr, the brother of Sânsmal. There are two tribes, Dukar Kolhâtis and Kam or Pâl Kolhâtis. The former are a non-wandering criminal tribe, whereas the latter are a non-wandering criminal class. Depraved in morals, the males of both tribes subsist to a great extent by the prostitution of some of their females, though let it be said to the credit of the former that they are not so bad as the latter. They labour for themselves by cultivating land, by taking service as village watchmen, or by hiring themselves to villages to destroy that pest of Indian farmers, the wild hog, and above all they are professional robbers.

¹ Bombay Gazetteer, XX, 186, sq.

² Notes on Criminal Tribes, 46, sqq. The Kolhâtis take their name from Kolhât, the bamboo on which they perform.—Bombay Gazetteer, XII, 123, sq.

Kam Kolhâtis, on the other hand, are a lazy, good-for-nothing class of men who, beyond making a few combs and shuttles of bone, will set their hands to no class of labour, but subsist mainly by the immoral pursuits of their women. At every large fair may be seen some of the portable huts of this tribe, made of grass, the women decked in jewels and gaudy attire sitting at each door, whilst the men are lounging lazily at the back. The males of the Dukar Kolhâti tribe are a fine manly set of fellows, and obtain the distinction of Dukar, 'hog' from the fact of their hunting the wild, and breeding the domesticated pig."

4 Again we have in Bengal¹ a people known as Nar, Nat, Nartak or Nâtak, who form the dancing and musician class of Eastern Bengal, on the other hand many of the people whom in these Provinces we class as Nats, such as the Bâzigar, Sâpera, and Kabûtri, are classed in Western Bengal with the Bediya, who in Northern India are undoubted kinsfolk of the Sânsya, Hâbûra, and similar vagrant races.

5 Lastly, of the same people in the Panjab, Mr. Ibbetson² writes—"The Nat, with whom I include the Bâzigar, form a gypsy tribe of vagrant habits, who wander about with their families, settling for a few days or weeks at a time in the vicinity of large villages or towns, and constructing temporary shelters of grass. In addition to practising acrobatic feats and conjuring of a low class, they make articles of grass, straw, and reeds for sale, and in the centre of the Panjab are said to act as Mirâsis, though this is perhaps doubtful. They often practise surgery and physio in a small way, and are not free from suspicion of sorcery. They are said to be divided into two main classes, those whose males only perform as acrobats and those whose women, called Kabûtri, perform and prostitute themselves. About three-quarters of their number returned themselves as Hindus, and most of the rest as Musalmâns. They mostly marry by circumambulation (phera) and burn their dead, but they are really ontcastes, keeping many dogs, with which they hunt and eat the vermin of the jungles. They are said especially to reverence the goddess Devi, Guru Tegh Bahâdur, the Guru of the Sikh scavengers, and Hanumân, or the monkey god, the last because of the acrobatic powers of monkeys. They very generally trace their origin to Mārwar, and they are found all over the Province, except on the frontier, where they are almost unknown "

¹ Risley Tribes and Castes II 129

² Panjab Ethnography section 553

6 There seems, then, very little doubt that under the general name Nat are included various tribes, some of whom are closely allied to the vagrant, criminal races, like the Sinsyas, Beriyas, and Hāhūras, and as we shall find a well pronounced totemistic section system among some of the so-called sub castes, it seems possible that they have decided Dravidian relationship.

7. As has been already stated, the tribal organization of the Nats is most complex. Everywhere they merge with the regular vagrant tribes, and where to draw the line is practically impossible. In the last Census, about two-thirds of the Nats in these Provinces declared themselves as Hindus and one third as Muhammadans. Of the Hindus we find ten main sub-castes —The Brijbāsi, who take their name from their supposed country of origin, Braj or Mathura, and its neighbourhood. Next come the Guḷ or "cowherds," some of whom claim a Jāt and others an Ahīr origin. The Jogia seem to be connected in name with the vagrant, criminal Jogis. The Kabūtara, who take their name from the pigeon (kaḇūtar), are prostitutes so called from characteristic wooing of the hird. The Kalabāz is literally "a tumbler or juggler." The Karnātak is supposed to come from the Karnāta country, the modern Karnatic in Madras. The Mahāwat is so called from the Sanskrit Mahāmātra, "a great officer of state" or an "elephant driver," an occupation to which the word is now generally applied. The Mirdaha is literally "a village ruler" (Persian, mīrdah), and now a days the word is usually applied to a man who carries a chain for a surveyor. The Rāthaur is the name of a famous Rājput sept, and Saperā (Sanskrit, sarpahāraka) is literally "a snake catcher."

8 But this is far from exhausting the tribal organization of the Nats. Thus Mr Carnegie¹ divides the Oudh Nats into eight sub-castes —First, the Gwalyāri Nats or those of Gwālior, with three sections, Kapūri, Bhātu and Sarwām. Of these the Kapūri appear to take their name from the Sanskrit karpura, "camphor;" the Bhātu are seemingly the same as the Bhātu or Bhāntu, a sub-caste of the Sânsyas The men of this sub-caste buy cattle for hutchers, while the women are coppers, dentists, and curists They are Hindus, bury their dead, and drink inordinately Secondly, the Sânwat, who are Muhammadans They also supply hutchers, and sing the praises of Alha and Udal, the heroic Banâphar warriors, who were afterwards subject to the Râthours, from whom this sub-caste claims descent Thirdly, Brjhasi, who are Hindus The men walk on high stilts and the women show their confidence by dancing and singing under them They eat pork, drink spirits and bury their dead They say that they came to Braj or Mathura after the capture of Chithor, which is the starting point of the traditions of so many other castes Fourthly, the Bachgoti, who are Hindus and connected by Mr Carnegie with the Râjput sept of the same name The men wrestle and play single stick, the women are depraved They bury their dead Fifthly, the Bijaniya or Bajaniya, who seem to take their name from the music (bâja) accompanying their performances They are Hindus and dance on the tight rope They are addicted to drinking, they bury their dead in an upright position Sixthly, the Bariya who are Hindus They do not perform, but attend feasts and eat scraps The women are depraved and all are addicted to drinking They bury their dead Seventhly, the Mahâwat, who are Musalmâns by religion They are said to be expert in treating rheumatism and deal in cattle Drinking is confined to the seniors on the occasion of deaths Lastly come the Bazigar, or common conjurers, who are given to drinking They bury their dead

9. In addition to this enumeration the present survey has produced a long set of diverse lists from different districts The confusion, as already indicated, seems to have sprung from the practical impossibility of distinguishing the Nat from his allies, the Sânsyas and similar tribes Thus, in Mirzapur we find the Bajaniya, Byâdha, Karnâtak, Kashmiri, Kalabaz, Mahâwat, Badi and Malâr. From Shâhjahanpur comes a list of Hindu sub-castes, including the Bhantu, who are Sânsyas, with the Guâl, Ghara, Kalabaz, Kabûtariya, and Lakarbâz, or performers on stilts From Kheri we find the Bhatiya, who are perhaps the Bhatu of Shâhjahanpur, the Kinganiya, who are discussed in a separate article, the Kanjar, who, of course, forms a tribe of his own, the Gulahla, Kalabâz, Râjnat, and Dhârhi, who again are usually classed as a quite different group The list from Badliôn gives Guâl and Brajhâsi, with, as sections, the Kakhera or Kanghigar, "comb makers," and the Banjâra, where we meet a distinct group. In Hardoi we find the Kalabâz, Karnâtak, Brijhâsi, and Bâgula; in Bijnor, the Bâdi, Gnâl, and Kentâr, the last of whom are possibly connected with the Kewats. The sub-castes of the Muhammadan Nats are much less well established. In Ghâzipur we find the Panjâbi, Goriya, and Hagiya; in Fatebpur, the Megliya, Dariya, Chhijariya, and Krîm or Kârîm.

10. The complete Census returns show 386 sections of the Hindu and 205 of the Musalmân Nats. They have, as might have been expected, largely adopted the names belonging to other castes and septs, such as Bhântu, Chamargantam, Chamarmangtâ, Chamar-nat, Chamar Sangla, Chamarwa, Chandel, Chauhân, Chhatri, Dhimar, Dhobi, Dom, Ghosi, Gond, Gûjar, Guâl, Gnâlban, Jâdon, Kâbuli, Kanchan, Kâyasth, Khatri, Kori, Korwa, Kormangtâ, Mainpuri Chauhân, Panwâr, Paturiya, Râjput, Râthaur, Sakarwâr, Tel. With these are the usual local groups: Brijhâsi, Chithauriya, Daryâbâdi, Gangapâri, Indauriya, Jaiswâi, Jaypuriya, Kananjiya, Kâshipuri, Lâhanri, Mathuriya, Panjâbi, Râmpuriya, Srihâstam. The Musalmân branch show an equally curious mixture of names. We have many distinctively Hindu titles as Bâhman, Bais, Bhadauriya, Chauhân, Gaur, Gûjar, Râthaur, and Tomar; regular Musalmân names like Chisti, Ghori, Khwâja Mansûri, Khwâja Miyân, Lodi, Minghal, Nawâb, Naumuslim, Pathân, Sadîqi, Shaikh, Turkiya, and Yûsufzai; occupational terms and those connecting them with other gypsy tribes, such as Bâzigar, Beriya, Bûchar, ("Butcher"), Dom, Filwân ("elephant driver"), Kanchan, Mangtâ ("beggar"), Pablwân ("wrestler"), Randi ("prostitute"), Sânpwâla and Saper ("snake men"), and Tawâif.

11. The information at present available is much more complete for the Eastern Nats, and it may be well to describe some of their sub-castes with more or less detail.

12. The Bajaniya Nats of Mirzapur have seven sections, which are obviously of totemistic origin. These are The Bajaniya Nats. Makriyâna which take their name from makrs, "a spider," which no member of the section will kill; Gauharna which are called from goâ the Gangetic alligator or lizard known as the goâ sânp, which none of them will harm; Deodinâik or "leader given by God," the members of this section are generally headmen (chandkari) of the tribe, Bahurina or "the fly," which takes its name from having many eyes; this insect none of them will injure; Gogohya of which they are unable to give any explanation; Sānpāneriya, none of whom will kill the snake (śarp), and Sūganik, none of whom will injure the parrot (inga). These sections are exogamous, but there is no other prohibition against intermarriage, and it is notorious that Nats marry very close blood relations. They say that they were originally residents of Mārwar, and passed into Mirzapur through Bundelkhand. The migration is said to have occurred about a century ago. They have no other tribal tradition, except that they were created by Parameswar, whose pleasure it was that they should be acrobats and rope-dancers.

13 They have their own council known as Panth, presided over by a head man (mutdān), who is assisted by a messenger (shakti), whose business is to collect the elders for meetings. No woman can be divorced for simple adultery. Her paramour is merely fined five rupees, which is spent on drinkage. They cannot marry again while the first wife is alive. They purchase brides, the price according to tribal custom being twenty-five rupees in cash, four rupees worth of sugar, one rupee worth of pulse (dal), one rupee worth of ghis, two rupees worth of wheat, some tarmens and cakes.

14 Concubinage is not allowed. Widows can marry by the ordinary form, which they call ghughuna. When the connection is sanctioned by the headman, the future husband goes to the house of the widow, puts bangles and a nose-ring of silver on the woman. Her friends then take the pair into a closed room, where they are left some time to themselves, and in the meantime wine is served round to the brethren. Next morning the husband takes his wife home, and the business is over. The levirate is allowed on the usual conditions, if she marry a stranger, she loses all right to the goods of her first husband.

15 A Chamārin midwife attends the mother only for one day. The mother is kept secluded for six days with a fire and a box of iron for holding lamp-black (tajrauta) near her. The ceremony on the sixth day is known as huabar. The mother lathes and then goes to the nearest well with the bosom of her sheet full of parched grain, with four pice, some powdered sugar and ginger, and two roots of turmeric. When she comes to the well, she lights a lamp, and collecting the lamp-black in her iron box, marks several lines with it and some vermilion on an earthen pot, and puts red lead on the parting of the hair of the women who go with her. She bows in obeisance to the well and returns home, where the parched grain is distributed among her women friends. At the same time the father serves round wine to his male friends, and after that the mother is considered pure.

16 The betrothal is settled by the father of the boy paying five rupees to the girl's father, which is spent on wine for the betrothal. A feast is given and the father of the bride sends a bead necklace and a handkerchief for his future son-in-law.

17 When the wedding day is fixed, the bride price is sent in advance. This is usually five days before the wedding, and during that time the pair are kept at their own houses in a thatched shed in the courtyard. This shed, contrary to the usual Hindu custom, is surrounded with screens. We have here probably a survival of the custom of seclusion at puberty. Every day the pair are anointed with turmeric and oil. A friend takes the bridegroom on his shoulder to the house of the bride, and when they reach her door her relatives make a square, in each corner of which a brass lota is placed. A piece is put into each lota, and the four vessels are joined with a string. Into this enclosure the pair are led, and inside it they make five circuits. This is the binding part of the ceremony. The bride returns to the house and the bridegroom to his friends. That night is spent in eating and drinking and next morning the bride puts on a dress purchased out of the bride price. The pair stand at the door, and the bride's mother waves a plough yoke (gā) over their heads for good luck. Then the bride and bridegroom are taken home on the shoulders of two male friends. At the door the boy's mother again waves a plough yoke over them and the boy seizing the yoke runs and demolishes with it the nuptial shed (manro) in the courtyard. This concludes the marriage.

18 They bury their dead in their own cemetery. When a person dies they put a copper coin in his mouth as a viaticum. The corpse is taken on a bier and buried with the head to the north and the feet to the south. When the grave is filled, they pour some wine on the ground, and they do the same at the house of the deceased, where wine is served round when they return after the burial. The ceremonies for the repose of the soul are done some months later when they can afford to do so. They go to the river side and cook cakes rice, and pulse. Then they spread a cloth on the ground, on which the ghost is supposed to sit, and the nearest relative taking an earthen cup (purva) and a knife in his hand plunges into the water. He puts the knife on the cup and sits down till the cup, which is placed on his head, gets full of water. This cup full of water he brings out and places under the cloth on which the ghost is supposed to be sitting. Again he places four cups of water, one at each corner of the cloth, and connects them with a thread so as to form a square. In the enclosure thus formed they place a little of each kind of food for the refreshment of the ghost, and pray to it to partake of the food. They then wait for a few minutes while it is supposed to be eating, and then they address it "Go and join those who have departed before you." Until this ceremony is performed, the ghost will not pass quietly to the world of the dead. They have no idea of ceremonial impurity, resulting from death.

19 Their tribal deities are Halki Mai, the goddess of cholera, the Vindhyaśānu Devi, Durga Kali, and Parameswar. They worship these collectively every year when they return from their annual wanderings. This worship is done in the family kitchen and the only sacrifice is a he goat with sweet bread and wine. This is their chief festival, and is done either on the tenth (dasmi) of Karttik or at the Holi. Whenever, during the year, any trouble comes upon them, they make a special offering of sweet bread and wine to the deified ancestors, all of which, after presentation, they consume themselves.

20 They regard the Dom and the Hela with special dislike. They do not eat beef or vermin, such as rats, but they eat fowls, fish of every kind, crocodiles, tortoises, and the nīlgāē deer. They drink spirits and use gānya, bhang, and palm wine (tāri), but not opium. No respectable Hindu will take food or drink from their hands. They will eat food prepared by any one except a Dhobi, Pasi, Dharkar, Dom or Chauhar. The men wear short drawers (janghīya) turban (pagri), a necklace of white beads (guriga), and earrings (bālī). The women wear a petticoat (lahnga), boddico (choli), a black and white bead necklace and ear rings.

21 The men are rope dancers and acrobats. The women beg and prostitute themselves. They usually live in out-of-the-way hamlets away from the village, and during the cold and hot weather they wander about from fair to fair and to the houses of rich people, usually sleeping under trees in the course of their journeys.

22 The Byadha are another tribe of these vagrants. They take their name from the Sanskrit Vyādha.

The Byadha Nats

"a hunter." They are a short, black race, with very large dark eyes, very black hair, which they keep long and unkempt, short beard, whiskers and mustache, and a short, rather broad, nose. Those of Mirzapur are unable to name any of their exogamous sections, and their rules of intermarriage are very vague. They do not even maintain the ordinary formula that the line of the paternal uncle (chācha), maternal uncle (māmu), paternal aunt (phūphū), and maternal aunt (māosi) are to be avoided. In short, they have practically no prohibited degrees. Thus a man will marry his son to his own sister's daughter, to his maternal aunt's daughter, and so on.

23 The marriage negotiations are carried on by the maternal uncle (māmu) of the boy, a custom which may be a survival of the matriarchate. Sometimes one of the meaner Brahmans goes with the envoy. When the match is settled the boy's maternal uncle, brother-in-law, and some of his female relations go to the house of the bride and pay the bride price, which consists of twenty rupees in cash, a set of glass bangles (chūri), a cocoanut, a betel-nut, and a suit of clothes. These things are given to the mother of the bride. They return after fixing the marriage day. A pavilion (niāiro) is erected at the boy's house, and next day he starts for the bride's house. They have no regular Purohit or family priest, but the lucky dates for these events are ascertained from some village Brāhman. All the relations, including the women, which is absolutely opposed to all Hindu usage, accompany the procession. On that day the bride's father entertains the whole party with goat's flesh and rice.

24 When the time comes for the marriage, the bridegroom takes his seat in the pavilion with the bride seated beside him, her mother shading her face with the end of her sheet. Then the bride's female relations rub the pair vigorously with a mixture of oil and turmeric. This is done three times while the ceremony goes on. The binding part of the rite is the rubbing of the parting of the bride's hair with red lead, which is done by the brother-in-law of the bridegroom, the husband of his sister. This is, of course, contrary to all Hindu usage, the boy usually does this rite himself. During the marriage the girl's father performs no rite, which again is very unorthodox. They have no retiring-room.

(lokābar) ceremony as among low Hindu castes. When the marriage is over, her father dresses the bride in new clothes, gives her a lola, and sends her off at once with her husband. The age for marriage is fifteen for boys and ten or twelve for girls; as a rule it takes place immediately when the pair have attained puberty.

25. Widows are married by the sagā form and the levirate prevails under the usual condition that she marry the younger, not the elder, brother of her late husband. If the younger brother do not claim her, she may marry an outsider with leave of the tribal council. Nothing is paid to the parents of the widow. Her lover is expected to give a goat to the council. When this is done, he puts some oil on the widow's head, while her sister's husband (śāśura) rubs red lead on the parting of her hair. He then takes her off to his house.

26. At child-birth the mother is isolated and attended by the Chamārin midwife. After the fifth day is the chāṭakī or sixth-day rite when the brethren (ś'vā), men and women, are fed. The Chamārin, who is known as son, bathes the mother and baby, and gives their clothes and those of the other members of the household to a Dhobi. All the men have their hair shaved. The birth pollution ceases on the twelfth day (śaradī), when the mother and child are bathed again. The husband keeps away from his wife for twenty days after her confinement. The Chamārin among these people plasters the delivery room,—a duty which, among other Hindus, is usually done by the husband's sister (uanad). The menstrual pollution lasts for five days, during which the woman is isolated, and her husband cooks for her.

27. These Nats say that they came originally from Ratanpur and Bilaspur in the Central Provinces. They bury their dead, not in a regular cemetery, but in any convenient place north of the village. The grave lies North and South, and they profess not to care in which direction the corpse is laid. A woman is buried face upwards and a man face downwards. After the burial, they all bathe and return to the house of the deceased, where they sit for a while in the courtyard, wash their hands, and then go home. No food is cooked in the house that day, the family are fed by a neighbour. On the tenth day the brethren assemble at some tank or stream and have their heads shaved. No sacred balls (piśda) are offered. They return to the house of mourning and there they are feasted. If the son of the deceased can afford it, he gives a cup and plato (lola, lādli) and a female calf to a Brahman. This concludes the death rite.

28 All who can afford it have an annual propitiation of the dead (barsi). They do not on this occasion feed the brethren, but give a Brahman some brass vessels. Then he stands up and raising his hands says — 'Children of the dead man! Live in happiness!' They have no regular fortnight of the dead (pitrapaksha), and no sradha.

29 In the month of Sawan they worship Hariyah Devi, "the goddess of greenery," who watches the crops. To her a fire offering (havan) is made in the field with sugar and gha. In Phalgun they burn the old year (sambal jalāta) when they drink and eat good food. They observe no other Hindu festival except the Phagua or Holi. On some day in the light fortnight of Āsārh, they worship their deceased ancestors (purāṅh log). They make a fire offering with sugar and gha, and sprinkle a little spirits on the ground. This worship is done by the head of the family at home. Their tribal deity is Bhawani Devi, who is worshipped every third year in the light fortnight of Phalgun. To her is offered a black goat, which is fed on rice before being sacrificed. The worshipper does the sacrifice himself. When sickness or other trouble comes upon them they sometimes get the Ba ga to sacrifice a goat to the village gode (deohar). Men and women both eat the flesh of the victim to Bhawani. She has no temple but most people make a stone or mud platform near their houses, where she is supposed to dwell. When they eat, they throw a little food and water on the ground for the ancestral ghosts, and say — 'If any of you are hungry, come and eat.'

30 The women of this tribe do not tattoo, this is done by the Badi Nats. The women get themselves tattooed with little spots on both wrists but the custom is not well defined. If an unmarried woman is caught in an intrigue with a member of the caste, the council order him to pay twenty rupees to her father, and she is then made over to him by a sort of informal marriage. In the same way, if a married woman is caught with a man her paramour pays the husband twenty rupees and takes over the lady. If her lover be of another caste she is permanently expelled. They profess to have stringent rules to enforce chastity among their women, but they are not free from the suspicion of occasionally prostituting their girls. They have no occupation but begging and do not dance, play, sing, or perform acrobatic feats. Their women wear glass bangles (chāṛi), bead necklaces (guriya) of all colours, anklets (pairi) and arm ornaments (churila). They do not wear nose rings. They will eat all ordinary meat except beef, monkeys, horses, tame pigs, and snakes. They swear by the words "If I lie, may I eat beef," or on their sons' heads, or they fill a loti of water and swear by Kansasur Deota, "the godling of brass." Until a child is five or six years old they do not care what he eats, but when he arrives at that age he is obliged to conform to caste custom, and to commemorate this event, if they can afford it, they put a silver bangle on his wrist.

31 This sub-caste of Nats is quite distinct from the Bajanya, but they have the same sections, Gohna or Gouharna, Mahriyāna, Suganaik Deodinaik, Gagohiya, Sanpaneriya and Waniawaraha. These are exogamous, but like all Nats they are very careless about prohibited degrees and first cousins are allowed to marry. The highest section is the Deodinaik, and then follow the Suganaik, Gohna, Gagohiya and Sanpaneriya. Some of them are Hindus and some Muhammadans. Those who are Hindus worship the Vindhya^{as} Devī of Bundhachal or Durga. They will eat the leavings of all high castes and are hence known as Akushhaliya or "those in prosperous circumstances." They dance on ropes and with cow horns tied to their feet, their women do not tattoo other women. Some of the better looking girls are reserved for prostitution, and these are never married in the tribe. One condition of marriage among them is that both parties should be of the same age. The Muhammadan branch in Etawah allow the levirate and a widow can marry either the elder or younger brother of her late husband. There, it is said, they will admit any one into the tribe except a Bhangi, Dhānuk, Chāmār, Teh, Dhobi or Bari. When the initiate is not a Muhammadan they send for the Qāzi, who recites the Kalima over him. A girl who is seduced, whether her paramour be a tribesman or not, can be restored to caste rights on payment of a fine, but if her lover be a low caste man, like a Dom or Dharkar, she is permanently expelled. If her lover be a Brahman or Rajput, she is admitted back, and can be married in the caste.

32 These people have no occupation except loafing, begging, and prostituting their women. Very few of the women are married in the tribe, and even the married women are some times prostituted. Most of their real wives are girls of other castes, who are bought by them or kidnapped. This is a costly and dangerous business, hence the number of old bachelors among them is very large. When they do marry in the tribe they observe no prohibited degrees and marry consins. No regard is paid to the paternity of their children. Some of them are Hindus and some Muhammadans. The Hindus employ low Brahmans as their priests, and burn their dead. The Muhammadans bury. Hindus worship their ancestors in the month of Kuâr, and to the east of the Province their favourite deities are the Vindhyabasin Devi of Bilhachal and Garbary Devi. These are worshipped in the month of Aghan with the sacrifice of a goat and an offering of cakes and sweetmeats. The Hindu branch do not eat beef and pork. They eat mutton, goat's flesh, venison, and the like. They will not eat the flesh of the horse, camel, jackal or rats. The Muhammadans do not eat pork, but use beef and drink spirits. They eat the camel and fowls and the other animals which the Hindu branch of the tribe eat.

33. This branch of the Nats has exogamous sections, but few of them are able to give a list of them. In the Kalabâz or Gara Nats Hardeo their sections are Savâi, Ghinghasiya, Panchhiya, Jimichhiya. Their tradition is that they were once Kshatriyas, and were forced to deny their caste when Alâ ud-din conquered Chithor in 1303 A.D. Another account of them is that their first ancestor was a Dhinwar, and that they were begotten by him from a Telî woman. They wander about the country in rude huts (sirkî) made of reeds. To the east of the Province they appear to conduct their marriages in one of these huts with a rude form of the circumambulation (bhânwari) ceremony. They have a strange legend that Parameswar was once incarnated as a Nat at Sambhal in the Morâdabad District, and became such an accomplished acrobat that in one bound he fixed a cart and in a second some mill stones in a tree which no Kalabâz has been since able to take down. Their occupation is rope-dancing and other acrobatic feats. They are fairly strict Hindus and are said not to prostitute their women. In Oudh their favourite deity seems to be Hardeo or Har-daur Lâla, the godling of cholera. From Etah it is reported that a distinction is drawn between the Baghakya Nats, who dance on ropes, and the Kalabâz, who do somersaults and other athletic feats. They are very fond of singing the Alha song to the accompaniment of the drum. During the rains these people move about from village to village. It is understood that only one party encamps in the village at a time, and no other party is allowed to intrude on them until the performance is over. Willful intrusion of this kind is severely punished by the tribal council. Even if any other body of Nats perform there, the fees go to the party which is first in possession of the place. The women do not perform or dance, sing or beg. They have regular circles within each of which the bones of the dead of the tribe are buried under a masonry platform, as is the rule among the Hībūras, and to these the tribal worship is performed.

31 The Mahawat Nats take their name from the Sanskrit

The Mahawat Nats Maḥāmatra "a high officer of state" or "an elephant driver." They say themselves that keeping elephants was their original occupation, and that from this they derive their name. They are also known as Bail, "physician," (Sanskrit Vaidya) and Lohangi, because they use surgical instruments of iron (loha) in treating their patients. They say that they are divided into four endogamous sub-caste, Turkata Pahlwān, Kapariya Chamarmangta and Lohangi Nats. Of these the first and fourth are Muhammadans and the second and third Hindus. The Turkata Pahlwāns teach wrestling and athletic exercises and their women tattoo. The Kapariyas are dealt with in a separate article. The Chamarmangta are so called because they beg (māngna) from Chamars. In Mirzapur the true Lohangi Nats marry second cousins. They fix their earliest settlement at Kara Munipar on the Ganges. They say that they are descended from Hathula who has now been deified as one of the Pāñchon Pir. They worship him with prayers and the sacrifice of a fowl in the month of Jeth. This worship is done by Dafāhs, who, while they make the offering sing songs in honour of Hathula. The proper offering to him is a red cock. This sacrifice is offered only by married men, and they alone are allowed to consume the offering.

32 Their domestic ceremonies are of much the usual Nat type. They pay as a bride price twenty or some multiple of twenty rupees. Infidelity in women is punished by a compulsory feast, and similarly a man is put out of caste if he cohabits or eats with a Dom or women of the menial tribes. They have a tribal council, the chairman of which is appointed at each sitting. The levirate and widow marriage are a lower and less usual conditions. Even when they profess to be Muhammadans, it is alleged that they perform no rite of circumcision (musalmānī). They have practically no marriage ceremony. The girl's father attires her in a new dress, puts bangles and ear-ornaments (tarāḥī) on her and then she is sent into the hut where her husband receives her. If he can afford it, he feeds the brethren. They bury their dead in any convenient place. When they bury a corpse, they put his tools with him, so that he may be able to support himself in the next world. When any one falls sick, they sacrifice fowls at the graves of their ancestors and make an offering of spirits and tobacco.

36. They are nominally Muhammadans, but carry out hardly any of the rules of the faith. They worship the goddess known as Bhītari and Sīyari, and their deified ancestor Hathila. Bhītari is worshipped on a Monday or Tuesday in the fields with a sacrifice of goats, which only the married males are allowed to eat. She is the protectress of their camp and children. Sīyari is the patroness of their trade and is worshipped in the tent or hut with an offering of a black cock and some spirits. The Devi of Bindhāchal also receives the sacrifice of a goat. The only festival which they observe is the Kajari, when they sing, drink, and practise a good deal of rude licentiousness. They have the usual fear of ghosts and demons. When a child suffers from the Evil Eye, they get a handful of dust from an exorcisor, and wave it over the child's head. They drink spirits, eat beef, goat's flesh, mutton, fowls, camels, venison, etc. They abstain from pork. They will not eat from the hands of a Dom, Dholi, Musahar, Kol, or similar low castes, and no one will eat their food.

37. The Mahawat has all the appearance of a degraded outcaste. He wears dirty clothes and a filthy rag as a turban, keeps his hair long and unkempt, and has round his neck strings of coral beads or ghumri seeds. In his ears he wears iron rings. The women wear a petticoat (lahnga), sheet (sāri), with strings of beads round their necks, bracelets, and thick anklets. The men carry in a wallet rude lances (nashṭar), a cupping horn (singhi), and some hollow bamboo pipes, with which he extracts by suction the matter out of abscesses and sore ears. It need hardly be said that he is quite ignorant of cleanliness and antiseptics, and his instruments must be responsible for much horrible infection. He takes the "worm" out of carious teeth, bleeds and lances abscesses, and cleans the wax out of ears, in which department of his business he is known as Kanmaḥiya (Kāṇ "ear," maḥiya, "filth"), Khutkha or Khunṭkha, "the man of the spike" (khūṇla) or Singhiwāla. He wanders about the villages calling out Baid ! Baid ! "Who wants a doctor?" He is altogether rather a loathsome vagrant. Some of them are skilled fishermen and trap hares.

38 The Bādi sub-caste of Nats are said to take their name from the Sanskrit rādya, "a musical instrument".
 The Bādi Nats They are also known as Paras Bādi (pāras, "the philosopher's stone") and Tumriwāla Madāri (tumri, "a hollow gourd"). In Mirzapur they specially beg among the Mānjhis. They profess to have seven exogamous sections. These, when compared with those of the Mānjhi-Majhwārs, are, in many cases, identical, and they explain that like the Patāris they were priests of the Majhwārs. It will be seen that the Patāris also follow the section organization of the Majhwārs, and there must apparently have been some ancient connection between the tribes. As might have been expected, the explanation given of these section names is in some respect different from that of either the Mānjhis or Patāris, but there seems little doubt that they are in the main of totemistic origin. The names of the sections, as given by the Mirzapur Bādīs, are Jaghat, which they say is a kind of snake, Urā, which they say means "a pig", Marai, "a kind of tree," Neta, which they say means "the mucus of the nose," in which form they came out of the nose of their first ancestor. The Neshtri was one of the Vedic priests, and the name may represent their ancient office, but is more probably some totem which has now been forgotten. The next section is Netaṁ, which is found among the Majhwārs. Of its meaning the Bādīs can give no explanation. Jhunjhariya is said by them to mean "a kind of bamboo." Next comes the Oika section. This is also found among the Majhwārs. The Bādīs have an absurd story that a Badi woman had a son by a Muhammadan, and after they had admitted him to tribal rights, they called him Oika "What? Who?" because they could not admit him to any regular section.

39 Their account of themselves is that they came from Garh Mandla, in the Central Provinces, with the Majhwārs, and there is nothing in their appearance and manners which makes it probable that they may really be of Gond descent, and may have been beggar priests who accompanied the Majhwārs when they emigrated along the hills towards the East.

40. The legend of their connection with the Majhwārs they tell in this way —Mahideva Paba once created four men. To one he gave the musical instrument known as nigdaman or "snake pipe," with which serpents are expelled, and his own drum, the damarn, whereby they might earn their living by playing and begging, to the second, he gave the musical instrument known as the kikari, by playing which he might support himself, to the third, he gave a loom, and he became a Panka, to the fourth, he gave the means of smelting iron, and he became an Agariya. This legend thus brings the Badis into contact with the Agariyas and Paukas who are certainly of Iravadian origin. The first man, according to the story, came to the Majhwirs, who fed him and appointed him to be the receiver of their alms. The sections are divided into three groups, of whom the Jaghat, Mam, and Jinjhariya intermarry, so do the Urū and Neli, and, lastly, the Natim and the Oika.

41. They have a tribal council under a hereditary chairman (mahlo), who arranges marriages, sanctions divorces and fines those who offend against caste rules. The fine ranges, according to the means of the offenders, from one and quarter to twenty rupees. If he fail to pay the fine, he is excommunicated for twelve years. The intermarriage of first-cousins is allowed, and they marry by preference their cousins on the mother's side.

42. Widow marriage and the levirate are allowed. There is no ceremony in widow marriage, except that the Mahlo admonishes them in the presence of the brethren to behave well to each other. In the marriage ceremony there is nothing peculiar, except that the father or mother of the bride washes the feet of the bridegroom, a rite which is known as nah chhorwa. When the bridegroom goes to fetch his bride, he carries a bow and arrows, and most part of the rite is done at the house of the bridegroom, possibly a survival of marriage by capture.

43. The Badis of Mirzapur cremate their dead, unless they are unmarried, in which case they are buried. The ritual is practically the same as that in force among the Majhwirs.

44. The religion of the Badis is largely made up of ancestor worship. They offer to them, at the Hoh, goats, cakes, and sweetmeats, as a propitiation. They say that formerly the Patāris officiated as their priests, but now do so no longer. They accept no services from Brāhmins. Their chief objects of worship, except their deceased ancestors, are Juālamukhi, Būrhī Mātā "the old mother" and Masen, the deity of the cremation ground. Juālamu- khī and Bārhi Mātā are worshipped on the seventh day of Sāwan. Juḍlamukhī receives a she-goat and cakes, Bārhi Mātā, a libation of milk and treacle mixed together. This worship is performed in the court yard of the house. They worship Masin at any time when trouble overtakes the household. At the last Census 1,020 persons recorded themselves as worshippers of Masin¹. They also regard their snake pipe (uḍḡṭaman) as a fetish. A piece of gromard is plastered, the instrument laid within it, and a white cock is sacrificed. Some spirits are also poured on the ground. Marī is worshipped when cholera appears in the village. Sh receives the sacrifice of a hog and a libation of spirits. When snakes appear in considerable numbers, they lay milk and parched rice at their holes. They observe only three festivals, the Sāwan, when they worship Juḍlamukhī and Bārhi Mātā, the ninth (nanū) of Chait, when there is a worship of Bārhi Mātā, and the Holi, when they worship the sainted dead. They particularly respect the cotton tree (semāl) which is the abode of Bhūtā. They swear on the head of their sons or by holding a pig's tail at the shrine of their deity. They have a special detestation for the Dom. They will not eat beef, but they use all the animals, birds, and fish which are eaten by the Majhwars and similar Dravidian races. They will not eat meat while the funeral rites of a member of the sub-caste are being performed. Wine is the only intoxicant they habitually use. They salute one another by the pāḍḗlagi form, and seniors give a blessing to their juniors. Only Khorwas and Doms will eat from their hands. They will eat Kachhī cooked by Ahirs and Majhwars. The women wear a sheet (sārī) nose rings, ear ornaments (tarhī) and arm ornaments, known as lahsanīya churīa and heavy anklets (paṭṭī).

45 The Bādī is a loafing beggar, who wanders about among the Majhwars and begs alms, playing on the nagḍaman pipe, the drum (damaru) and the cymbals (jāḍṇjā). The special business of the women is tattooing girls, and when marching through villages you will often hear a girl shrieking, and on enquiring the cause you will find her tied down on a bed, while her friends sing to encourage her to bear the pain and a Bādī woman operates on her arms, breasts or legs, with two or three English needles tied together with thread. The punctures are rubbed with a mixture of lampblack and milk. The best lampblack is produced from the smoke of the wood of the śālā tree.

¹ For Masin see I. Indraprastha to Poplar Religion and Folklore 54

46 This sub-caste is said to take its name from the Sanskrit, malaka-kira, "the maker of a coconut-oil vessel." Those in Mirzapur refer their origin to Lohârdaga in Chota Nagpur, and say that they were originally Sannars. They even now procure Brahmans and barbers from that part of the country whence they say they emigrated some two generations ago. They have their own tribal council known as kutumb bhâi or "the family of the brethrer," with a president (mahito). Offences against caste discipline are punished by fines usually amounting to twelve or thirteen rupees. This is spent in food and drink for members.

47. The prohibited degrees are first cousins on both sides. The usual age for marriage is twelve, or when the pair attain puberty. Marriages are arranged by the friends on both sides, but runaway matches appear not to be uncommon. The price of the bride is fixed by tribal custom at sixteen rupees. Polygamy is allowed, and the only privilege of the senior wife is that she alone is allowed to perform the worship of the family gods. Infidelity in women is forgiven on a fine being paid to the council. The council has the power of ordering divorce and a divorced woman can be remarried in the east by the sagî form, after she provides a dinner for the brethren. Widow marriage and the levirate are permitted under the usual conditions. Their domestic ceremonies are much the same as those of the Mujhwâre, among whom they live.

48 They are Hindus by religion and their tribal deities are Kali, Buria Mai and Bhairon. They worship Kali at the Navratra of Chait in the house chapel (deoghar) with an offering of a goat, and cakes, milk, and wine. Bhairon receives the same offering, but to him a blood offering is very seldom made. The women have no gods peculiar to themselves. They fast on Sundays and offer to the sun godling Suraj Narayan rice boiled with milk in a new earthen pot. They bow to him as he rises in the morning. They also bow to the new moon but have no special form of worship. They occasionally consult a Sakadwipi Brahman but the real tribal priest is the Mahito or headman. He acts for them at marriages and deaths. Most houses have a chapel (deoghar) with a mound of earth, on which are rude representatives of the tribal gods. They swear on the feet of Brahmans, on a leaf of the pîpal tree or tulasi leaf, by holding a cow's tail or a piece of copper. They worship Hariyâri Devi, "the goddess of greenery," as the protectress of crops.

49 They eat pork, mutton, goat's flesh, venison, fowls and fish

Before they eat, they offer a little food to Devi. No one but a Dombi will eat food cooked by them, and they will eat and drink from the hands of Kharwars and Majhwars.

50 Their chief occupation is making brass or pewter rings, boxes to hold the lime used in chewing betel (chunauti), and various ornaments used by women.

51 From Etah it is reported that among the Guâl Nats, when a child is born, the clansmen are invited to be present at the naming rite. Food is distributed, but the attendance of a Brâhman is unnecessary. Among the Kalahâz Nats, a Brâhman is sent for on the tenth day after birth, and he names the child, receiving in return a ration of uncooked grain (sidka).

52 There is a class of Nats known as Tasmabâz, who are so called because they practise one of the numerous games played by thumb-riggers in England, which was taught to them in 1802 by a British soldier.¹ The game is played thus — A strap is doubled and folded up in different shapes. The art is to put the stick in such a place that the strap (tasma) whence they derive their name, when unfolled, comes out double. They have an argot of their own of which the following are examples — When they are sitting on the road side and see a yokel coming, they say Dhurayt, Tara lé means "to begin to play," Asradé, "give back the money to this fellow or he will make a row," Hakere, "a European," bauriwala "a policeman," Hanswala, "a mounted officer," Thoa, "an official," Beli means "one of the gang informing." In one of the earliest accounts of the Bîzigar Nats, Captain Richardson² gives some specimens of their patois, most of which consist of mere inversions of syllables. Thus, Kâg (ag), "fire," nâns (bans), "bamboo," koâl (yâd), "remembrance," komar (umr), "age," naldâh (talâh), "search," Kindustân (Hindustân), "In ha," nagîr (saqîr) "beggar," and so on. The Bajaniya Nats of Mirzapur call mother jâ, son, dikaro, wife, biari, brother in law, binhewi, father in-law, hîro, mother-in-law, kau, elder brother's wife, shadai, father's sister, phoi. Their numerals are — one ek, two batînz, three lâna, four syirna, five pân, six sad, seven hâl, eight âtî, nine nan, ten dahad.

¹ Selection, Records of Government North Western Provinces I 312, 27

² Asiatic Researches VII, 451, 29

Distribution of Nils according to the Census of 1891

Districts	Brisban	Gull	Sogila	Kabuliro	Kalabaz	Kardulak	Mahawak	Yardah	Nalhar	Sapera	Others	Mubammalane	Total
Dehra Dun												28	28
Saharanpur											200	163	734
Muzaffarnagar										37	1016	101	1006
Meerut		442						37	226	16	556	702	1000
Bulandshahr		61									214	103	437
Algarh								6		12	279	27	789
Mathura								77	249	2	450	109	1115
Agra	16			6		88
Farrukhabad	378	25			207	1		2	30		710	176	1501
Mainpuri	98			22	63	96		2	148	17	788	62	1413
Etawah	16	189		06	32	145		7	134	211	737	108	1095
Etah	100				112	7			07		501	21	070

Distribution of Nats according to the Census of 1891—continued.

Districts.	British.	Gul.	Jogla.	Kabdm.	Kalabar.	Karnatak.	Malabar.	Mirdah.	Mithun.	Others.	Mithunwangs.	Total.
Bareilly	1,244	398	49	81	40	141	555	25	2,533
Bihar	306	1,210	151	1,670
Bodhan	71	816	285	15	169	8	92	937	392	2,823
Merdaabad	40	609	..	47	40	30	19	321	301	1,518
Shalishapur	551	2	62	..	339	69	1,406	49	2,505
Pilibid	302	..	91	..	155	73	565	303	1,429
Cawnpur	129	9	45	10	..	10	721	102	1,022
Fatehpur	101	270	456	837
Panda	105	195	300
Hamirpur	83	352	435
Adalabad	61	33	20	1,518	636	2,398
Jhalwa	19	..	33	252	334

Naumuslim (Nau, "new" Muslim—"Muhammadan").—A term applied to recent converts to Islâm. It is often particularly selected by fresh Râjput converts. These, however, in the lists of the last Census, are given under the head Râjput, such as the Lâl-khâni and similar tribes, who have been separately discussed. Many of them have only imperfectly adopted Islâm, and still retain several of their own tribal customs in connection with birth, death, marriage, inheritance, etc.

Distribution of the Naumusiim according to the Cens. of 1891—continued

Disasters	Ahir	Naaya	Bethman.	Chamdar	Kayadl	Keri	of	Others	Total
Gorakhpur	3	3		2	1		2	263	263
Basti	1706						62	19	2447
Amargarh		27					71	117	215
Tarhi							67	95	162
Lucknow	2						167	291	360
Unao	56			1		2		22	89
Madh Barch		4			10			137	160
Chhapar		4					155	266	425
Hardeo								945	945
Kheri			10	1		2		50	83
Farzabad							273	23	296
Gonda	1,145						174		2,519
Bahraich	2						1,626	1	1,834

Sultānpur	119	108	227
Partābgarh	801	..	5	34	840
Bārahbānī	3	..	3	2	8	26	97	252	301	301
Total	3,815	354	1,460	295	1,318	92	6,615	74,105	88,444

Nikumbh—A sept of Rājputs chiefly found in the Eastern districts. The word nikumbha in Sanskrit means the plant Croton Polyandrum, and is perhaps connected with kuribha, “a jar.” They are, according to General Cunningham,¹ of the race of the Kings of Ajudhya “from which sprang Mandhatri, Sagara, Bhagiratha, and Rāma. Kṛvalayaswa, the great-grandfather of Nikumbha, having conquered the demon Dhundhu, acquired the title of Dhundhumara, “slayer of Dhundhu” and gave his name to the country which is now known as Dhundhar or Jaypur. Here his descendants remained under the name of Nikumbhas, and to them is ascribed the foundation of most of the old forts and cities in Alwar and Northern Jaypur. Under Mandhatri and Sagara they came in collision with the Hahayas and Talajangas on the Nailada, where a branch of their race still held territory in the tenth century. Two inscriptions have been found in Khāndes,—one, dated A D 1153, and the other, in 1216 A D,—in the latter of which the reigning king is said to have been of the great Solar race from which “the king Nikumbha best of princes, sprang, in whose line Mandhata was famous, as well as Sagara, Bhagiratha and others.” In the former, the reigning prince is said to be “celebrated in the race—the illustrious Solar race, in which the Nikumbha was born whose descendant was Rama.” Of this race, as Colonel Tod² says, “to which celebrity attaches in all the genealogies, we can only discover that they were proprietors of the district of Mandalgarh prior to the Gahlots, that is, they preceded the Sisodiyas in Mewār.” But a writer in the *Rajputana Gazetteer*³ adds that “had his enquiries extended to Alwar, he would have discovered that local tradition declares the Nikumbhas to have been the earliest possessors of the fort and town of Alwar, and of the surrounding territory.” General Cunningham concludes from these data that ‘it would seem that the Nikumbhas were among the earliest Aryan settlers in Rajputana. During the lapse of many centuries they lost their central provinces, and at the time of the Muhammadan conquest only the two out lying districts of Khāndes on the South and Alwar on the North remained to them. The name of Nikumbha has been supplanted in Northern India by that of the Raghuvans or descendant of Raghu,’ one of the ancestors of Dasaratha and Rama. The Nikumbhas, who settled in this region, retained their early tribal name, while their brethren of Ajodhya assumed the name of Raghuvans¹."

¹ Archæological Reports XX 5 211

² Atlas I 8

³ III 1

2 In Hardoi¹ the Nikumbhas say that they came from Alwar about 1150 A.D. Another account makes them out to be a Kachhwāḥa or Sūrajāns clan which left Aril or Arwal in Jaipur and alternately served the Tomar Rāj of Delhi and the Rāthaur of Kanauj. They derive their name from the good work (nek kām) they did in the service of these monarchs. Others say that the name means "low caste" or "illegitimate." They were the original Thakur settlers in Farrukhābād² in the old Pargana of Pipargion, now included in Muhammadābād. The Azamgarh³ branch are said to have come from Jaunpur, sixteen or seventeen generations ago, being called in by a Brāhmaṇ to save his daughter from marriage with a Rājbar. The family became Muhammadan under the Sultans of Jaunpur. Those in Gorakhpur have the title of Sirnet, which they gained in the time of one of the Emperors of Delhi. Then, as now, they only raised the hand to the head, and never bowed, when making obeisance. The Emperor, annoyed at this apparent want of respect, had a sword placed across the doorway, and some of them, maintaining their position, were decapitated.⁴ The Rājās of Basti, Unwal, and Rudrapur, in the Gorakhpur District belong to this sept. Those in Ghāzipur trace their descent from Vikrama Deva, brother of Akhraj Deva, Rāja of Unwal, in Gorakhpur, who, when he came to bathe at the confluence of the Sarju and the Ganges, founded a colony there. They endeavour to keep up their connection with Gorakhpur, and nearly a hundred years ago their headman, Babu Rāghunath Singh, visited Unwal and planted groves and dug wells at his own expense.

3 In Farrukhābād they claim to belong to the Garga gotra, give girls to the Chandel, Bhadauriya Kachhwāḥa, Chauhan, and Pramari septs and marry brides from the Chamargaur, Rāthaur, Gaharwār, Sombansi, and Ujjaini. In Unāo they say they belong to the Bhāradwāja gotra, take wives from the Gaur, Dhakrū, Bais, and Janwar, and give girls to the Somlansi, Rāthaur and Chauhan

¹ Settlement Report 71

² Settlement Report, 13

³ Settlement Report 63

⁴ For a similar story see Brierley's Travels 151

Distribution of Nikumbh Râgputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT	Number	DISTRICT	Number
Farrukhâbâd . . .	899	Mirzapur . . .	53
Malâpur . . .	57	Jaunpur . . .	2,270
Etâwah . . .	10	Ghâzipur . . .	560
Etah . . .	32	Ballia . . .	3,806
Bareilly . . .	35	Gorakhpur . . .	50
Budâun . . .	41	Basti . . .	40
Morâdâbâd . . .	6	Azamgarh . . .	4 433
Shâhjâbâd . . .	755	Lucknow . . .	427
Filibhit . . .	114	Sitapur . . .	158
Bânda . . .	9	Hardoi . . .	3,098
Allahâbâd . . .	34	Kheri . . .	1,061
Jalaun . . .	46	Partibgarh . . .	3
Benares . . .	216	TOTAL . . .	18,001

Nimbârak — A Vaishnava order who have not been separately recorded at the last Census. The word means "the sun in a nîm tree," a curious designation, which is thus explained, "The founder of the sect, an ascetic by name Bhaskarâcharya, had invited a Bairâgi to dine with him, but unfortunately delayed to go and fetch his guest till after sunset. Now the holy man was forbidden by the rules of his order to eat except in the day-time, and was greatly afraid that he would be compelled to practise an unwelcome abstinence, but at the solicitation of his host the Sun god, Sûraj Narayan, descended upon the nîm tree, under which the repast was spread, and continued burning upon them till the claims of hunger were fully satisfied. Henceforth the saint was known by the name of Nimbarka or Nimbaditya. Their doctrines, so far as they are known, are of a very enlightened character. Thus their doctrine of salvation by faith is thought by many scholars to have been directly borrowed from the Gospel, while another article in their creed, which is less known but equally striking in its divergence from ordinary Hindû sentiment, is the continuance of conscious individual existence in a future world, when the highest reward of the good will be, not extinction, but in the enjoyment of the visible presence of the Divinity whom they have served upon earth, a state, therefore absolutely identical with Heaven, as our theologians define it. The one infinite and invisible God, who is the only real existence, is, they maintain, the only proper object of man's devout contemplation. But as the incomprehensible is utterly beyond the reach of human faculties, he is partially manifested for our behoof in the book of creation, in which natural objects are the letters of the universal alphabet, and express the sentiments of the Divine Author. A printed page, however, conveys no meaning to any one but a scholar, and is liable to be misunderstood even by him, so too with the book of the world. And thus it matters little whether Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa were ever real personages, the mysteries of divine love which they symbolise remain though the symbols disappear"¹

2 From enquiries made at Benares it appears that initiates are accepted from among Brahmanas, Kshatriyas, Vaisyas, and all Sūdras from whose hands high caste Hindus can take water. No regard is paid to social status, but no one is accepted who is addicted to drunkenness or incontinency, or who eats and drinks from the hands of persons of other creeds. The formula of initiation is Sri Kṛṣṇa sarnam meṃs, "I seek refuge in Sri Kṛṣṇa," or Sri mukund charanam sarnam prapadye, "O Sri Kṛṣṇa! give me refuge at thy feet," or Sri Kṛṣṇanayamah, "I salute thee Sri Kṛṣṇa." When the candidate is initiated he is taught to be truthful, to abide by the rules of the order, to be peaceful, to fast on the eleventh (ekādāśī) of the month, to trust in Sri Kṛṣṇa for all earthly and heavenly blessings, to avoid slandering and backbiting, to abstain from flesh and spirituous liquor, and to instruct the disciples.

3 They have a great respect for the Guru, whom they constantly visit, but he does not come to them unless specially invited. When a disciple visits his Guru, he brings a money present, and receives in return some consecrated food (prasāda). Those of the sect who are family men live at home, the ascetic class in monasteries. The latter are supplied with food and other necessaries of life by the Guru.

Niranjani —Classed in the last Census as an order of the Gaudians and found only in very small numbers in these Provinces. They are apparently a Punjab order, founded by Handāl, the cook of Guru Amar Dās (A D 1552-1571). Bāba Handāl worshipped God under the title of Niranjani "without collyrium or ointment, pure." According to Mr MacLagan¹ their chief claim to notice is their rejection of the ordinary burial customs of the Sikhs and Hindus. The memorial ceremony (Isrja karam) is not observed and the bones are not taken to the Ganges. They have special marriage rites of their own, and do not reverence the Brahmans. There is a Gurudwara or Darbār Salub of Bāba Handāl at Jandiyala in the Amritsar District, where the Niranjanis chiefly resort.

Distribution of the Niranjanis according to the Census of 1891

DISTRICTS	Number	DISTRICTS	Number
Dehra Dun	7	Jalanda	2
Hamirpur	6	Jaloun	13
Allahabad	1	Balranch	1
		TOTAL	29
Males			18
Females			11

Nirola —A class of Hill Brahmans who are considered to be somewhat lower in the social scale than the Sarolas and contain in themselves in a separate class a number of sub-divisions known generically as Dubhāgi, for they neither eat from the hands of Sarola or Gangari, nor intermarry with them. They have several gotras, such as Kasyapa, Angiras etc, and hence the name Nanagotri given to them. Their principal sub-divisions are Dhūsih Jamlogi, Batanwal, Kandhāri Baramwāl, Silwāl Poldi, Bilwal, Gaisāra Thalwāl Gugleta Kimoti Maikota Darmawara Dyoll; Kanlyal Thalāsi Phalāsi, Gatyāl Dhumakwāl, Sanwāl, Managwal, Bamola, Binjāl, and Gannu. Most of the same names are derived from some village. All intermarry with each other, and now follow agriculture, service, peddling, and providing for the wants of the pilgrims to Kedârnuṭh, who are regarded as their legitimate prey and shorn accordingly.¹

Niyâriya.—(Hindi niyâra, niṛāla "separate, distinct").—A refiner of precious metals, who washes the sweeping of the shops of goldsmiths and similar craftsmen, and extracts the gold and silver. The caste, such as it is, is purely professional and though some families have made it their hereditary occupation and call themselves Pathān or Shaikh Niyâriyas, many outsiders, such as weavers and others, practise the trade. Those to the east of the Province ascribe their origin to Kota and Bûndi, from whence they say they emigrated about a century or so ago. They are Muhammadans and practise the usual Musalmân ceremonies at birth, marriage, and death.

Mr Hoey² thus describes the way the trade is carried on in

Occupation

Lacknow "Having his agua fortis ready the Niyariya takes the melted mixture of gold and silver filings or chippings (rawa) and melts it in a crucible (ghariya), and when it is in a liquid state, he pours it from a height into a vessel containing water. This fall into water makes each large drop of liquid metal remain separate. Then all those pieces of metal are placed in a glass phial (âtish shîshi) prepared to resist the action of fire. These phials are like balloons covered with a coating of mud so as to leave only a circular portion of the glass exposed at one side for the use of the operator watching the action of the acid. The narrow neck of the balloon is of course turned up vertically to prevent the contents from spilling, and it is not closed up in any way. The mud used to cover the glass is called jîlmatti. Having placed one hundred tolas of metal drops in the phial the Niyariya pours upon it two hundred tolas of acid. He then places the phial on a charcoal fire, and when the action of the agua fortis and fire has become complete, the liquid is poured off. The gold lies in the bottom of the phial and the silver pastes off with the acid, which is poured into a mud vessel in which there are pieces of copper. The silver adheres to the copper and is scraped off and thrown again with the acid into another mud vessel in which there is no copper. The Niyâpiya then places a cloth strainer over an empty mud vessel and lays over the cloth a sheet of bamboo paper. He pours the silver and acid into this strainer and the silver settles on the paper the acid passing through the cloth into the vessel below. The silver is then further cleared by burning in an earthenware pan containing cold charcoal ashes ground to powder. In these ashes a lead is made about the size of the hollow of the hand. The silver is laid in this hollow with a piece of lead and covered over, charcoal fire is laid above the ashes and blown with a pair of bellows. This clears the silver completely. He also melts down old ornaments for silvermiths.

¹ Atkinson Hindustan Gazetteer III 23

² Mo. survey on trades and manufactures 150 &c.

Distribution of the Niyâpiya according to the Census of 1891

DISTRICTS	Hindus	Muham- madans	TOTAL
Sahâranpur	2		2
Muzaffarnagar	6	2	11
Meerut	18		18
Algarh	3		3
Ewal		1	1
Bjoor		7	7
Fatehpur		12	12
Hathur		35	35
Jâlsan		2	2
Benâes	33	15	15
Ballia			33
Gorakhpur		33	33
Fateh		2	2
Azamgarh		9	9
Taunsa		2	2
Lucknow		18	18
Sitapur		31	31
Faizabad		9	9
Gonda		4	4
Dahra ch		9	9
Solunpur		2	2
TOTAL	63	193	256

O

Ojha.—A word commonly derived from the Hindi ojh, "entrails," in the sense that this class of exorcisor, like the Roman Haruspex, inspects the entrails of the victim. This, it is hardly necessary to say, the Indian diviner never does. It is almost certainly a corruption of the Sanskrit upādhyaya, "a teacher." The term is used in various senses. In the first place it is used to designate the devil priest, or diviner of the aboriginal races, such as those of Dravidian origin. Some account of the position and practices of this functionary has been given in another place.¹ Next, it is applied to a special class of inferior Brāhman who perform the same duties for the more Hinduised races. Thirdly, it is used as a title of the Maithila Brāhman of the Eastern Districts. Mr. Sherring² is obviously in error in saying that "formerly the Ojha was always a Brāhman; but his profession has become so lucrative that sharp, clever, shrewd men in all the Hindu castes have taken to it." The process has certainly been quite the reverse of this, and the Ojha Brāhman is, without any doubt, a direct importation into Hinduism from the demonolatry of the aboriginal races, from which much of the coarse worship of Mahādeva and the Śāktas has been probably derived.

2 The Ojha Brāhman is a follower of the Tantras, the most debased form of modern Hinduism. "Whole Tantras," writes Sir M. Monier Williams,³ "teach nothing but various methods of making use of spells for acquiring magical power. Some give collections of charms for making people enamoured, for destroying enemies and rivals, for producing or preventing diseases, for curing blindness, for injuring crops. Others simply describe the most effectual modes of worshipping the Śāktas, Mahāvidyas, Mātṛas, Yoginis, Vātukas, or by whatever name the innumerable manifestations of Siva and his wife may be called. Others confine themselves to an explanation of the Yantras, Bijas, and Mudras (intertwining of the fingers) belonging to each manifestation, the places suited for the worship of each, the names of trees and plants sacred to each, or permeated by each, and the days of the year allotted to each. Some few touch on nearly every conceivable topic of human knowledge, and contain, here and there, really interesting matter." On account of these functions the Ojha is often known as Panchamahārī, because the conditions under which he performs the rites are represented in five words, each of which begins with ma-madya, "wine," māṃsa "meat," matsya, "fish," mudra, "mystic intertwining of the fingers," and matkhana, "sexual intercourse."

¹ Introduction to Popular Religion and Folk-lore, 96

² Hindu Castes, I, 37

³ Brāhmanism and Hinduism, 266

Distribution of Ojha Brāhman according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS	Numbers	DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Dehra Dūn . . .	16	Morādābād . . .	57
Sabāraṇpur . . .	18	Pilibūt . . .	4
Bulandshahr . . .	6	Cawnpur . . .	23
Aligarh . . .	403	Allahābād . . .	1
Agra . . .	371	Jhānsi . . .	12
Farukhābād . . .	41	Jālson . . .	1
Mainpuri . . .	6	Tarāi . . .	5
Etah . . .	89	Bahrāich . . .	5
Budāun . . .	103	TOTAL . . .	1,161

Orh.—A tribe recorded in the recent Census as a sub-caste of Koria and almost entirely confined to Bulandshahr and Aligarh. They appear to have their origin in Central India. "The Ods in Kāthiāwār are professional pond diggers. The yclaim to be Kshatriyas, the descendants of Bhāgīratha, son of Sāgara. According to the Rās Māla, Sindh Rāj sent for a number of Ods from Mālwa to dig the Sahasraling Lake at Pātan. He fell in love with one of them, called Jasma, and wished to take her to his palace. She declined and tried to make her escape. He pursued her, and, on overtaking her, slew several of the Ods. Jasma committed suicide, cursing the ling, and declaring that the lake should never hold water. The curse was removed by the sacrifice of Mayo Dhed. The Ods lead a wandering life, coming to Kāthiāwār for work, and returning to their houses in Mālwa and Central India during the rains."¹ In the Dakkhin they are known as Vadar.² Of the Ods in the

¹ Bombay Gazetteer, VIII, 158, 89

² Ibid., XV, 317, XVI 63; Indian Antiquary, III, 155.

Panjab Mr Ibbetson writes ¹ "The Od or Odh is a wandering tribe whose proper home appears to be Western Hindustân and Rajputana, at least the Ods of the Panjab usually hail from those parts. They will not, as a rule, take petty jobs, but prefer small contracts on roads, canals, railways and the like, or will build a house of abode and dig a tank or even a well. They are vagrants, wandering about with their families in search of employment on earthwork. They settle down in temporary reed huts on the edge of the work, the men dig the women carry the earth to the donkeys, which they always have with them, and the children drive the donkeys to the spoil bank. In the salt range tract they also quarry and carry stone, and in parts of the North-West Provinces they are said to be wandering pedlars. They eat anything and everything, and though not unfrequently Musalmans especially in the West, are always out caste. They have a speech of their own, called Odhi, of which I know nothing, but which is very probably nothing more than the ordinary dialect of the place of origin. They wear woollen clothes or at least one woollen garment. They claim descent from one Bhâgiratha, who vowed never to drink twice out of the same well, and so dug a fresh one every day till one day he dug down and down and never came up again. It is in mourning for him that they wear wool, and in imitation of him they bury their dead even when Hindu, though they marry by the Hindu ceremony. Till the re-appearance of Bhâgiratha they will, they say, remain out caste. They are said to claim Rajput or Kshatriya origin and to come from Mirwâr. They worship Rama and Siva. They are for a vagrant tribe, singularly free from all imputation of crime." In Bihâr they are described as a sub-caste of Lohiyas ²

2 There can be little doubt that the Orhs of these Provinces are of the same race as those already described. The North Western Provinces Branch ³ They have the same tradition of descent from Bhâgiratha, son of Raja Sîgara, and a woman named Gandharani. They are not allowed to marry in their own gotra or that of their mother or grandmother. They lead a settled life, and do not admit outsiders. Marriage is both infant and adult, and sexual license before marriage is neither recognised nor tolerated. Polyandry is not permitted but polygamy is allowed. They marry in the way common to all respectable Hindu castes, and the binding part of it is the perambulation (Ukharwar) of the pair round the sacred fire. Wilow marriage is allowed, and the ceremony is known as dharaticha. The wilow is allowed full freedom of choice, but she can marry by the levirate any of the younger brothers of her late husband. A wife can be divorced for infidelity, and such a woman can be married again by the dharaticha form.

¹ Panjab Ethnography para 53

Pisley Tribes and Castes II 159

² Mainly based on notes by M. Âtma Râm Head Master High School Mathura

3 They are usually Hindus of the Vaishnava sect. Their special Religion godlings are the Miy in Sāhū of Amroha in the Moridābād District whom they worship in any month except Muharram. Devis in Chait and Kuar, Masani of Karanās and Zāhur Pir in Sāwan and Bhādon, Kūnivala 'the god of the well' in Sāwan, and the ordinary Hindu gods. The offering to these godlings consists of sweetmeats (śalāsha) and coconuts, which the priests receive. They employ Brāhmins as their priests, and these are received on terms of equality with other Brāhmins. They burn their dead and leave their ashes on the burning ground. No ceremony, except the ordinary śrāddha in the month of Kuār, is performed.

4 Their occupation in Mathura is the weaving of coarse cloth Occupation (dobra) and most of them still follow this trade. But some of them have taken to agriculture and landholding and are dealers in grain and lend money and grain usually on very usurious rates in the villages.

5 They eat meat, fish and fowls and drink spirits. They Social rules abstain from the flesh of monkeys, cows, pork, and uncloven footed animals, crocodiles, snakes, vermin, and the leavings of other people. They are thus in these Provinces in a far higher grade than their vagrant brethren in the Panjāb.

Distribution of Orhs according to the Census of 1891

DISTRICTS	Numbers	DISTRICTS	Numbers
Dehra Dūn	41	Farrukhābād	6
Meerut	936	Etawah	1
Bulandshahr	5 876	Etah	86
Algarh	2966	Moradābād	60
Mathura	763	Jhānsi	2
Agā	15
		TOTAL	10751

Oswāl.¹—A wealthy and respectable trading class found in small numbers in these Provinces. They derive their name from the town of O-sa, Osi, Osiya or Ośanagar, in Mārwar.

2. The tribal legend runs as follows. About Sambat 222 (165

A D) there was a Rāja in Ośanagar who had Traditional origin no issue. He heard that an ascetic named

Sri Ratan Sūri was practising austerities in a jungle near the town, and he went to pay his respects to him. The ascetic told him that he would obtain his desires within a year, and accordingly within a year a son was born to him. The people of the town, fearing that the success of this prophecy would induce the Rāja to become a Jaina, excluded the disciples of Sri Ratan Sūri from the town. Then Osadevi, the guardian goddess of the place, told the saint to convince the Rāja by a miracle. So she took a small hank (pūni) of cotton and passed it along the back of the saint, when it immediately became a snake and bit Jaychand, the son of the Rāja, in the toe, while he was asleep beside his wife. Every means was tried to save his life, but he died. As his corpse was about to be burnt, Sri Ratan Sūri sent one of his disciples and stopped the cremation. Then the Rāja came with the body of his son and stood with hands clasped before the saint. He ordered that it was to be taken back to the place where the prince had been bitten, and that the princess was to lie down beside it as before. At midnight the snake returned and licked the bite, when the prince was restored to life. Then the Rāja, with all his court and people, became a Jaina. He and his family became the gotra now known as Srisimal, his servants that of Srimāl, and the Kshatriyas Oswāl. When the Brahmans of the place heard of these conversions, they asked the saint how they were to live, as all their clients had become Jainas. The saint directed that they should remain as their family priests and be known as Bhojak or "eaters." The Kshatriyas, who were thus converted, consisted of eighteen gotras. Subsequently other Kshatriyas were converted to Jainism by the Jaina priests, and in order to distinguish them from the original Oswāls, who were converted by Sri Ratan Sūri, they were called Khara Oswāl. In Sambat 1167 (1110 A D) Sri Jindat Suri, now known throughout the Jaina world as Dādaji, converted about a lakh of people into Oswāls, and no addition has been made to the caste since then. The Kachh tradition is somewhat different from this. "The Oswáls from Oa, Parinagar and Budhesar in Párkár say, that forced to leave Párkár on account of the misconduct of their chief, they went to Sindh, and finding the Musalmán element too strong, came to Kachh. They are of three sub-divisions Vísá, Dasa, and Pándia. The Dasas separated about three hundred years ago, wishing to introduce widow marriage. They afterwards gave up the practice, and within the last few years a small off-shoot introduced it and were named Pándias. Another story is that the Srimál King Desal allowed none but millionaires to live inside his city walls. One of the lucky citizens, a Srimáli Ványa, named Ruáá, had a brother named Sánd, whose fortune did not come up to the chief's standard of wealth. Forced to live outside, he asked his brother to help him to make up the required million, but meeting with no encouragement, he and Jay Chand, a discontented son of the king of Srimál, and many Srimális, Rajputs, and others, left Srimál, and settling in the town of Mandarav called it Osa or 'the frontier'. Among the settlers were Srimáli Ványas, Bhatti, Chanhan, Gahlot, God, Gohil, Hada, Jadav, Makwána, Parmár, Ráthaur, and Thár Rajputs, all devout worshippers of Siva. Ratan Sūri, a Jaina, by working miracles, converted Jay Chand, then king,¹ and all the settlers to the faith, and calling them Oswáls formed them into one caste. This is said to have happened in 166 A. D. Tod gives a different account of their origin, claiming them as descendants of the Solanki kings of Anhilwáda (942—1240) who gave up the sword for the till. Chiefly image worshipping Jains in religion, their family goddess is Satya in Párkár."²

¹ Based on enquiries at M. rapur and notes by Bābu Vishnu Chandra, Deputy Collector, a member of the tribe.

3. The annexed list gives the names of the exogamous gotras of the Oswals as found in the Eastern Districts

Tribal organization of these Provinces.

The Bombay tradition as to the division into Dasa and Bísá is as follows — "An Oswál widow, contrary to the rule against widow marriage, lived with a Jaina priest and had two sons by him. The sons grew rich and hit upon the following plan to force their caste fellows to overlook their illegitimate descent. At the town of Raya where there was a large number of Oswals, they made grand preparations for a dinner, and asked the Oswals, who, not knowing that the hosts were of illegitimate descent, attended the party in large numbers. A widow told her son the history of the men who were giving the feast, and he went before the assembled Oswals and begged of them to allow his mother to re-marry. They asked him why he had come there to make this request, and he told them the story of the birth of the two brothers who had invited them to dinner. On hearing that their hosts were out-caste, there was a sudden confusion among the guests. Those who had touched the food joined the two brothers, and were called Dasa, while those who had not touched the food remained pure or Bîsa. The terms seem to mean Bîsa or 'twenty to the score,' that is pure blood, and Dasa or 'ten in the score,' or half caste"¹

4 As already stated, the gotras or sections are exogamous. As stated from Benares the rule is that a man cannot marry in his own gotra, he cannot marry a girl whose father's or maternal grandfather's gotra is the same as that of his father or maternal grandfather. He cannot marry the elder sister of his deceased wife, but can marry her younger sister. There is no formula defining the prohibited degrees. Difference of religion or sect is no bar to marriage, as, for example, a Digambari Oswal, or worshipper of the naked idols, can marry a Svetambari girl, or one who worshipped the clothed idols, or a Jaina Oswal boy can marry a Vaishnava Oswal girl or vice versa. It is said that in South Western India an Oswal can marry in the Khandêwal, Porwal, and other similar tribes, the only condition being that both parties should be Jains.

5 In these Provinces the ceremony of betrothal is performed by sending the tîla, one or two rupees, with a coconut and sweetmeats. The betrothal generally takes place when the girl is between seven and eleven years of age. The consent of the parents of the boy and girl is invariably necessary, and the girl is not allowed any freedom before marriage. A betrothal can be annulled, but there is no rule for the repayment of the expenses incurred. With the seventh circuit round the sacred fire, the marriage is complete. As the Oswals are foreigners to these Provinces, the customs followed in Bombay may be quoted. "Boys are married between fifteen and twenty-five and girls between eight and fifteen. The boy's father, with from ten to fifty castemen, visits the girl and presents her with a silver ring worth four annas or one rupee. The girl's father treats the company to betel and her priest puts the silver ring on the girl's finger. The girl's father returns the visit, presenting the boy's younger brother with one or three rupees, and treats the guests to betel. Cocoanuts are served in the presence of both fathers, the priest fixes a lucky day for the marriage. Some days before the marriage, the boy's father presents the girl with ornaments, invitation cards are sent round, and the boy and the girl are rubbed with turmeric paste. The turmeric rubbing takes place, at least, a month before the marriage. A thread tinged with turmeric powder is cut in two and each of the pieces is passed through an iron ring and tied round a piece of lac bangle, and one of the threads is fastened to the girl's right foot and the other to the boy's right hand. The month between the turmeric rubbing and the marriage is a time of gaiety. The friends and relations of the boy and girl in turn send one of their household to the boy's or the girl's house. The messenger places a coconut and silver coin in the boy's and girl's hand and asks him or her to come to their house in the evening. After sunset the boy or girl is seated on horse-back with music, and a band of friends is taken to the entertainer's house, the procession being known as gadganer or 'entertaining the bridegroom or bride'. The house is brightly lighted, and carpets are spread in front on which the guests are seated. The women of the house and the guests take their seats in the verandah and sing Mārwarī songs. The women go on singing till the sister of the boy or the girl waves a light, and is presented with a coconut and a silver coin. On the marriage day the girl's priest goes to the boy's, and formally asks his family to the wedding. The bridegroom is seated on horse-back, and with music in front and a band of friends behind is taken to the temple of the bride's village Māruti. The marriage party leave the bridegroom at the temple and go to the bride's house, where her father welcomes them, and betel is served. The Brahman priest tells the bridegroom's father the lucky moment for the wedding, and the party return to the temple with music. When the lucky hour draws near, it generally falls when it is growing dusk, the bridegroom lays a packet of betel leaves, a nut, and a copper before the village Māruti, bows and starts on horse-back to the bride's house. On reaching the bride's booth, a stick is handed to the bridegroom, and he strikes with it at the entrance of the porch (a survival of marriage by capture), bows to the pictures of Ganpati, is presented by the bride's father with a turban worth from one to twenty-five rupees, and dismounts

¹ Bombay Gazetteer, XVI 45

"6 Until the lucky hour for the marriage the guests amuse themselves, watching dancing-girls in the marriage hall, or return home to take their food, while the bridegroom, with five or six of his men, steps into the house and bows to a betel nut Ganpati, lays before it sandal paste, rice, flowers, red powder, vermilion, and scented powder (abir), burns frankincense before it, waves lamps filled with clarified butter round it, and offers sugar. The pair are seated in a booth on a soft cushion laid on a carpet, and a Brâhman priest makes an altar of black earth, kindles the sacred fire (hom) on the altar, and drops into the fire clarified butter, grains of barley, and bits of sandal-wood. The pair look on in silence and are not allowed to move from the place until the fire worship is done. When the fire worship is over, the priest tells the pair to walk four times round the altar. Then comes the daughter-giving (kanyâddan), when the bride's father pours water on the bridegroom's hands with a money gift varying from one to one hundred rupees. The Brâhman priest is paid five to one hundred rupees, and the bridegroom takes the girl to his house with music and friends. At the boy's house, the pair again sit before the betel-nut Ganpati, which is set on a heap of rice, and their priest lays flowers and red powder before it. When the Ganpati worship is over, the bride's women take her home, and the first wedding day is ended. The bride's parents, who have fasted all day, dine with the bride when she comes back from her husband's house. No caste feast is given this day. Next morning, in the bride's house, a list is made of households to be asked to dine, and the list is given to the priest, who goes round to the houses named, ending at the bridegroom's. At noon the invitations are again sent through the priest as in the morning, and the bridegroom's party goes to the bride's, and is treated to a sumptuous dinner, with a party of the bride's friends and relations. The Brâhman priests cook and serve the guests with food, not allowing any of the guests to touch them, and themselves eating when the others are done. At night the guests are treated to a rich supper, and the party retire after betel is served. The third day passes like the second. On the fourth comes the cloth-presenting ceremony (phat), when the marriage party goes with music to the bride's. The bridegroom is seated on a seat somewhat higher than the rest, and the bride's friends and relations arrive. A low wooden stool is set before the bridegroom, and on the stool a bell metal dining dish marked with upright and crossed lines of vermillion. A metal cup is set in the dish, and a silver coin is dropped in the dish in the name of the family gods. The bride's father presents the bridegroom with as rich a dress and ornaments as he can afford, or at least with a cocoanut, and turbans are handed to his male friends. The bride's party throws red powder at the bridegroom's, who depart taking the pair with them "1

7 No ceremony is performed during pregnancy except for the first child, when the salmāsa or seventh month ceremony is performed. The mother goes to her father's house, where she is presented with a dress and sweetmeats and a feast is given. The midwife and servants attend the mother for twelve days after her accouchement. After the child is born its astrological horoscope (janampatrā) is prepared on the sixth day (chāḥālā), the mother and child bathe before sunrise, the child is for the first time dressed and decorated with ornaments, and the mother and child worship the Sun. On the twelfth day (barahi), mother and child bathe before sunrise and a feast is given. On the maswān, after a month, the mother and child visit her father and receive dresses and ornaments for the mother and clothes and toys for the child. The father is unclean during the twelve days after his wife's delivery, and is not permitted to worship the gods. In Bombay when a child is born, a little cold water is poured over it and close to it a metal plate is beaten with a rod (to scare off evil spirits). The navel cord is cut, and the woman is bathed in warm water. Some of them dig and others of them do not dig, the bath water hole in the lying in room. Those who do not dig the hole, bathe the child in a large and deep metal tray. The mother and child are laid on a cot under which an earthen jar with burning cow-dung cakes is placed. On the first and three following days the child is given a rag soaked in castor oil to suck. From the fourth the mother suckles the child, and is given to eat a pounded mixture of cummin seed and molasses mixed with clarified butter. During the first three days her diet is wheat flour boiled in clarified butter mixed with sugar, and from the fourth she eats rice and pulse with clarified butter. On the fifth day, a few among them worship the image of Sati placed on a stone slab, as among the Kunbis of the district, while, as a rule, all of them place sandal paste flowers, turmeric powder, vermilion and fruit with sweet food cooked in the house before an inkstand, reed pen and paper with or without an image of the goddess Satvāi. They say that the worship of the image of Satvāi is not a Mārwar custom, and the habit has been adopted by their women since they settled in Ahmadnagar. Lamps of dough filled with clarified butter are lighted and set before the goddess, or the pen, ink and paper, and in the place where the mother and child are bathed. These lamps are placed so that the child may not see them; if the child see the light, it is likely to fall sick. Unlike local castes they do not worship Satvāi on the twelfth day, nor do the child's aunts name it. A Brahman priest generally attends the naming on the thirteenth, and fixes the name after consulting his almanac. A cradle is hung in the lying-in room, and the mother's female friends and kinswomen are called and formally cradle and name the child.¹

Birth ceremonies

8 The adult dead are cremated, bodies of children are thrown into a river, and, where this is not possible, are buried. The ashes are thrown into a river, and, where it is not possible to do this, they are left on the place where the body was burnt. When the corpse is placed on the pyre, the nearest relative of the deceased, who acts as chief mourner, puts five pieces of firewood on the corpse and with fire in his left hand goes three times round the pyre and then sets it alight. When the burning progresses he cracks the skull to allow the soul to escape (lāpāl-frīya). No ceremonies are performed for the propitiation of ancestors in general childless ancestors or those who die by a violent death. They do not perform the śrāddha, no person officiates as priest at the cremation, nor are any prayers repeated. In Bombay "after death the body is placed on a low stool, bathed and dressed in new clothes. A woman who dies before her husband is dressed in a new robe, her hair is decked with flowers and her body with ornaments. These honours are not shown to a widow's body. Poor Oswāls lay their dead on a bamboo ladder like bier, like that used by Brāhmans. The rich use a raised bamboo seat with a bamboo covering like an English umbrella fastened to it, and ornamented with small parti-coloured flags decked with tinsel. When the bier is used, the body is laid on the back with the face to the sky. If the canopied chair (mâd) is used, the body is kept in a sitting position. Two dough balls with a copper coin in each are tied in a piece of cloth, which is put in a bell-metal cup and tied on the bosom of the dead. The funeral party starts for the burial ground with the bier on their shoulders, the barber going before, carrying a fire pot, and the chief mourner following with the others who are all men. Unlike local Brahmanic Hindus, they have no rule against the fire pot carrier turning round and looking back. This rule is intended to bar the return of the ghost from the burial ground. As they draw near the burning ground they halt, lay down the body, and throw the dough balls to the left and right. They go to the nearest water, strip the body of its ornaments, and hand them to the next of kin, when he returns home. The pile is made ready and the body is laid on it, and the fire is kindled by the son or nearest relation. When the body is burnt, they bathe in the nearest water and go home. Neither the bearers nor the mourners are held to be impure, and nothing is done to clean the house or the spot where the death took place. Next day the mourning family, both men and women, visit Parasnâth's temple, and lay one ser of Indian millet before the god, bow to him, and go home. They do not gather the ashes of the dead, nor do they perform any mind-rites, nor keep the yearly death day. Their only observance is that, on some day between the twelfth day after the death and at the end of a year, the caste people are treated to a dinner of sweetmeats and the dead are forgotten." ¹

9 Some Oswâls are Svetambari and others Digambari Jainas

Religion	Svetambari Oswals worship Sri Jindat Sûrji, Sri Kinsal Sûrji, Sri Chand Sûrji,
----------	---

who were Achâryas or high priests of Kartargachhia and famous by the name of Dadaji. Their footprints are generally worshipped, and the offering is taken by the Bhojak already described, or in their absence, by any Brahman. The offering consists of fruits, sweetmeats, uncooked rice, and money. Some also, in imitation of the Hindus, amongst whom they live, worship snakes and trees like the pîpal. They all worship the sun and fire, particularly at marriage. The chief places of pilgrimage are Sikharji, the Parasnâth Hill in Hazâribâgh District, Champapur in the Blâgalpur District, Pavapur in Bihâr, Benares, Ajundhya, Sudhachâl in Blav-nagar, Girvar Hill in Jânagarh, Kesarayaji in Udaypur, and Mount Abu. Such pilgrimages are usually undertaken in the cold season. For ceremonial purposes Bhojaks are employed, and, in their absence, Brâhman of any tribe. The real priests are the Jaina Jatis. In temples are worshipped the twenty-four Arhat or Tirthankari. Adinâtha or Rishabhânâtha, Ajitanâtha, Sambhannâtha, Abhinandananâtha, Sumatinâtha, Padmaprabhannâtha, Suparswânâtha, Chandraprabha, Suvidhanâtha or Pushpadanta, Sitalanatha, Sri Ansanâtha, Vasupadya, Vimalanâtha, Anantanâtha, Dharmânâtha, Santanâtha, Kânthunâtha, Aranâtha, Mallinâtha, Munisuvrata, Neminâtha, Naminâtha, Pârasnâtha, Vardhamana or Mâharira. Of course no animal sacrifice of any kind is allowed in the Jaina temples. The Svetambari Oswâls read the Kalpa Sûtra and pray and fast during the eight days of Parjûshana, which commences on the twelfth or thirteenth of Bhâdon. The Digambari Oswâls observe the Parjûshana for ten days, commencing from the twentieth of Bhâdon. This is their greatest religious festival. Nine days in Chait and Kârt are set apart for the nataâdra mantra or the Jaina gâyatri, beginning from the twenty-first of each of these months. During this time prayer and fasting are performed. On the twenty-first of Karttik in each year, they fast and worship Gyan or true knowledge, on thirtieth Kârttik, tenth of Pûs, and eighteenth Baisâkh, the deities are carried about on cars. On the nineteenth and twentieth of Chait, women, whose husbands are alive, worship Gangaur, as Hindus do, and entertain their friends. Similar feasts of joy are held on the eighteenth of Sawan. This is known as Tij. Like Hindus they observe the Holi, Rakshabandhan, Dasmi, Divâli, Basant panchmi. The winter solstice, Makar Sânkranti, commonly known as the Khicharwâr, is also observed. There is no regular propitiation of the dead, but those who have long lived under Hindu influence believe in ghosts and use the ordinary means of repelling them.

10 Animal food is universally prohibited. Like other respectable Hindus, they will not touch Doms, Social rules.

Bhangis, and similar menial castes. They follow the usual Hindu tribes regarding food and family intercourse. When they salute each other, they raise the right hand. Brâhman and Jatis are saluted with joined hands. Elders and Brahman return the salute with the astis and Jatis say in return Dharma lâbh. In Bombay "they neither eat flesh nor drink liquor on pain of loss of caste. On the second, fifth, eighth, and eleventh of each lunar fortnight, they do not eat vegetable. Even on other days few eat onions or garlic. Most men take a pill of opium in the morning and at noon after food. They shave the head except three knots, one on the crown, and one above each ear, a practice which has given them the name of Trishendi, or "three knotted."

The eighty-four sections of the Oswāls

Thatha.	Bachbāwat	Vaid	Sikhāwat
Barhiya	Chhorāwat.	Eora	Mirich
Sethiya	Darhiwāl	Bothara	Palecha.
Lorha	Kumāt.	Jhārag	Ulencha
Djga	Rampuriya	Rawāni	Jhovarh
Kejar	Daftari	Bl andāri	Lembu
Parakh	Sekhāni	Bhaneāl.	Tānk
Kodhari	Bhātera	Sihāni	Tikuliya.
Dugarh.	Monot	Chaurariya	Dosi
Asuiya.	Guguliya	Sāer	Brahmacharya.
Nunāwat	Lokar	Katāri.	Kachbab
Seth	Khater	Sraāl.	Gandha.
Palāwat	Bur	Sesimāl	Jhajani
Sacheti	Bhuteriya	Sing	Chautāliya.
Hināwat.	Picha.	Pital ya	Bhurant
Surāna	Vinayahiya.	Dugaliya	Rauswāsi
Thajer	Kochar	Mauhata	Marori.
Kukara.	Goriya	Parāni	Dadha.
Dhapiya	Djambukh	Medi	Rankā.
Dhamāwat	Pagariya	Napharan	Phopbariya
Barariya.	Dudheriya	Rādāsani	Dugar

Distribution of the Oswāls according to the Census of 1891

DISTRICTS	Numbers	DISTRICTS	Numbers
Dehra Dun . . .	6	Algarh . . .	19
Sahāranpur . . .	16	Mathura . . .	21
Muzaffarnagar . . .	4	Agra	102
Meerut	1	Farrukhābād . . .	2
Dolandahar	16	Etāwah	31

Distribution of Palliwâl Banyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS	HINDUS	JAINAS	TOTAL.
Meerut	2	2
Bulandshahr	1	5	6
Aligarh	156	399	555
Mathura	154	281	435
Agra	93	1,609	1,707
Farrukhâbâd	29	351	380
Etah	33	33
Cawnpur	114	114
Jâlaun	8	...	8
Lalitpur	3	...	3
Gorakhpur	405	..	405
Lucknow	4	4
Bârabanki	-	57	57
Total	854	2 855	3,709

Palliawâl —A local tribe of Brâhmanas who, like the Banyasub-caste of the same name, take their title from Pâli, the commercial city of Mârâwâr. They belong to the Kanaujiya division of the Pancha Gauda. Colonel Tod had a theory that as they worshipped, among other things, the bridle of a horse, they were survivors of the priests of the Palli Seythian race. They are said to give a bride-price at marriage. They appear all over Upper India as money-lenders, merchants and cultivators. A great misfortune fell upon them in 1156 A D when Sivaji, the founder of the Râthaur dynasty and son of the King of Kanauj, passed Pâli on his return from a pilgrimage to Dwârîka. The Brâhmanas of Pâli sent a deputation to him asking for protection from the two evils which prevailed—the Minas of the Aravalli range and the lions. Sivaji relieved them from both, but the opportunity to acquire land was too good to be lost, and on the festival of the Holi he put the leading Brâhmanas to death and seized Pâli.¹

Distribution of Palliwál Bráhmans according to the Census of 1891

DISTRICTS	Numbers	DISTRICTS	Numbers
Salámpur	1	Farrukhábád	6
Muzaffargarh	61	Fateh . .	48
Meerut .	397	Lawnpur . .	67
Bulandshahr .	213	Jáláun .	102
Aligarh	151	Salitpur .	6
Mathura	313	Jaunpur	122
Agra	111	TOTAL	1 634

Palwar, Paliwar—A sept of Rájputs confined almost altogether to the Gorakhpur Division and the Faizábad District. According to the Faizábad tradition,¹ one Prithuviráj Deo, Sombansi, known also as Mur Deo or Bhúr Deo, came from the village of Pálh in the district of Hardoi in 1213 A. D. and took up his residence in the village of Rannupur, where he accepted service under the Bhars. From his native place he and his descendants gave up the name of Sombansi and adopted that of Palwar. He is said to have formed a connection with a fairy (deokanya) or a witch (dūn), and by her he had a son Haribar Deo, who formed attachments with an Ahir and a Bharin, of whom there are multitudinous descendants in the Azamgarh District. These descendants have become known as Damyas or “children of the witch” and Bantaryas or “dwellers in the woods.” Tradition says that on one occasion, soon after the birth of her son this lady of the woods was engaged in the homely office of baking cakes, when her infant, which lay some paces off, began to cry. She had either to neglect the baby or the cakes, when, as her husband arrived, he saw his fairy wife assume supernatural and gigantic proportions so as to allow of the laking and nursing to go on together. When she saw she was discovered she disappeared for ever, leaving the child as a legacy to her astonished husband.

2 According to another version of the legend the founder of the sept was one Patrāj of the Sombansi tribe, who is said to have

Distribution of Palliwâl Banyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS	Hindus	Jainas	TOTAL
Meerut	2	2
Bulandshahr	1	5	6
Aligarh	156	397	553
Mathura	104	281	435
Agra	98	1,609	1,707
Farrukhâbâd	29	351	380
Etah		33	33
Cawnpur		114	114
Jâlaun	8		8
Lalitpur	3	..	3
Gorakhpur	403		403
Lucknow		4	4
Dârsbanki		57	57
Total	851	2 805	3 709

Palliawâl—A local tribe of Brahmans who, like the Banyas sub-caste of the same name, take their title from Pah, the commercial city of Mârwar. They belong to the Kananjya division of the Pancha Gauda. Colonel Tod had a theory that as they worshipped, among other things, the bridle of a horse, they were survivors of the priests of the Palli Scythian race. They are said to give a bride-price at marriage. They appear all over Upper India as money-lenders, merchants and cultivators. A great misfortune fell upon them in 1155 A. D. when Sivaji, the founder of the Râshtrak dynasty and son of the King of Kananj, passed Pah on his return from a pilgrimage to Dwârka. The Brâhmans of Pah sent a deputation to him asking for protection from the two evils which prevailed—the Minas of the Aravalli range and the lions. Sivaji relieved them from both, but the opportunity to acquire land was too good to be lost, and on the festival of the Holi he put the leading Brahmans to death and seized Pah.¹

migrated from the neighbourhood of Delhi to Bandipur in Faizâbâd, where he made himself famous in his contests with the Râjbhars. He had four wives of different castes—a Râjput, an Ahîr, a Bhar and one whose caste is unknown. Their descendants were the Palwârs, Alurîniya, Bharîniya and Dainiya.¹

3 In a third version they claim a connection with Sandî-Pâli, which the Sombansîs of that place deny. On this the Palwârs change ground and refer their origin to Palî near Delhi, or to a village of that name in the Partâhgarh District, which is likely enough, as that is one of the chief seats of the Sombansî sept in the present day.²

4 Some interest has been taken in the tribe on account of the Chaurâsî or group of eighty-four villages which Sir H. M. Elliot attributed to them in the Gorakhpur District. On this Mr. Carnegie writes³—"Sir H. M. Elliot, in his extraordinary article in his Supplemental Glossary on Chaurâsî, speaks of a collection of eighty-four villages in Pargana Anaula (should be Bhawapîr) in the Gorakhpur District, where their possessions, which have been mostly confiscated for their proceedings in 1857, are said by the tribe to have commenced with eighty-four bîghas of land and soon to have swelled into eighty-four full villages. But the fact is the whole of the Gorakhpur, Faizabad and Azamgarh Palwârs spring from one common ancestor. The system of reckoning by Chaurâsî and Bîyahîsî, so much dwelt on by Sir H. M. Elliot, is uncommon in this part of Oudh—in fact few natives understand it, but the number 49 seems with these very Palwars to have a special charm. For instance, they talk of unchâs los kî bhat, which means that on the occasion of ceremonial gatherings of the tribe to commemorate a birth, marriage or death, all the members inhabiting a circle of 49 los, which area is supposed to represent their proprietary possessions, are invited to attend and eat the bread of sociability. Of these, however, the Surhurpur (Bandipur) branches are debarred from eating and drinking with the tribe by reason of illegitimacy, and Atrahîya branch because it is stained with blood. Members of these branches on such occasions are obliged to content themselves with having dry rations served out to them in lieu of cooked viands. The absurdity of the former of these exclusions, and of the system is generally, is forcibly illustrated by the following instance: male of the Surharpur illegitimate branch and another of the legitimate branch both married into the orthodox Rāj Kumār family of the Rāja of Dera, and thereafter both branches were admitted to the Rāja's social board. Both parties then eat and drink with the Rāja, but they still will not eat and drink with each other; and they thus remain a living confutation of the homological axiom that things that are equal to the same thing are equal to each other. Uchās kos ki Kumak is another common expression with these people, which means that the proprietors of an area of 49 kos were wont in the king's time to make common cause in opposing the aggressions of the Meopur faction the Rāj Kumārs and all others."

¹ Census Report A. W. P., 1865 II, 112, 27

² Census Report 200

³ Faizâbâd Settlement Report, 206, 27

6. The turbulence of the sept in Gorakhpur during the Mutiny led to the confiscation of nearly all their possessions, and they have now fallen on evil days and possess little rank or influence.

6. In Faizābād the Palwārs give brides to the Garghansi, Sārājansi, Chandel, Bachgoti, Bais and Chauhān septs. In Azamgarh they claim to belong to the Bhāṭigava gotra; take brides from the Jais, Rāthaur, Bisen, Chauhān, Raghubansi, Donwār and Chandol septs; and marry their daughters to members of the Sārājans, Kallans, Rāj Kumār, Raghubansi, Sirnet and Chandrabansi septs.

Distribution of Palwār Rājputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS	Number.
Agra . . .	29	Azamgarh . . .	7,664
Jālaun . . .	5	Kheri . . .	1,200
Jaunpur . . .	11	Faizābād . . .	5,587
Ghāziपुर . . .	50	Sultānpur . . .	177
Gorakhpur . . .	3,576	Bārahanki . . .	14
Basti . . .	231
		TOTAL . . .	18,340

Panka, Panika.—A low weaving and watchman tribe in South Mirzapur. They are the same people who are known in Bengal as Pān, Panwa, Paur, Pāb, Panika, Chūk, Chūk Baraik, Ganda, Mahato, Sawāsi or Tinti. In Mirzapur they are known as Panka, of caste generally, is forcibly illustrated by the following instance: A female of the Sarharpur illegitimate branch and another of the Birhar legitimate branch both married into the orthodox Rāj Kumār family of the Rāja of Dera, and thereafter both branches were alike admitted to the Rāja's social board. Both parties then eat and drink with the Rāja, but they still will not eat and drink with each other; and they thus remain a living confutation of the mathematical axiom that things that are equal to the same thing are equal to each other. Uchās kos ki Lumak is another common expression with these people, which means that the proprietors within an area of 49 kos were wont in the king's time to make common cause in opposing the aggressions of the Meopur faction of the Rāj Kumārs and all others."

PANKA.

5. The turbulence of the sept in Gorakhpur during the Mutiny led to the confiscation of nearly all their possessions, and they have now fallen on evil days and possess little rank or influence.

6. In Faizābād the Palwārs give brides to the Garghansi, Sūraj-bansi, Chandel, Bachgoti, Bais and Chauhān septs. In Azamgarh they claim to belong to the Bhāngava gotra; take brides from the Bais, Rāthani, Bisen, Chanhān, Raghubansi, Donwār and Chandel septs; and marry their daughters to members of the Sūrajbans, Kallhans, Rāj Kumār, Raghubansi, Sirnet and Chandrabansi septs.

Distribution of Palwār Rājputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number	DISTRICTS	Number.
'Agra . . .	29	Azamgarh . . .	7,661
Jalau . . .	5	Kheri . . .	1,206
Jaunpur . . .	11	Faizābād . . .	5,587
Ghāzipur . . .	80	Sultānpūr . . .	177
Gorakhpur . . .	3,376	Bārabankā . . .	11
East . . .	231	TOTAL . . .	18,380

Panka, Panika.—A low weaving and watchman tribe in South Mirzapur. They are the same people who are known in Bengal as Pān, Panwa, Paur, Pib, Panika, Chik, Chik Baraik, Ganda, Mahato, Sawāsi or Tinti. In Mirzapur they are known as Panka, kutumāyat or kabildari.¹ There is no permanent president, but at each meeting the most respectable person present takes the chair.

3 Differences of wealth or social position (except the practice of degrading employments, such as shoe-making) are not a bar to marriage. Polygamy is permitted, but they can seldom afford more than one wife. If there are more wives than one, the head wife alone is mistress of the household and shares in the family worship. If an unmarried girl is detected in an intrigue with a clansman, her parents have to give a tribal feast and she is then restored to caste. But if her lover be an outsider, she is permanently expelled. The bride price amounts to five rupees in cash and two maunds of rice and pulse. The rules as to physical defects in bride and bridegroom agree with those of the allied tribes.

4 Divorce is permitted in case of adultery in either party or if either eat with a low caste person like a Dom, Chamār or Dusadh. But the intention to divorce must be announced before, and sanctioned by, the tribal council.

Widow marriage and the levirate

5 Widow marriage and the levirate are permitted on the usual conditions.

Success on adoption and relationship

6 The rules on these subjects correspond in every way with those of the Majhwars.

7 The woman is delivered on a cot and is attended by a Chamār midwife, who cuts the cord and buries it under the cot. The woman receives no food for two days. On the third she gets rice and cakes made of pulse and pumpkin (konbrauri). They have the usual sixth day (chhathi) and twelfth day (barahi) ceremonies, after which the woman is clean and resumes her household work. A husband does not cohabit with his wife for three or four months after her confinement.

Birth customs

8 The only ceremony in adoption is the announcement of the fact and the exchange of mutual promises before the leader of the council.

Adoption ceremony

9 The marriage ceremonies do not appreciably differ from those of the cognate tribes. The betrothal is clinched by the boy's father sending to the bride's

Marriage ceremonies

¹The first name means "family council," Sanskrit kutumba—the household; the latter an importation from the Arab qabīl—kindred.

house five rupees and three or five sers of coarse sugar (gur) This is called neg bharna Three days before marriage is the matmangar ceremony (see *Bhuiya*¹) When the procession reaches the door of the bride, the relatives of the bridegroom distribute betel nut among those of the bride, who return the compliment After the procession returns to the reception place (janwansa), the bride's mother goes there with five sers of coarse sugar and three tooth brushes (datuan) with these the bridegroom has to clean his teeth and she makes him smell the sugar His father then sends the "offering" (charhaua) to the bride—two sheets (sara) and five sets of sugar At the actual ceremony the bride's sister fills the hands of the bride and bridegroom with rice and dried mangoes Then the bridegroom rubs some red lead (sundur) on the branch of the cotton tree (semal) fixed up in the marriage shed (mandaro) and then smears it over the nose, forehead and parting of the bride's hair This is the binding part of the ceremony After this they are taken into the retiring room (lohabar) (for the significance of which, see *Mayhwar*²) There the bridegroom has again to smell some sugar On returning home there is the usual feast, and a day or two afterwards the bride and bridegroom go to 'drown the nuptial jars' (kalsa) in a neighbouring stream, and on their way home they worship every pipal and banyan tree they meet, and rub red lead on their trunks This form of marriage is called charhaua

10 The form of marrying a widow by sagat is very simple.

Marriage by sagat.

The man has to pay three rupees as the bride price to her relations, then he brings her home, and as she enters the house he rubs red lead on the parting of her hair and puts palm leaf ornaments (tarki) in her ears On that day he feasts the clansmen

11 Unmarried children and people who die of epidemic disease are buried others are cremated³ When the Death ceremonies mourners return home they pour a little oil on the ground and sit down and console the chief mourner He goes to the riverside and fixes a bundle of reed grass into the ground, which he and the women of the household water every day at noon until the obsequies are completed.¹ The death impurity lasts ten days, when the obsequies are concluded by a tribal feast.

¹ Para. 14.

² Para. 15.

³ This is the custom also in Bengal. See Jungle Life 323, vol. Fusley Tribes and Castes II 12

12. They profess a sort of bastard Hinduism. They are much afraid of evil spirits (bhūt) which commonly reside in mahua, pīpal or banyan trees.

Religion.

These are periodically propitiated by offerings of goats and fowls performed by the Baiga. They do not employ Brāhmins in any of their religious ceremonies. Their two great festivals are the Holi and Dasami (Dasahra); but they in no way follow Hindu usage on these festivals, and offer a burnt offering to the marriage god Dulha Deva, who is represented by a piece of rudely cut stone on a mud platform. His worship is performed by the Baiga. They observe the Nāgpanchami festival, but do not appear to have as is the case in Bengal, any special worship of the snake as the ancestor of the tribe.²

13. They believe that old wells, streams and trees are haunted by evil spirits. The Baiga raises a regular yearly subscription to provide for their worship; and offers to them young pigs, fowls and goats, with a burnt offering (hom) of sugar and butter. The tenth day of the second half of the month of Kuār is devoted to the worship of the dead, to whom food and a burnt sacrifice are offered. On the tenth day after a man or woman dies a young pig is sacrificed. At the end of the proceedings they invoke the spirits of the dead in a low voice in these words—"Now live for ever in this house and do not trouble our children." Every day till the tenth day they lay out food at night for the dead along the road by which the corpse was taken to cremation or burial. They are constantly in the fear of the spirits of the dead, and whenever they have a bad dream or a nightmare they offer a burnt sacrifice (hom) to them.

Demonology and ancestor worship.

14. Women tattoo themselves on the arms in some conventional pattern. If they fail to do this, a woman in the next life is reborn as a Turk or the wife of a Muhammadan, on whom they look with special abhorrence. They have the usual omens. They swear by putting a piece of iron in a drinking vessel of water which is held in the hand. No

Various superstitions.

¹ On the significance of this ceremony, see Bijdr, para. 14.

² Bisley, Tribes and Castes, II, 159.

Panka will violate such an oath. They have a firm belief in witchcraft, and think that a witch can kill a man by looking at him, hence all women suspected of witchcraft are carefully avoided. They do not believe that a witch can turn meat into a mass of blood and maggots merely by looking at it. Most diseases are due to demoniacal influence, which is treated by the Baiga. They have a firm belief in the Evil Eye which is avoided by the use of sundry amulets.

15 They regard the cow as Lakshmi, the goddess of wealth,

Social customs and will not eat beef. Any one eating it is put out of caste. Besides the flesh of the cow and buffalo they will not eat the horse, ass, camel, jackal, lizard or crocodile. They eat pigs, fowls, fish and all kinds of jungle game. The men eat first and women after them. Some men wear a special religious necklace (kanthi), and these, when they eat, throw a little bread and water on the ground as an offering to the earth goddess Dharti Māta. They use liquor and tobacco freely. They salute elders in the form pañlagi, and the reply is asli, or a blessing. They respect their women, who work at spinning thread which the men weave. They are very hospitable to clansmen but fear strangers. They will not touch a Chamar or Dharkhar, nor the wife of the younger brother. The father-in-law and mother-in-law of a married couple do not touch or speak to each other.¹ They will eat food cooked by a Brahman and no one else. None but a Dom or Ghasiya will touch their leavings.

16 They work as weavers and village watchmen. The loom is known as donga. The main kinds of cloth which they make are the darap, charas and bhagna. The darap is a woman's thick sheet worth about two rupees. The charas is a loin cloth for men like the Hindu dhoti; the bhagna a small cloth worn under the loin cloth only by Majhwar women, for which they get a fancy price.² They often work up cotton into cloth for their customers, and for weaving a dhoti receive three sers of kodo or sauwān millet. Their dress presents no peculiarities. The women wear pewter anklets (pañri), glass wrist bangles (chāñri), a wristlet (berawa) and a nose ring (nath). As may be anticipated from their customs, they are regarded as pure village menials and their social status is very low.

Occupation

¹ See Lubbock On the Origin of Civilization II 297

² See Majhwar para 60

Pankhiya.—A peculiar class of Muhammadans who are found in the low lands (Mâdir) of the Ganges in Shâhjahânpur and some of the neighbouring districts. They profess to be strict Muhammadans, but transgress the law of Islâm by eating turtles, crocodiles and other animals usually regarded as forbidden food. They appear to be a fairly well-to-do cultivating class, and their hamlets show a stock of cattle, goats and poultry much larger than that possessed by ordinary Hindu cultivators.¹

Distribution of the Pankhiyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS	Number	DISTRICTS	Number.
Cawnpur . . .	65	Ghazipur . . .	6
Allâhâbâd . .	41	Basti	550
Benares . . .	8	Azamgarh . . .	111
Jaunpur . . .	132
		TOTAL .	913

Pant, Panth—(Sanskrit pathin, "a path in morals or religion") a class of Hill Brahmins, who ascribe their origin to Mahârashtra or the Mathâta country. They belong to the Bhâradwâj, Parâsara and Vasishtha gotras and the Madhyandîya sâkha. They say that some twenty-one generations ago their ancestor Jayadeva came to Kumaun. In the tenth generation his descendants divided into four branches, named after Sarma, Srinâtha, Nathu and Bhandâs. Sarma became a physician, Srinâtha, the spiritual preceptor of the Râja, Nathu, a teacher of Paurânîk theology, and Bhandas, a soldier. The last-mentioned acquired in camp and court a habit of eating flesh like his Khasiya soldiers, and his descendants retained the custom. But the others confined themselves to vegetable food, as their present representatives do, and even oblige their wives, who come from flesh-eating clans like the Tiwâris and Joshis, to do the same. The Bhâradwaja Pantis intermarry with Tripâthis or Tiwâris, Joshis and Pânres. They rarely marry Pantis of the two other gotras, and their customs and habits and manner of eating and drinking resemble those of other

¹ Imperial Gazetteer, XII, 347, 57

Khairagarh, where they are landlords and cultivators. They have in course of time become dispossessed of many of their estates, larding them for less substantial wealth to Gûjars and Râhmans.

† In Farrukhâbâd¹ they trace their colonization to Râja Sindpal Sinh, who is said to have settled the Pargana of Amritpur by the favour of the Râja of Khor. His sons quarrelled with, and were expelled by, Partit Râs, the Kâyasth minister of the Râja, but one son Basant Sâh returned and recovered his estate. The Bulandshahr² branch say that they came from Nâgpur and Ujjain after their expulsion by Shahâb-ud din Ghorî.

§ The Khudmatiyas, Barwâr, or Chobdar are said to be an inferior branch of them, descended from a low caste woman. No high caste Hindu eats food or drinks water touched by them. According to the Ain-i Akbarî³ a thousand men of the sept guarded the environs of the palace of Akbar, and Abul Fazl says of them — “The caste to which they belong was notorious for highway robbery and former rulers were not able to keep them in check. The effective orders of His Majesty have led them to honesty, they are now famous for their trustworthiness. They were formerly called Mawis. Their chief has received the title of Khidmat Râs. Being near the person of His Majesty, he lives in affluence. His men are called Khidmatiyas.”

¶ In Unao⁴ the Panwârs have two colonies in different parts of the district. In the Morawan Pargana they occupy about thirty villages. They say that their ancestor, Narhar Sinh Panwar, distinguished himself in the siege of Chuthor under Akbar Shâh and received a grant of this tract of land as a reward for his services. He founded the village of Narhar Chah, which is called after his name. These Panwars must have been once a powerful clan, but the great encroachment of the Bais reduced them to complete insignificance, and deprived them of a large portion of their land. In Sitapur,⁵ also, they fix the time of their emigration in the time of Akbar. In Gorakhpur⁶ they are said to have driven the Bisens out of Bhagalpur, whence the latter retired to Majhauk. In Ghazipur they trace their origin to Jhansi and they

¹ Settlement Report 13

Census Report 1865 I Appendix 17

² Blochmann I “30

³ Elliott Chronicles 55

⁴ Settlement Report 57

⁵ Buchanan Eastern Ind a II, 365

are known by the name of Ujjaini. The head of the sept in that part of the country is the Rāja of Dumrāon who traces his descent in eighty-six generations from Vikramaditya. The great Rāja Śāladitya, who at the beginning of the seventh century overcame the Gupta dynasty was king of Mālwa and no doubt belonged to this clan.¹ In Jhānsi they are regarded as a shade higher than the Bundelas and in consequence all powerful chiefs take their daughters in marriage. "They are needy and as proud as Lucifer and will always ek out their living by robbery if they can."² In Mahona of the Lucknow District they have, from their connection with the Delhi Court, adopted some Musalmān practices, such as fastening their coats to the left and paying reverence to the tāziās emblematical of the martyrs Hasan and Husain, which are carried about at the Muharram, and they have before their residence a large stone which they hold in almost sacred reverence. They say that they brought it from Delhi and that it is their symbol of right to their estates which were granted to them by the Delhi Emperor, he is said to have enjoined them to take it as the foundation for their future settlement. Whenever a new Rāja succeeds, he places upon it an offering of flowers, sweetmeats, and a few rupees.³

7. In Jālaun the Panwārs give brides to the Bais, Bhālē Sultān, Nikumbh, and Abhan, and marry girls of the Chauhān, Kachhwāha, Panhar, Sengar, Bhadauriya, Rathaur, and Chandel septs. In Unāo they marry their daughters to Dikhlits beyond the Ganges, Ganrs, Chandels, Kachhwāhas, Chauhāns, Hāras, and Rāthours; and their sons to Chauhān and Dikhit girls.

Distribution of the Panwār Rājputs according to the Census of 1891

DISTRICTS	Hindus	Musalmān- dān	TOTAL
Dehra Dūn	2,265		2,265
Sahāraṇpur	251	313	564
Muzaffarnagar	128	486	623
Meerut	1,794	...	1,794

¹ Oldham, Memorandum 156 sq.

² Sleeman, Journey through Oudh, I, L. V.

³ Settlement Report LXI

Hill Brâhman. Their favourite object of worship is the Vaishnava Sâkti¹

Panwâr — A noted sept of Râjputs who in name represent the ancient Pramâra race. Colonel Tod² calls them the "most potent of the Agnikula or fire races." "The world is the Pramâr's" is an ancient saying, and Nauhot Marusthal signifies the nine divisions into which the country from the Satlaj to the ocean was divided among them. By another theory they represent the Pauravas, the famous race which, after the time of Alexander, was predominant in Râjasthân under the name of Pramâra. They are mentioned in the Veda and Mahabhârata, where the first kings of the Lunar race are represented as being Pauravas who reigned over the realms included between the Upper Ganges and the Jmna. They are the Porouaro or Poruaro of Ptolemy³. General Cunningham,⁴ on the contrary, would identify these last with the Parihâr sept. The popular account of them is that they were the third in order of creation from the Agnikunda, and were hence called Pramâra or "first strikers."

2. In Bombay the Pramâras, who are called a detachment from the Agnikula tribes of Mount Abu, like the others under the same fictional appellation, are, according to Dr. J. Wilson,⁵ descendants of Kulis. Their traditions centre round the State of Dhâr, the Raja of which is still a member of the sept. In remembrance of their heroic defence of the capital they repeat the verse—

Jahân Puâr tahîn Dhâr hat,

Aur Dhâr jahân Puâr,

Dhar bina Puâr nahîn,

Aur nahîn Puâr bina Dhâr⁶

"Where the Puâr is there is Dhâr, and Dhar is where the Puâr is, there is no Dhâr without the Puâr and no Puâr without Dhâr." They claim that the great Rajas Bhoja and Vikramaditya of Ujjain were members of their sept, and allege that they were kings of Mâlwa for ten generations after Râja Vikramaditya. The Puâr dynasty of Mâlwa ended with Jaychand, then Jîtpâl estab-

¹ Atkinson Himalaya Gazetteer, III, 431

² Annals, I, 98, 102

³ McCrindle Indian Antiquary XIII, 363

⁴ Archæological Reports IX, 53, 54

⁵ Indian Antiquary III, 227

⁶ Tod loc cit II, 463

ished the Tomar dynasty which lasted one hundred and forty-two years and was succeeded by the Chauhâns for one hundred and sixty seven years¹ They have now a poor reputation in Central India, because they are said to have intermarried with Marhatta Sûdras and the poorest Rajput chief would disdain to eat with them or give them his daughter in marriage² Colonel Tod asserts that the famous Mauryas were the Mori, a branch of the Pramara clan, which occupied Chithor in the eighth century Their gotras or sections in Rajputâna are Delat, Kalât, Doding, Kheyat and Pokhariya, of which the Delat is the most numerous³ The men of the Pokhariya section like to be called Rawat, but are generally called Mer The chief men are called Gameti They are an industrious race, generally taller and better built than the Chanhân Minas The Kalats will not give their daughters in marriage to this section, but will take wives from them, and they intermarry freely with the Hindu Chîtas and Barârs and the other Mer clans Their customs are the same as the Chanhân Minas

3 In these provinces their expulsion from Ujjain under their leader Mitra Sen is ascribed to the attack

The Panwars of the North-Western Prov inces and Oudh of the Muhammadans under Shahab-ud-din

Ghor The story⁴ runs that Raja Bijaypâl of Bayana wished to bring about an alliance between his daughter and the son of Raja Sindpâl of Ujjain, and with this view sent an embassy with presents Sindpal, however, objecting to the proposed marriage, ordered the ambassadors to return but his son Lakhansî meeting them on his own account accepted the proposal, and in spite of his father's objections, brought back the party to Bayana and there the marriage took place Villages were then assigned to the prince and princess for maintenance These, however, proving insufficient, the daughter was sent back to her father some little time after to solicit a further grant But all that Sindpal gave his daughter was a sword, which she was instructed to deliver to her husband Lakhansî He then interpreting the gift, whether rightly or wrongly, to mean that he should extend his possessions by its means, seized and added to his territories fourteen hundred villages, giving them over to his followers At various times they moved northwards their first halting place being the Pargana of

¹ Malcolm Central India I 26

² Ibid I 130

³ Rajputana Gazetteer II 45

⁴ Census Report North Western Provinces 1863 B Appendix 67 87

Khairagarh, where they are landlords and cultivators. They have in course of time become dispossessed of many of their estates, bartering them for less substantial wealth to Gûjars and Brāhmins.

4 In Farrukhābād¹ they trace their colonization to Raja Sindpal Sih, who is said to have settled the Pargana of Amritpur by the favour of the Rājā of Khor. His sons quarrelled with, and were expelled by, Partit Rāt, the Kayasth minister of the Rājā, but one son Basant Sih returned and recovered his estate. The Bulandshahr² branch say that they came from Nagpur and Ujjain after their expulsion by Shahab-ud dīn Ghorī.

5 The Khidmatīya Barwar, or Chobdār are said to be an inferior branch of them, descended from a low caste woman. No high-caste Hindu eats food or drinks water touched by them. According to the Ain-i Akbarī³ a thousand men of the sept guarded the environs of the palace of Akbar, and Abul Fazl says of them — "The caste to which they belong was notorious for highway robbery and former rulers were not able to keep them in check. The effective orders of His Majesty have led them to honesty, they are now famous for their trustworthiness. They were formerly called Mawis. Their chief has received the title of Khidmat Rae. Being near the person of His Majesty, he lives in affluence. His men are called Khidmatīyas."

6 In Unao⁴ the Panwārs have two colonies in different parts of the district. In the Morawan Pargana they occupy about thirty villages. They say that their ancestor, Narhar Sinh Panwar, distinguished himself in the siege of Chithor under Akbar Shāh and received a grant of this tract of land as a reward for his services. He founded the village of Narhar Chak which is called after his name. These Panwars must have been once a powerful clan, but the great encroachment of the Bāis reduced them to complete insignificance, and deprived them of a large portion of their land. In Sitapur,⁵ also they fix the time of their emigration in the time of Akbar. In Gorakhpur⁶ they are said to have driven the Bisens out of Bhagalpur whence the latter retired to Majhaul. In Ghazipur they trace their origin to Jhansi and they

¹ Settlement Report 13

² Census Report 1865 I Appendix 17

³ Blochmann I 75

⁴ Elliott Chronicles 55

⁵ Settlement Report 57

⁶ Buchanan Eastern India II 365

are known by the name of Ujjaini. The head of the sept in that part of the country is the Râja of Damrâon who traces his descent in eighty-six generations from Vikramaditya. The great Râja Sâladitya, who at the beginning of the seventh century overcame the Gupta dynasty was king of Mâlwa and no doubt belonged to this clan.¹ In Jhânsi they are regarded as a shade higher than the Bundelas and in consequence all powerful chiefs take their daughters in marriage. "They are needy and as proud as Lucifer and will always eke out their living by robbery if they can."² In Mahona of the Lucknow District they have, from their connection with the Delhi Court, adopted some Musalmân practices, such as fastening their coats to the left and paying reverence to the fatwas emblematical of the martyrs Hasan and Husain, which are carried about at the Muharram, and they have before their residence a large stone which they hold in almost sacred reverence. They say that they brought it from Delhi and that it is their symbol of right to their estates which were granted to them by the Delhi Emperor, he is said to have enjoined them to take it as the foundation for their future settlement. Whenever a new Râja succeeds, he places upon it an offering of flowers, sweetmeats, and a few rupees.³

7 In Jalaun the Panwars give brides to the Bais, Bhâlê Sultân, Nikumbh, and Ahlan, and marry girls of the Chauhân, Kachhwâha, Parihar, Sengar, Bhadauriya, Rathaur, and Chandel septs. In Unâo they marry their daughters to Dikbits beyond the Ganges, Gaur, Chandels, Kachhwahas, Chauhans, Hârâs, and Râthaur, and their sons to Chauhân and Dikbit girls.

Distribution of the Panwar Râjputs according to the Census of 1891

DISTRICTS	Hindus	Mohammadans	TOTAL
Dehra Dûn . . .	2,265		2,265
Salâranpur . . .	251	313	564
Muzaffarnagar . . .	136	486	622
Meerut . . .	1,794	...	1,794

¹ Oldham, Memorandum 1 56 et

² Sleeman Journey through Oudh I, L V.

³ Settlement Report LXI

Distribution of the Panwâr Rajputs according to the Census of 1901—contd.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muhamma- dans.	TOTAL.
Etahandshahr	1,513	553	2,066
Aligarh	617	...	817
Mathura	693	2,656	3,369
Agra	7,366	12	7,378
Farrakhabâd	2,091	8	3,002
Mainpuri	819	...	819
Etawah	601	...	601
Etah	624	6	629
Bareilly	213	...	213
Bijnor	239	...	239
Budâun	778	123	901
Norâdâbâd	2,035	...	2,035
Shâhjahânpur	4,669	...	4,669
Pilibhit	310	...	310
Cawnpur	4,669	41	4,650
Fatehpur	1,263	...	1,263
Lânda	2,399	29	2,327
Hamirpur	1,240	10	1,250
Allahâbâd	517	...	517
Jhânsi	1,045	5	1,050
Jâlaun	671	...	671
Lalitpur	3,241	1	3,243
Benares	465	83	553
Mirzapur	126	...	126
Jaunpur	4,103	7	4,112
Ghâzipur	691	783	1,474
Ballia	2,343	191	2,439

Distribution of the Panwâr Rājputs according to the Census of 1891—contd.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muhamma- dans.	TOTAL.
Unlandshahr	1,613	553	2,066
Aligarh	817	...	817
Mathura	683	2,606	3,309
Agra	7,366	12	7,378
Farrukhābād	2,004	8	2,002
Mainpuri	810	...	810
Etāwah	604	...	604
Etah	624	5	629
Barilly	243	...	243
Bijnor	233	...	233
Budāun	778	123	901
Morādābād	2,035	...	2,035
Shāhjahānpur	4,609	...	4,609
Pilibhit	310	...	310
Cawnpur	4,609	41	4,650
Fatehpur	1,263	...	1,263
Etāla	2,209	28	2,327
Hamirpur	1,240	10	1,250
Allahābād	517	...	517
Jhānsi	1,045	5	1,050
Jālsun	671	...	671
Lalitpur	3,241	1	3,242
Benares	465	83	553
Mirzapur	126	...	126
Jaunpur	4,105	7	4,112
Ghāzipur	691	783	1,474
Ballia	2,213	191	2,439

PARAHIYA

Distribution of the Panwâr Rājputs according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muhamma- dans.	TOTAL.
Gorakhpur	3,267	125	3,392
Basti	1,370	7,366	8,736
Azamgarh.	1,465	1,417	2,882
Tarāi	3,214	...	3,214
Lucknow	2,664	1	2,665
Unāo	2,110	95	2,205
Rāō Bareilly.	1,097	61	1,158
Sitapur	2,845	687	3,532
Hardoi	6,113	...	6,113
Kheri	9	348	357
Faizābād	3,265	313	3,578
Gonda	336	...	336
Bahrāich	91	23	114
Sultānpur	705	73	778
Parīābgarh	190	...	190
Bārābanki.	1,103	22	1,125
TOTAL	80,563	15,803	96,366

Parahiya, Parhaiya.—A Dravidian tribe found in small numbers in Pargana Dudhi in Mirzapur. The word is said to mean, in Gondi, "burners of the jungle." Bishop Caldwell¹ writes:—"It has been said that the name Pareiya or Pariah is synonymous with that of the Pahariyas (from paḥār, 'a hill') a race of mountaineers, properly called Malers, inhabiting the Rājmahāl Hills in Bengal: and hence it is argued that the Pareiyas may be considered, like the Pahariyas, as a race of non-Aryan, non-Dravidian aborigines. It is an error, however, to suppose that there is any connection between these two names. The word Pariah, properly Pareiya, denotes not a mountaineer, but a drumroer, a word regularly derived from para, 'a drum,' especially the great drum used at funerals. The name Pareiya is, in fact, the name of a hereditary occupation, the Pareiyas being the people who are generally employed at festivals, and especially at funerals, as drummers." Dr. Oppert¹ considers it means a mountaineer, from the Dravidian root para, "a hill."

¹ Comparative Grammar, 519.

1. Those I have seen in Duddi are a very wild looking set of men, about five feet three inches in height. Appearance not as robust as the Kurwas, but still a strong, active race. Some have very scanty beards and moustaches. Some shave the front of the head, while others keep all their hair and leave it entirely unkempt. Colonel Dalton noticed considerable variety of features among them. Some, he thinks, might be classed as Negro, others as Mongolian. The former were dark and prognathous, the latter bright copper coloured, with flat, broad faces, and slightly oblique eyes.² He thinks that they are closely akin to the Bhuiyars.³ Mr. Forbes also notices the variety of type among them, and remarks that they are so athletic and powerful, that "as strong as a Parahya" has passed into a proverb.⁴ In Mirzapur they are renowned for their swiftness in running.

2. The members of the tribe in Mirzapur fix their headquarters in the villages of Jhansi and Uspar, Traditions of origin in Sarguja, close to the British frontier. They have emigrated from there in quite recent times, and the emigration is still going on. They still go to their original home at the festivals of the Ramnavami and Dasahra. There is no temple there, but in one of the chief men's houses there is a shrine to Devi called "the House of God" (deoghar). There they worship the goddess, by each man throwing a little butter and resin (dhūp) on the fire as a burnt offering (hom). After that, butter cakes (pūri) are offered and consumed by the worshippers.

¹ Original Inhabitants of Bharatavarsa 3^o sq.

² Descriptive Ethnology 131.

³ Ibid. 231, note.

⁴ Settlement Report on Palamau quoted in Hunter Statistical Account of Bengal XVI 297.

3 The Mirzapur people profess ignorance of the totemistic Tribal organisation and rules of exogamy sects recorded by Mr Risley.¹ They must marry within the tribe and the only prohibited degrees are that a man cannot marry his daughter to the son of his brother or cannot marry himself into the family of his children. These are perhaps about the most simple rules of exogamy to be found in any tribe in these Provinces. They have a tribal council called "the brotherhood" (bhaiyari). The rules do not differ from those in the allied tribes.
 The usual punishment is a two days' feast to the brethren. Adultery, or fornication with a person of another caste, is punished with excommunication for five years. The president (Mahto) is a hereditary permanent official. If any one disobeys his orders, he is tied up and beaten with rods. Polygamy is recognized, but as a rule a man does not take a second wife unless the first is barren.²
 The senior wife rules the household and shares in the family worship. If she is not treated with respect, they believe that the family goes to ruin. The wives live apart in separate huts. Poly-andry is forbidden. Intertribal incontinence in women is easily condoned, but young women are kept shut up at night and not allowed to go about alone. In the case of intrigues in the tribe, the offenders are brought before the council, and are not allowed to sit on the tribal mat (lat) until they feed the clansmen. Men or women found misbehaving themselves with a stranger to the tribe are permanently expelled. The marriage age is 12 for both boys and girls. The marriage is arranged by the boy's father under the advice of the Mahto. The bride-price is one measure (pasari) of sānwān millet, five rupees in cash, and five cakes. This is the invariable rate fixed by tribal custom.

4 Divorce is easily managed. Either husband or wife can Divorce leave the other whenever they please. If the wife leaves her husband without due cause shown to the satisfaction of the Mahto, her relations are obliged to refund the bride-price. In ordinary cases of divorce, all that is necessary is to inform the Mahto. A divorced man or woman can re-marry. In the case of illicit connections, the children follow the caste of the father, but a son of a Parahiya by a strange woman will not be admitted to full caste rights.

¹ Tribes and Castes II., App. 118

² Westermarck History of Human Marriage, 438

5. Widow marriage and the levirate are permitted as among Widow marriage and the levirate. Bhuihârs (para. 8). The same is the case Adoption. with adoption, (ibid., para. 9).

6. The custom of Beena marriage (gharjaiyân) prevails. In Beena marriage. this case the man who serves for his bride acquires no rights from his father-in-law but inherits his father's estate.

7. All they know about succession is that a man's sons are his Succession. heirs, and that the eldest son gets somewhat in excess of the others, as the Mahto directs.
 If there are no sons, the nearest agnates inherit.

8. No Parahiya can name more than three generations in the Relationship. ascending line—father, paternal grandfather, and maternal grandfather,—and sons and daughters and grand children in the descending line.

9. The birth ceremonies agree closely with those of the allied Birth ceremonies. tribes like the Bhuihârs (para. 12), but they are attended by the Chamâin mid-wife, who buries the cord under a tree in the jungle. On the third day at the exact time the child was born, the Dhobi comes and carries off the dirty clothes to the wash, and the baby is washed by the midwife. Then the mother is bathed and dressed in clean clothes by the husband's sister (nanad), who also re-plasters the delivery-room. Though this is done on the third day, they know it as the sixth-day ceremony (chhatthi). A month after the Dhobi again takes away the mother's clothes and washes them. The mother bathes, throws away all the earthen vessels, which were in the delivery-room (saur), and changes the water pots in the house.
 Then she cooks for the family and is pure. The extension of the period of impurity, as compared with those in the cognate tribes, marks the strong dread felt by primitive races of the menstrual and parturition discharges.¹

10. There is no actual ceremony at puberty, but the initiation of Puberty ceremony. the child into caste is represented by the ear-boring (kauchhedan), which takes place in the fifth year, and after which the child must conform to caste regulations in the matter of food.

¹ On this question, see Majhwâr, para. 35.

11. The marriage ceremony closely follows that of the Bhuihars, and there is a clear survival of marriage by capture in the custom by which, when he comes to be married, the bridegroom marches straight into the inner room and drags out the bride to the marriage shed, while she carries on a pretended struggle with him. The binding portion of the ceremony is the marking of the forehead of the pair by the bride's father with a mixture of curds and rice. There appears to be no trace of the Palaman custom by which oil or ghî is poured over the head and allowed to run down the face.¹ If the betrothal is annulled by either side the bride-price must be returned.

12. Unmarried persons and those who die of small-pox or cholera are buried: all others are cremated. As among all the other Dravidian races, the dead are buried with the head to the South.² When a corpse is burnt, the feet are placed to the South. The ashes are floated away (serwa dena) by being thrown into a running stream on the day of cremation. The final ceremony, the "tenth" (daskân), is done on any day which may be convenient. On that day all shave and wash their clothes, and when they come to the house of the dead man, each one touches with his finger a mixture of oil and turmeric; after which they eat together, and the death impurity ceases.

13. At this "tenth day" ceremony they kill and eat a goat in the name of the deceased, that he may not return and trouble them. When the dead are neglected, they return in evil dreams and bring death and disease. They are propitiated by offering a sacrifice under a adl (shorea robusta) tree. In the month of Aghan, there is a special worship of the dead, when a cock and goat are sacrificed in their honour. The worshippers cower down in abject terror and murmur "Fathers! protect our children and our cattle."

14. They pretend to be Hindus, but their worship is of a non-Aryan type. They worship the Dih, or collective village gods, and a female deity, Sairi

¹ Forbes, Settlement Report, quoted in the Statistical Account of Bengal, XVI., 297.

² Dalton, Descriptive Ethnology, 128.

Devi¹ with offerings of fowls, goats, and a burnt sacrifice (hom). The time for this worship is on a Monday in the months of Sâwan or Baisâkh. They have no temple, but offer the sacrifice under a sâl (shorea robusta) tree. At the same time they worship deceased ancestors and propitiate Mother Earth (Dharti Mâta) by pouring a little milk or liquor on the ground. They do not seem to have any knowledge of Gohet, which is one of their local gods in Lohârdaga.² Any one may make this offering. In each house there is a small mud platform dedicated to the sainted dead. The village gods and Sairi Devi are worshipped at the ordinary village shrine under a tree in the jungle. In all cases of sacrifice, the worshippers consume the offering. They have three festivals—the Sâwani, Baisâkhi, and Phagua or Holi. On the two first, so called from the months in which they take place, they offer a burnt sacrifice (hom), a goat, and a fowl to the local gods and Sairi Devi. These festivals are held in the light fortnight of the month and usually on a Monday or Friday: but Monday is more usual. At the Phagua, they do not burn the Holi, but, as at the other festivals, drink and practise rude debauchery. They believe that evil spirits (bhûl, pret) live in the makua, sâl, and pîpal trees: at such trees they make offerings and will not cut them or climb their branches. They also believe in a vague way that Devi lives in certain hills and mountains where they occasionally offer a goat. For this animal they have a peculiar respect.³ Before they sacrifice a goat, they feed the animal on a few grains of rice, and then pour water on its head before sacrifice. This is called "the worship of the goat" (lakra mijan). Sometimes, after worship, the goat is released in the jungles as a scape-goat, and this is particularly done when they worship Devi during an epidemic of small-pox.

15. Their omens, oaths, and ordeals are the same as those of cognate tribes like the Bhuiyars and Bhuiyas.

Omens, oaths, ordeals.

Dreams are interpreted by the senior man of

¹ The common explanation of her name is because "she moves about" (Arabic saif), but this is very improbable. She may be connected with Sewanriya, who appears to be a deity of boundaries; see Bhufâdar, para. 16.

² Ruxley, Tribes and Castes, II., 161.

³ It is curious that the Bengal Parahiya have a tradition that their tribe formerly held sheep and deer sacred, and used the dung of these animals to smear floors with, as they now use cowdung.—Dalton, Descriptive Ethnology, 131, note.

They were possibly the tribal totems. The Mirzapur Parahiya seem to have transferred this feeling of respect to the goat.

the family, and always imply the displeasure of the sainted dead. Disease always comes from them, and in such cases an Ojha is consulted. Of the Evil Eye, they assert they have no knowledge.

16. Beef is not eaten, but they admit that this rule is of modern growth and in imitation of their Hindu neighbours. They will not touch a Dom, Chamar, Ghasiya, or Dharkar. They will not eat food cooked by any one but a clansman. Women are not allowed to eat pork or to join in worship. A man cannot touch his younger brother's wife, and connection with her is considered the worst form of incest. They will not mention by name the dead, nor their fathers, nor the headman of the tribe.

17. They will not eat beef or the flesh of the horse, camel, ass, alligator, monkey, lizard, or snake. Any other kind of meat is allowed. Women are not allowed to eat pork. The men eat before the women, and they have no ceremony at meals. They do not smoke the water-pipe (hugga), but use those made of leaves known as changis,¹ and chew the dry tobacco (surlis). They use dhung and liquor freely, which are believed to keep off malaria, but habitual drunkenness is considered discreditable. They salute each other in the form known as palagi, but they are now beginning to do the ordinary salām to strangers and superiors. Generally, in the presence of a superior, they stand on one leg, take off what answers to a turban, and bow the head to the ground. They speak a sort of broken Hindi much intermixed with Mundari and Gondi. They rank fairly high among these jungle tribes, having much the same status as the Chero, Chamars, Dharkars, and Doms will eat food cooked by them, and they pride themselves on their abstinence from beef as a mark of respectability. Kalwars drink with them, but will not take water from their hands. The men wear earrings of gold or brass in both ears; the women pewter anklets (pairis) and brass wristlets (churris). They now do a little cultivation, but quite recently they never stored any grain, ploughing and parching the crop as it got ripe. They usually pay about three rupees per annum for as much land (tora) as they can cultivate with a single plough. They make a living by cutting and selling wood and bamboos, and by collecting and exchanging forest produce, such as lac, silk-cocoons, and various dyes, fibres, etc. But they are n miserable people, living in little huts, apart from each other, along the hills, and with little clan feeling or effective tribal organization.

¹ See Koria para 13.

18. The following account of their brethren just across the border in Palamanu may be quoted:—"In their habits and customs they present a curious mixture of the Hindu and the Aborigines:

The Palamanu Parahiyas.

they are certainly not pure Mandas : they may be Kurkus, who are a branch of the Muada family. They differ so much in personal appearance, that it is difficult to assign them any distinct physiological features. I have seen many of them that might almost be mistaken for Korwas, while others are a tall, fair, handsome race of men, with features rather Aryan than otherwise, and so athletic and powerful, that the expression 'as strong as a Parhaiya' has almost passed into a proverb : these last have none of the Negrito stamp about them. Many of them are to be found residing in the plains, but they generally choose the more jungly villages, and reside in a separate hamlet (toia) : some are good cultivators, but the majority, like the Brijiyas, live in the hill ranges, and roam about from spur to spur, clearing small patches of ground, and cultivating a few hardy crops : they also bring down to the plains honey, beeswax, resia, lac, and other jungle products, which they barter for grain, salt, tobacco, and cloth. Most of them have Brāhmans as priests, and employ the barber at marriages. Hindus of every class will drink water from their hands, and eat any food, but rice, that has been cooked by them : and, strange to say, they carry their Hindu prejudices so far that they will not eat gāi that has been kept in a jar (kuppa) made of cow hide. They always smear the cooking-places with cowdung, and eat barefooted like the Hindus. They know nothing whatever of their former history : in fact the only ancient custom of the tribe that I have been able to discover is that they formerly held deer and sheep sacred, and used the manure of these animals, where we now use cowdung. Notwithstanding their affectation of Hinduism, they still adhere to many of their old customs, which decidedly point to their origin. Marriage rarely takes place before the age of puberty. In their wedded life they are chaste and moral : before this takes place, the intercourse between the sexes is unrestricted. They never marry out of their tribe, and any woman found misbehaving with a male of an alien tribe is at once outcasted ; and so with the males. Notwithstanding the employment of Brāhmans and barbers, their marriage ceremony is simple and decidedly aboriginal I have never witnessed one of their marriages, and am unable, therefore, to describe all that takes place but the principal part of the ceremony consists in pouring gha or oil upon the forehead of the bride, and allowing it to run down the face If it trickles from the centre of the forehead straight down the ridge of the nose, the fates are propitious and the marriage will be a happy one if, on the contrary, the gha or oil trickles down to the right or left, it is a sign either that the girl will shortly die or prove unfaithful and very often in this case the marriage is broken off, and the maiden has to wait till another seeks her hand”¹

Paramahansa —A general term for any notable ascetic, more especially one of the higher order of Sannyâsis and more particularly Dandi Sannyâsis “He is the ascetic who is solely occupied with the investigation of Brahma, or spirit, and who is equally indifferent to pleasure or pain, insensible to heat or cold, and incapable of satiety or want Agreeably to this definition, individuals are sometimes met with who pretend to have attained such a degree of perfection, in proof of it, they go naked in all weathers, never speak, and never indicate any natural want What is brought to them as alms or food by any person is received by the attendants, whom their supposed sanctity or confederation of interest attaches to them, and by these attendants they are fed and served on all occasions as if they were as helpless as infants They are usually included among the Sâvva ascetics, but it may be doubted whether the classification is correct”²

Pardesi (Literally “foreigners”) —A class of thieves and swindlers who, in the old Criminal reports, are classed with the Jogis of Ahgrah and the Daleras of Bareilly In 1868, a gang of them was captured and convicted in Gorakhpur, since when nothing more has been recorded of them But recent enquiries show that there are still twenty five families of them in Gorakhpur and about as many in the adjoining district of Champâran, where however, they do not appear under that name in Mr Risley’s lists The Gorakhpur Pardesis are still suspected of swindling in the disguise of faqirs or pilgrims They are not shown separately in the returns of the last Census whose name is popularly derived from the fact that, when the first of the race issued from the Agnikunda or "fire-pit," he was placed as guardian of the gate (prithakdāra). The story how they supplanted the Kachhwāhas is given in connection with that sept. The Parihār dynasty of Gwālior¹ lasted for seven generations from 1129 to 1211 A.D. Kutub-ud-din Aibeg took the city in 1198; during the short reign of Azam it was re-taken by the Hindus, who held it till 1232 A.D., when the Parihār dynasty became extinct. To the south of the Holingæ Ptolemy places the Porvaroi with their three towns, named Bidadama, Thololana, and Malaita. They were probably either the Parihār or Panwār Rājputs, who occupied this part of the country from a very early date. The Parihār Rāja of Uchahara traces his lineage to a very remote date. As the Parihārs are said to have been subjected by the Kalachūris they were probably in possession of the country before the Kalachūri conquest of Kalinjar and the establishment of the Kalachūri or Choli era in 219 A.D. They claim to have preceded the Chandels and Baghels in Bundelkhand and Rīwa. The Mahoba Khand² mentions the Parihār minister of Parmā, the Chandel, in the twelfth century and must therefore, be at least contemporary with the Chandels. The head of the family now lives in the Native State of Jagnī. They call themselves descendants of Govind Deva, and Sārang Deva grandson of the celebrated Parihār Rāja Jhājhar Singh of Hamirpur who emigrated there from Mārwar. According to Colonel Tod³ the capital city of the Parihārs was Mandāwar, from which they were treacherously expelled by Chondu, the leader of the Rāthaur exiles from Kannuj. He notes that there is a considerable colony of them at the confluence of the Chambal with the Sindh and the Kuāri, "who are the most notorious body of thieves in the annals of Thag history."

Parihar.—(Sanskrit pari/âra “repelling”) A sept of Râjputs

¹ W L R Forbes Report p 45

² W Leon Essays I 231 sq

2. They have maintained this evil reputation as inhabiting in

The Parihārs of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh.

Etāwah⁴ "that intricate and inaccessible net-work of ravines that abuts on the Pachnadi as the confluence of the Jumna, Cham-bal, Sindh, Kuāri, and Pāhuj is here called. They have been a particularly lawless and desperate community." They here fix their rise after the defeat of Anangpāl of Delhi. Some of them have

¹ Cunningham, Archæological Reports, II., 376, 37.

² North-Western Provinces Gazetteer, I., 267.

³ Annals, I., 108, 27.

⁴ Census Report, N.-W. P., 1865 I., App. 35.

recently raised their importance by marriages with Chauhan and Sengar families. The sept in the United District inhabit the Pargana of Sikandarpur and possess a Chaurasi or estate of eighty-four villages. According to their tradition they came from Jigini or Srinagar in Kashmir. "About three hundred years ago, in the time of the Emperor Humayun, a Dikshit girl from Parenda was married to the son of the Parhar Râja, who lived in Jigini across the Jumna. The bridegroom came with a large escort of his friends and brotherhood to celebrate the marriage and the party on their journey passed through Sarosi. As they sat round a well (the locality of which is still shown, though the well has fallen) they asked who were the lords of the fort which stood not far off. They were told that it was held by Dhols and other Sôdras who held the neighbouring country. The procession then went on to Parenda and, returning, conducted the bride to her home. Just before the Holi festival, a party headed by Bhîgi Singh returned, waited for the evening of that riotous feast, and then, when the guards of the fort were heavy with wine, and no danger was looked for, suddenly attacked and slaughtered them and made themselves masters of the surrounding country." Their property became reduced because the law of primogeniture did not apply in the sept, and it gradually became divided among the heirs. They intermarry with the Kachhwâhas and Chauhans of the West, but have to pay heavily for their brides. They seem to have disputed with the Gautams for the territory on the Jumna below Kâlpi, but were both finally overcome by the Chandels. Dr Buchanan¹ asserts a connection between the Eastern branch and the Bhars, but in Gorakhpur they are held in good repute. In Azamgarh² they say that they came from Narwan and settled in Pargana Muhammad-âbâd, whence they were driven out by the Gaharwârs. In Jâlaun they give brides to the Bais and Gautam septs; and take girls in marriage from the Kachhwâha, Bhadauriya, Chandel and Râthaur. In Hamirpur they marry their girls to the Mainpuri Chauhâns, Bhadauriyas, Jâdons and Râthours, and their sons to girls of the Dikshit, Bais, Chandel, Gautam, Sengar, Gaur and Chauhan of the Cawnpur District. Their Gotra is said in Agra to be Kasyapa.

¹ Elliott Chronicles 38, 277

² Eastern India, II, 473 Dr Oppert (Original Inhabitants of Brâhmarâja, 63) would connect their names with the Dravid in Paradas

³ Settlement Report, 62

Distribution of the Parihar Rajputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Meerut . . .	20	Jalaun . . .	2,410
Aligarh . . .	8	Lalitpur . . .	429
Mathura . . .	34	Benares . . .	5
Agra . . .	2,772	Mirzapur . . .	126
Farrukhabad . . .	996	Ballia . . .	407
Mainpuri . . .	685	Gorakhpur . . .	93
Etawah . . .	3,324	Azamgarh . . .	1,146
Etah . . .	93	Tarai . . .	8
Bijnor . . .	37	Lucknow . . .	68
Bazilun . . .	63	Unao . . .	2,498
Moradabad . . .	22	Raj Barelly . . .	721
Shahjahanpur . . .	12	Sitapur . . .	191
Pilibhit . . .	11	Hardoi . . .	233
Cawnpur . . .	3,163	Kheri . . .	81
Fatehpur . . .	1,616	Faizabad . . .	1
Banda . . .	733	Bahradich . . .	134
Hamirpur . . .	3,277	Sultanpur . . .	292
Allahabad . . .	1,346	Partabgarh . . .	189
Jhansi . . .	4,163	Barabanki . . .	419
		TOTAL . . .	31,880

Parwâl; Parwâr, a sub caste of Banyas, enumerated in the former Census in Bundelkhand, Cawnpur and Agra, but who are not found in the returns of the Census of 1891. To the east of the Province they have two endogamous sub-divisions—Samaiya and Parwâl and twelve gotras with twelve sections (mûl). These gotras with their sections are thus given in Mirzapur:—

(1) Bachhalya with sections—Nârd, Pachlori, Dhumsar, Chharir, Rakari, Kadua, Bare Sareni, Ahari, Kathari, Jageswar, Nagaich, Tahari

(2) Goli with sections—Bâr, Nagau, Kharo, Bhuri, Luhâich, Chhola, Baisakhya, Karkach, Godhu, Sara, Gâgaro, Barahad

(3) Basil with sections—Deda, Deriya, Bala, Haidam, Doha, Raka, Ravandim, Chhalkar, Sal heswar, Sîdravad, Chandari, Pahu

(4) Khohil with sections—Setsagar, Kahala, Rathuya, Chhorari, Rohrari, Kharhat, Sonharu, Lagait, Bagari, Khadhari, Buari, Dhokhadari

(5) Gohil with sections—Chhatra, Gaha, Mamala, Mahâdim, Baromaro, Indradhar, Baru, Kharahat, Punhara, Gabari; Papihal, Khalasi

(6) Mathil with sections—Mar, Rodo, Bahil, Kathahai, Sakahman, Mandlari, Kharaich, Jhulari, Idoha, Gausil, Bhariwaro, Bhaihuni

(7) Kausil with sections—Bahuriya, Masta, Richa, Osil, Kochhichar, Gagwaro, Suchaha, Suere, Pabubarê, Chachâri, Bisawalo, Sarhsola

(8) Bharil with sections—Bharu, Big, Khona, Iga, Kuha, Pabub, Kuchari, Bhagwant, Harari, Bagari, Hour, Gahori

(9) Kâsil with sections—Ujya, Divkar, Sarbehhai, Sola, Digaya, Puthwar, Dhana, Lata, Dhodhara, Dogar, Sanga, Indmur

(10) Phâgil with sections—Sobar, Gaghari, Phagil, Buhrerê, Chhurari, Baresara, Mangala, Balaichre, Jajarê

(11) Kohil with sections—Padmawat, Bebaro, Ghachi, Chhagati, Dahari, Horari

(12) Bachhal with sections—Irari, Bibikuttam, Basil, Gaha, Gâgaro

This list is imperfect in the names of some of the sections, but it illustrates the fertility of invention exercised in establishing this tribal organisation

2 A man cannot marry in his own gotra or in any of its sections, in the section of his maternal uncle, father's maternal uncle, grandmother's maternal uncle, maternal grandfather's maternal uncle, maternal grandmother's maternal uncle

3. In their marriage ceremonies the Parwáls agree with those of the Mârwâris up to the stage where the procession goes to the house of the bride.

Marriage ceremonies.

But when the bridegroom reaches the door one peculiar ceremony is performed. They do not at this time worship Ganri and Ganesa as other Hindu castes do, which is known as the duârpûja. Among the Parwáls the bridegroom is there decorated with bangles and ear-rings and then joins his party at the reception place (janwânsa). Another special ceremony, known as bol, is also performed. In this the bride's father returns to the bridegroom Rs. 2-8 out of the sum paid by his father at the betrothal. Then the bride in a litter and the bridegroom on a horse walk round the nuptial shed—a ceremony called bindáyaki. On this day the father of the boy feeds his relatives and friends on sweetmeats which is known as the chabeni or “giving of parched grain.” On the fourth day the ceremony of ganâna is done. The bride and bridegroom, dressed in new clothes, stand under the marriage shed and the bride takes some rice and sugar in her hands and walks seven times round the shed. When she finishes the seventh circuit she puts the rice and sugar in the hands of her husband. On the fifth day is the palaka upachâr. The pair sit on a cot and on it is laid the dowry. After this the pair go to the place where the wedding party is being entertained and distribute sweets among them. Then the bride's brother takes her home. Next is the keura when the women of the bride's family go to where the bridegroom's party are halting and sing songs of abuse directed against the father of the bridegroom—a survival of marriage by capture. After this is the phâg. It consists in the relatives of the bride throwing coloured water on the friends of the bridegroom, as is done at the Phagua or Holi. They receive fresh clothes from the girl's father to replace those that have been soiled. Last comes the ceremony of kahas bandhâi. The father of the bridegroom distributes presents to dependents, such as the barber, washerman, etc., and the bridegroom comes to the bride's bouse and opens one of the fastenings of the marriage shed (mânro) and receives some money or ornaments from his wife's father.

Pâsi; Passi¹ (Sanskrit pâshita, “one who uses a noose”) a Dravidian tribe principally found in the Eastern Districts of the ¹ Based on enquiries at Mirzapur and notes by M. Sayyid Ali Bahadur, Deputy Collector, Partabgarh; Mr. E. J. Kitts, C. S.; M. Mahadeo Prasad, Head Master, High School, Pilibhit.

Province and in Oudh Their original occupation appears to have been tapping various kinds of the date tree for its sap, which is fermented into tari Mr Nesfield's idea that the name implies that they have recently emerged from the savage state of noosing birds does not seem to be justified by actual facts

2 The Mirzapur tradition of the origin of the tribe runs thus —

Traditions of origin One day a man was going to kill a number of cows Parasurama was at that time practising austerities in the jungle Hearing the cries of the sacred animals he rushed to their assistance, but the cow-killer was aided by his friends So Parasurama made five men out of kusa grass and brought them to life by letting drops of his perspiration fall upon them Hence arose the name Pāsi from the Hindi pasīna "sweat" (Sanskrit prāṣvina, "covered with perspiration") The men thus created rescued the cows Then they returned to Parasurama and asked him to provide them with a wife Just at that moment a Kayasth girl was passing by and her Parasurama seized and made over to the Pāsis—a remarkable survival of a tradition of primitive polyandry From them sprang the Kaithw's sub-caste

3 In parts of Oudh they have a tradition which professes to explain their connection with other possibly allied tribes on the basis of a series of ridiculous folk etymologies Thus the Rajpasis say that they are a branch of the Pasis and originally came from Gajarāt Tilok Chand, instead of being the eponymous hero of the Bais Rajputs, was according to them a Bhar king and called his family Rajbaasi or "those of royal lineage" and from this came the name Rajpasi After a time they fell out and some took to their beds (khatya) and were called Khatiks, others took to the trees in a grove (bugh) and were called Bachhal, while the remnant were called Rajpasi or "royal" Pasis It is said that the Pāsis and Arakhs there always claim kindred with the Bhars¹ All through Oudh the Pasis have traditions that they were lords of the country and that their kings reigned at Sandul, Dhaurahra, Mitaul and Ramkot in the Districts of Kheri Hardoi and Unao² Ramkot, where the town of Bangarman in Unao now stands, is said to have been one of their chief strongholds The last of the lords of Ramkot, Raja Santhar, threw off his allegiance to Kanauj and refused to pay tribute. On this Râja Jaychand gave the Gânjar country to the Banâphar heroes, Alha and Udal and they attacked and destroyed Râmkot, leaving it the shapeless mass of ruins which we now find it.¹ Similar traditions prevail in other parts of Oudh. In the Kheri District the Pâsis, Râjpâsis, Arakhs, Mothis and Khatîks are looked on as kindred castes. The Râjpâsis of that part of Oudh say that they are descended from Ratan Dat Sinh, a Thâkur of Pataungarb, near Nimkhâr, and a Pâsi woman who bore him several children. His descendants went so far as to claim a marriage alliance with the Akhan Râjputs. The head of the clan is said to have yielded consent on the ground of the Râjpnt paternity of the Râjpâsis, and to have invited the whole of the tribe to the betrothal feast. He plied them well with wine to which the tribe is to this day much addicted, and while they were in a state of drunken insensibility, some seven or eight hundred of them were put to death and their estates seized by the victors. Those who escaped are said to have fled and settled in Bângar, Mahmûdi and the northern part of Sitapur.²

¹ Lucknow Settlement Report XXIV

² Oudh Gazetteer II 907

4. Another legend tells that during the time Parasurâma was incarnate there was an austere devotee called Kuphal who was asked by Brahma to demand of him a boon, whereupon he requested that he might be perfected in the art of thieving. His request was granted and there is a well-known verse regarding the devotions of Kuphal, the pith of which is that the mention of the name of Kuphal, who received a boon from Brahma, removes all fear of thieves; and the mention of his three wives—Mâya (illusion), Nidra (sleep) and Mohani (enchantment) deprives thieves of success in their attempts against the property of those who repeat these names.

5. There is also a tradition that a descendant of Kuphal, named Karan, who dwelt in the jungle and is now deified by his race, had two wives, the one a Chhatri and the other an Ahirin. From the former of these, it is asserted, sprang the Râjpâsis and Bhîls and from the latter the Khatîks.

6. Still another tradition runs that the Pâsis came originally from Kacchh and settled in Kanauj. According to this form of the tribal legend there were four brothers who were called out to fight, and of these Mohan alone responded to the summons. He was killed and of him were sprung the Râjpasis, while the descendants of the other brothers, who lived to fight another day, are known as Arakhs, Marghas and Thothos. A heroic Pâsi, named Su of Barmiya figures prominently in the legend of Alha and Udal.

¹ Elliott, Chronicles of Oudh, 21.

² Carnegy, Notes, 61 sq. Sitapur Settlement Report, 88.

7. In the Partabgarh form of the story the Pasis, Arakhs, Khatiks and Pachhars are all one. The original Pâsis had a great fight with the Râja of Newar. Some of them were cowards and hid under a cot (khadya) whence they came to be called Khatiks, others behind an arika plant (Calotropis gigantea) whence they came to be named Arakhs. Again it is said that there was a Pâsi, named Mahyan, who was in the service of the Râja of Newar, and he was the Raja's watchman. One day his pigs trespassed into the fields of a Mursô, named Koch. He preferred a complaint to that Raja and demanded nine lakhs of rupees as damages. The Râja offered to give him four lakhs, but he insisted, in addition, that Mahyan should be banished from the kingdom. When Mahyan was ordered to go into banishment he refused and, summoning his castemen, defeated the army of the Raja, but he spared his life and compelled him to pay a fourth (chauth) of his revenue to the Pasis. This is said to have happened just before the wars of Alha and Udal.

8. Another story current in Partabgarh is that the ancestor of the tribe was one Ratan Daksha. When Parasurama destroyed the Kshatriyas he killed Râja Vena as well as the others, and then the Râni kept the corpse of her husband and implored Parasurama to create from it a man to continue the race. Parasurama touched the head of Râja Vena and out of it sprung a man of dark complexion with a bow and arrows in his hand. He was the first Rajpasi and to him was entrusted the duty of watchman of the kingdom. In the form of the story current in Pilibhit the Rishis were offended with Râja Vena for his impiety and killed him, but at the prayer of his Râni they formed a man out of his sweat (pasina) and he was the first Pasi.

9. From all this mass of tradition it may be gathered that there is a close connection between the Pasis, Arakhs, Mothis and Khatiks, which from their appearance and manners is not antecedently improbable. Mr Carnegie tries to make out a closer connection between the Pasis and other Rajput tribes of Oudh, such as the Bais, than is perhaps warranted by the facts.

10. As might have been anticipated from the discrepant legends of their origin and connection with other tribes, the internal organisation of the caste cannot be ascertained with absolute certainty. At the recent Census they were enumerated in six sub-castes—Arakh, Baurâsi, Kaithwâns, Motbi and Râjpâsi. In Mirzapur the Pâsis name five endogamous sub-castes—Kaithwâs who, as already stated, claim Kâyasth origin; Bhar, a tribe which though perhaps allied to the Pâsis it is more convenient to discuss separately; Pasmangta who are said to be begging Pâsis (Pâsi mângna, “to beg”) and to be so called because they receive alms from other Pâsis at marriages; Baurâsi said to be so called because one of the five original Pâsis created by Parasurâma or Parameswar once ran nmuck (baurâna). To the east of the Province Pâsis are often designated by the general term Pâsi-Baurâsi. Last come the Pahari who are said to take their name from their duty of keeping guard (pañra); they are often classed as a distinct tribe. Mr. Sherring¹ from Benares gives another list—Jaiswâra, who like the Banya and other clans of the same name take their title from the old town of Jais; Kainswât or Kaithwân, who correspond to the Kaithwâns or Kaithwâs of the other lists; Gûjar, who, of course, are a distinct tribe; Tirsuliya, who take their name from the tirisûla or three-bladed knife with which they pierce the stem of the palm tree. Dr. Buchannan² makes a curious mistake in connecting the name of this sub-caste with the sacred tulasi, because they have planted the sacred Ocymum, called tirsûli in the vulgar tongue, and have thus become a sort of Hindus. Next in Mr. Sherring’s list follow the Pasiwân; Chiryamâr or “bird-killers” (chirya-mârna) who are more properly included among Baheliyas, a possibly allied tribe; Byâdha (Sanskrit vyâdha, “a hunter”) who also come more properly under Baheliyas; Bihâri or “residents of Bihâr” and Bhar which it is advisable to treat separately. In Bihâr³ there are four sub-castes—Byâdha, Gaiduha, a word which seems to mean “milkers of cows” (gâû-duhâna);—Kamâni and Tirsuliya, of whom the Byâdha say that their original occupation was cultivating the water chestnut (singhâra); but they now tap date trees like the other sub-castes. A list from Partâb-

¹ Hindu Tribes and Castes, I., 332.

² Eastern India, I., 173.

³ Nisley, Tribes and Castes, II., 166.

garh, again, gives, Rāj-pāsi, Gūjar, Kaithwāns, Guāl, who are really Ahīrs, Mangta, Baurās, Arāh, Khatik and Pachhar. From all this it seems obvious that the term Pāsi is merely occupational and includes a number of distinct tribes, whose only connection is the common occupation of extracting the juice of the date palm. The complete Census returns show 305 Pāsi sub-divisions of the familiar type. Those of the greatest local importance are the Baheliya and Bhil of Badām, the Aheriya and Bhil of Morādābād, the Parsarām of Allahābād and Fatehpur, the Boriya of Fatehpur, the Rewās of Banda, the Baheliya and Bharē of Mirzapur, the Baheliya, Manwās and Tarmāl of Ghazīpur, the Chaurās of Basti, Sultānpur and Barabanki, the Bhadauriya of the Tarāi, the Banya of Lucknow, the Boriya, Mahtiya and Parsarām of Unāo, the Boriya of Rīē Bareilly, the Bachar, Dhānnik and Khatik of Sitapur, the Banya of Gonda, the Bachar, Chunarha, Dhānnik and Khatik of Bahraich.

11. It does not appear that Pasis actually introduce outsiders into the caste, but it is reported from Partlāgarh that if a woman of the tribe become pregnant by a stranger to the tribe and her child be born in the house of her father or husband it will be accepted as a Pasi of pure blood and admitted to all tribal privileges. The rule of exogamy prevailing in the endogamous sub-castes is not very rigidly fixed. Many Pasis say that they bar all near relations generally. In Mirzapur they fix the prohibited degrees as the families of the maternal uncle, paternal uncle, maternal and paternal aunts for seven generations in the descending line. Marriage questions are decided by the tribal council (pañchāyat) which is presided over by a chairman (chāudhārī) selected at each meeting from among the most influential adult males present. The council deals specially with cases of immorality and pollution caused by journeys across "the black water" (kalapāni) which the criminal pursuits of the tribe occasionally necessitate. When a woman is detected in an intrigue with a clansman the relations on both sides have to give a tribal feast and the offenders are then admitted to caste. In the same way if a man offend with a strange woman he has to purchase his re-admission, but if a woman intrigue with a stranger she is permanently expelled. Concubinage, even with a woman of the tribe, is in Mirzapur punished by expulsion. Immorality in both sexes, provided it be inter-tribal, is lightly regarded. Marriage takes place from the age of five or seven to sixteen; but infant marriage is the rule. No bride or bridegroom price is taken; but the friends of the girl are expected to give something to the relations of the bridegroom by way of dowry. If either party become blind or leproas after marriage a separation can be procured with the leave of the council. Widow marriage and the levirate both prevail. If the deceased husband leave a brother, who is of age to marry and is not already married, he is expected to take over the widow. The regular sagâi marriage is performed only in the case of virgin widows and they are as a rule married to widowers. In the case of widows whose marriage has been consummated there is practically no ceremonial of any kind and such a woman can with the permission of the tribal council live with a man as his acknowledged mistress (rakhas). This form of union is recognised after a tribal feast. In the ordinary sagâi the only ceremony is that the intended husband goes to the widow's house with a few friends taking with him some jewelry (generally five articles for luck) and a suit of clothes. The friends on both sides eat together and during the night in a dark room the man marks the parting of the woman's hair with red lead and next morning she is dressed in her new clothes and taken home. In the case of the levirate there is no fiction of ascribing the children of the subsequent union to the elder brother. If the widow marry an outsider she loses all rights in the property of her late husband. If she marry her husband's brother he has the usufruct of the property of his late brother and manages it until the sons of the first marriage come of age, when they succeed.

Marriage rules

12. The Pâsis of Mirzapar profess to be able to state elaborate rules on the subject of adoption in imitation of those prevailing among the higher Hindu castes; but practically a man only adopts his brother's son with leave of the council and there is no recognised religious element in the transaction. The same is the case with succession. A man's heirs are his sons or in default of sons his associated brethren. Primogeniture is so far recognised that the eldest son gets a quarter share in excess as compared with his younger brothers. Widows have a life interest, but this depends on their continuing chaste and not marrying by sagâi. In default of a daughter or a daughter's son the inheritance devolves on him who performs the funeral ceremonies of the deceased.

Adoption and succession.

13 During pregnancy the Eastern Pāsis make vows and a sacrifice to Birtiya, the village pantheon (dīk) and to Phūlmāti Devi. If the mother has an easy delivery these deities are honoured with an offering of spirits (kāppar) and a hog (māl). They have no ceremony on the sixth day (cākhāthi). The Chāmānn midwife attends for six days and receives as her remuneration four sers of grain and four pice, if the baby be a boy, and half that amount if it be a girl. On the twelfth day is the barahi ceremony when the house is cleaned and the earthen pots replaced. Mother and child are bathed by the barber's wife, her hand and toe nails are cut and her feet stained with lac dye (mahāwar). Then the father of the child sacrifices a young hog to Birtiya and pours a libation of spirits on the ground. After this he invites a few of the tribesmen and feeds them on the pork and boiled rice. By this dinner the birth impurity is finally removed. When the mother goes first to draw water from the well after her confinement she places a handful of rice on the platform and bows down to it. The husband does not cohabit with his wife for six months after her delivery. The only ceremony of initiation is the ear-boring (kanchedan, lanbedha) which is done by the village goldsmith when the child is five or six years old. His fee for doing this is one pice. The family feed on choice food that day and from that time the child has to conform to caste rules in the matter of eating and drinking.

14 The marriage is of the usual low caste type. The negotiations are commenced by the father of the bride who goes to the boy's house with the salutation Rām! Rām! as he enters. The boy is sent for and approved. The Pandit is called in and approves the horoscopes of the pair (rāsbari). His future father-in-law gives the boy a rupee and this completes the betrothal (mangni). Then follows the tilak or marking of the boy's forehead by his father-in-law. This is known to the east of the Province as the "water drinking" (pāni pīna) and the bride's Brahman and barber take with them a betrothal gift consisting of a tray (thālī), a cocoanut (nāriyal), one or two pieces of cloth, some sweetmeats and one rupee or eight annas in cash. A feast of rice and pork follows and on that day the wedding day is fixed. Then comes the rite of matmangara or collection of the sacred earth (for which see Bhūtiya, paragraph 14) and the erection of the nuptial shed (māra), which is made of four bamboos and contains in the centre a plough beam (haris) and some wooden images of parrots (suga). On that day the Pandit binds round the wrist of the boy a bracelet (laulan) consisting of iron surrounding a mango leaf and some mustard seed to keep off ill-luck. Next follows the anointing of the bride and bridegroom with oil and turmeric, and on the day before the procession starts the boy's father sacrifices a hog and pours a libation of spirits on the ground in honour of Agwān Devn, the herald deity who presides over enterprises, the Pānchon Pir and the goddess Phūlmatī. The other ceremonies are of the usual type. The binding part of the marriage ceremony is the bridegroom rubbing some red lead on the ploughshare set up in the nuptial hut and smearing some on the parting of the bride's hair, after which they revolve five times round the ploughshare. Next follows the kohabar ceremony when the married pair retire into an inner room. The significance of this rite is explained in paragraph 18 of the account of the Majhwārs. Five days after the return of the bride with her husband, the bridegroom's sister flings the marriage festoons (bandariedr) into running water with the sacred water pots, (kalia), and on her way back she worships every banyan and pipal tree she comes across with an offering of rice and water.

15. The dead are disposed of in the usual Hindu fashion. They usually cremate their dead, but sometimes Death ceremonies, bury them when epidemic disease prevails.

When they bury, the head of the corpse is usually laid towards the north and the feet to the south, while the face is slightly turned to the east. Immediately after death a little sugar is put into the mouth of the corpse. After cremation the relatives chew a leaf of bitter nīm as a sign of mourning and then eat a little sugar as a protection against demoniacal influence. The cremation is generally followed by a drunken revel at the village grog-shop. Next morning the chief mourner arranges a habitation for the vagrant spirit (pret) by fixing some blades of kusa grass on the bank of a tank. On this he regularly pours water during the ten days of mourning, and food is left out every night for the use of the ghost along the road by which the body was removed for cremation or burial. The ashes are usually left on the site of the pyre, but some who are more careful collect them for ultimate disposal in the Ganges or some other sacred river.

10 To the east of the Province some of the more advanced

Religion

Pāsis are often members of the Śākta sect, but few ever become regularly initiated. Many of them in Mirzapur worship Bandī Māi, a form of Devī. She has no regular temple, but nearly every house has a platform (chauri) in her name and an image of brass or silver is placed upon it. This image is adorned with a necklace (mālā) and at every marriage in the family a fresh bead is added to the necklace, of gold for a boy and of silver for a girl. She is worshipped specially at marriages with the sacrifice of a castrated goat (khasi) cakes (pūri laḍḍu), sweetmeats, rice, milk, flowers and betel leaves. There is no holiday in her honour but she is specially worshipped whenever a vow is made or any particular blessing craved. Others worship Agwān Devī, Phūlmātī or the Panchon Pīr. To these deities pigs and liquor are offered. The household worship of the Panchon Pīr is often represented by an iron spear (sāng) with three points or by five wooden pegs buried in the floor of the court yard. In Partābgāh they have a large collection of local gods, such as Karadevā, Miyaṇ, Kambra, Kshetrpāl or Bhūmīyā and Bahurwar. To the last two pigs and liquor are offered which are consumed by the worshippers. These offerings are made on a Wednesday or a Saturday. In Pilibhit Bhūmīyā or the godling of the soil, is known as Bhūmsen. But Pāsis, like all the lower Hindu castes are very catholic in their worship and will visit the tomb of any saint (pīr) or martyr (ṣayyid, ṣāhid) which is convenient. They offer water every day to the souls of their deceased ancestors in the first fortnight of Kuar. In the east of the Province some Pāsis again have quite another set of deities such as Ram Thākūr, who perhaps represents Rama Mahabir and Bhaironnāth. Ram Thākūr is honoured with the sacrifice of a castrated goat at weddings. Mahālār and Bhairon receive a bloodless offering: the former laḍḍu sweetmeats and the latter cakes (bara) made of the flour of the urad pulse. When small pox breaks out Sitala Māi is specially worshipped by women. When the time comes for tapping the date palms they collect a few friends and burn some incense over the sickle (ḥansulī) used for the purpose, and over the wooden strop on which it is sharpened. All classes of Brāhmins will officiate at their marriages and other ceremonies and do anything for them which does not involve touching them or anything in their houses. Their festivals are those ordinarily observed by Hindus, the Pīṭṭhā or Holi, Dasamī, Dīwālī, Kajārī, Khicharī and Tīj.

17. Their demonolatry is that common to the lower class of Hindus. They believe that old trees are occupied by evil spirits (bhûl) or demons (deo, bîr) and to these collectively a pig is offered in the month of Aghan and a little spirits poured on the ground. They generally perform the srâddha rite, and some of the wealthier of them go even as far as Gaya for that purpose. They will not cut down or injure the pîpal tree which they believe to be the abode of Vasudeva.

18. To the east of the Province the women wear bracelets of glass or lac (chûri) on their wrists, necklaces (guriya), nose-rings (nathiya), ear ornaments (karaphûl), heavy pewter anklets (pairi).

Social status and occupation.

The men wear an ear ornament (turka) and round the neck a gold coin or head or an image of Sitala, if the wearer have escaped a severe attack of small-pox. If he has lost his first wife and married another he will hang an image of the dead woman round his neck. This is also very commonly worn as a protective by the second wife and is known as "the co-wife" (santin). Any present made to the new wife is always first offered to this image in order to avoid any jealousy on the part of the ghost. They swear on water or on the head of their eldest son. They believe strongly in witchcraft, possession by evil spirits, the demoniacal theory of disease and the Evil Eye. In such cases the Ojha or Syâna is consulted. They will not eat the flesh of the cow, buffalo, alligator, monkey, horse, jackal or lizard; most of them eat pork, fowls and field rats, sheep, goats and deer, but no meat is eaten in the fortnight in Kuâr sacred to the dead. Women eat apart from and after the male members of the family. They use tobacco and spirits and the latter often to excess. They salute castemen by the form pâclagi and their seniors by Râm! Râm! Low castes like Chamârs and Bhangis will take water from their hands. As a rule they will eat kachchi cooked by their own castemen or by Brâhmans, and pakli cooked by a Brâhman, a Râjput, respectable Banyas such as Agarwalâs or Rastâogis or by a Halwâi.

19. A few are landowners, but most of them are day labourers, collectors of palm-juice, or makers of grindstones or curry stones. They bear on the whole an indifferent reputation and in the east of the Province many of them are noted thieves and burglars, who often make long journeys and commit serious crime.

General Sleeman says that in his time it was supposed that there were one hundred thousand families of Pâsis in Oudh, who were skilful thieves and robbers by profession and were formerly Thags and poisoners as well. They generally formed the worst part of the gangs kept up by refractory landowners "who keep Pâsis to fight for them, as they pay themselves out of the plunder and cost little to their employers. They are all armed with bows and arrows and are very formidable at night. They and their refractory employés keep the country in a perpetual state of disorder." Things, of course, have much improved since the British occupation of the Province but "even now in the Bângar the Pâsis pride themselves on taking some evidence of their prowess—a penknife, a handkerchief, from the tents of the English officers who visit their jungles for sport, and with whom they are generally on the best of terms".¹

¹ Journey through Oudh, 25
Etlapur Settlement Report, 67
Hardoi Settlement Report, 3.

Distribution of Páris according to the Census of 1891.

[illegible]

Distribution of Pasis according to the Census of 1891—continued.

Districts.	Arañh.	Bardol.	Gōjār.	Kaithwān.	Moñhi.	Rajpāl.	Others.	TOTAL.
Azamgarh	22,411	65	22,484
Tarāi	1	1	...	7	912	921
Lucknow	102	169	29,971	67.	4,638	32,107	1,602	75,056
Unāo	68	1,270	29,848	129	...	19,314	31,792	82,421
Ras Bareh	...	50,019	10,431	26,213	...	17	14,325	101,248
Sikapur	3,020	14	13	...	1,043	95,653	5,157	104,900
Hardol	...	8	22	...	74	83,305	627	83,039
Kberl	8,567	242	40	...	1,218	63,880	559	74,515
Faizābād	...	2,786	34,623	337	37,746
Gonda	...	14,061	22,011	...	315	108	1,110	37,665
Bahradich	117	8,623	21,470	29	...	4,221	15,635	50,095
Saltanpur	...	23,455	2,687	6,598	1,973	34,732
Parādgarrh	127	61,993	239	62,459
Birabanki	4,314	75,615	5,931	26,653	10,315	122,828
Total	16,210	207,558	175,837	321,914	8,267	353,856	135,961	1,219,311

junior ancestor who had acquired local renown. The frontier tribe, whether within or beyond our border, has almost without exception a very distinct corporate existence, each tribe, and within the tribe each clan, occupying a clearly defined tract of country, though they are in the Indus valley often the owners merely rather than the occupiers of the country, the land and smaller villages being largely in the hands of a mixed population of Hindu origin who cultivate subject to the superior rights of the Patháns. These people are included by the Patháns under the generic and semi-contemptuous name of Hindki, a term very analogous to the Jat of the Biloch frontier, and which includes all Muhammadans who, being of Hindu origin, have been converted to Islam in comparatively recent times."

5 At the last Census the Patháns of these Provinces were classified under the following chief tribes —

Tribes of the Patháns of North Western Pro- vinces	Afridi, Bagarzar, Bangash, Barochi, Buner- wal, Daúdzaí, Dilazak, Durráni, Ghilzaí, Ghorgashití, Ghorí, Kakar, Qizilbásh, Khahí, Khatak, Lodi, Mehmal, Muhammadzaí, Rohilla, Tarín, Urmuz, Ushturyáni, Warakzaí, Wazirí, Yáqúbzaí and Yúsufzaí. The following notes are mainly taken from the writings of Dr Bellew and Mr Ibbetson
--	---

6 They represent in name and position the Aparytæ of Herodotus. One of the four great divisions of the Pactyæ of Herodotus was that of the Gandhâri, the other three were the Aparytæ or Afridi, the Satragydæ or Khatak, and the Dadicæ or Dadi, all alike of Indian origin. "The original limits of the Afridi country probably comprised the whole of the Safed Koh range and the country on the base of it on the north and south sides, to the Kabul and Kurrum rivers respectively, whilst its extent from east to west was from the Penar ridge or the head waters of the Kurrum further west to the Indus, between the points of junction with it of the Kâbul and Kurrum rivers, in the former direction." Of the character of the tribe Dr Bellew writes "Looking at the Afridi as we find him to day, it is difficult to imagine him the descendant of the mild, industrious, peace-loving and contemplative Buddhist, abhorrent of the shedding of blood or the destruction of life of even the minutest of God's creatures, or even to imagine him descended from fire-worshipping ancestors, whose tender care for life was PATHARI.

Patâri.—A branch of the Majhwâr tribe, who have now become their family priests. Two explanations of the name have been given: one connects it with the Sanskrit patravârnikâ in the sense of "a scribe" or "recorder," in which case they may have been originally priests and genealogists of the Gond Majhwârs. Another theory connects the word with pât which in Gondi appears to mean "a sacred place". Thus in Mandla to propitiate evil spirits the Gonds set up rude shrines (pât) which are "sometimes merely a bamboo with a piece of rag tied to the end, a heap of stones, or perhaps only a few pieces of rag tied to the branches of a tree. However, the spirit is supposed to have taken up his abode there, and in consequence on the occasion of any event of importance happening in the Gond's family, the spirit has his share of the good things going, in the shape of a little spirit, and possibly a fowl sacrificed to him."¹ The same word apparently originates Pât who is a mountain deity of the Kuis, and Mainpât which is the holy plateau of Sarguja, looked upon with reverence by these Dravidian tribes.² The word Patâri or Pathâri with synonyms Pradhân and Gugya appears as a sept of the Gonds of Mandla.³ Of the Gond Pradhân Mr. Hislop writes: "The Pâdâl also named Pathâdi, Paradhân and Desâi is a numerous class found in the same locality as the Râj Gonds, to whom its members act as religious counsellors (Pradhâna). They are in fact the Bhâts of the upper classes, repeating their genealogies and the exploits of their ancestors, explaining their religious system and assisting at festivals on which occasions they play on two sorts of stringed instruments (lingri and jantar, yantra). For their services they receive presents of cows and bullocks, cloth, food and money."⁴ This is pretty much the position of the Patâri among the Mirzapur Majhwârs.

2. The Mirzapur Patâris are divided into four exogamous groups (jund) which each contain a number of septs (kuri) mostly totemistic. These septs are practically analogous with those of the Majhwârs (g.v.). In the first exogamous group we have six septs—Markâm, Poiya, Kusro, Soi, Neti and Serlo: in the second twelve—Telâm, Marpachi, Netâm, Pusâm, Kariyâm, Sindîâm, Keiâm, Oima,

¹ Central Provinces Gazetteer, 275.

² Dalton, Descriptive Ethnology, 231, 135, 223.

³ Central Provinces Gazetteer, 273.

⁴ Hislop, Papers, 6.

Dadāichi, Koāchi, Ulagwati, Kargati: in the third Marāi, Sarota, Soiyām, Sarotiya, Bandaru, Karbē, Kursenga, Purkela, Masrām, Armor, Ārpati and Karpati: in the fourth Korām, Poika, Armon, Pāwalē, Chiehām, Balariya, Otē, Urich, Salām. Most of these are analogous to the Majhwār septs and, as there shown, many of them are totemistic. A closer analysis of the Central Provinces' septs of Gonds will probably show that this is generally the case.

3. The Patāris say that they were originally Majhwārs:

Tradition of origin. the whole tribe was descended from seven brothers. When they could find no one else to act as family priest (purohit) they compelled the youngest of the seven to undertake the duties. The curious part of the arrangement is however that a Majhwār must be attended as his priest by a Patāri of the same sept as his own. Thus a Markām Patāri acts as priest to a Majhwār of the Markām subdivision and so throughout the tribe. The result is that the parishioners or constituents of a Patāri are scattered over a large area and he has to undertake long journeys in order to pay his periodical visits. The system under which, by a specialisation of function this class of aboriginal local priests was formed, is very instructive in its analogies to what was probably the method by which the tribe of Brāhmans with its numerous local sub-divisions was organised.

4. Their tribal council is exactly on the same system as among the Majhwārs.

5. The rules of marriage agree with those of the Majhwārs, but there appears to be no hypergamy. They Marriage rules. marry rather earlier than Majhwārs—at the age of ten for boys and nine for girls. The bride price fixed by invariable tribal custom is ten sers of sesamum (tili), ten sers of the ardi pulse, twelve measures (panzers) of rice, four measures of coarse sugar, three rupees in cash and a cloth (dhoti) for the bride. Formerly part of the bride price used to consist of liquor, but this gave rise to such an amount of quarrelling that about four years ago the tribal council decided that coarse sugar (gur) was to take the place of liquor. A wife, who makes a practice of adultery, who wastes the family property or thieves, may be discarded with leave of the council. If a man does not support or ill-treats his wife she can leave him, and such divorced women can marry again by the sagdi form. Polygyny is allowed and the children of all the wives rank equally as heirs. Concubines are not allowed: illegitimate children follow the caste of the fathers, but the clansmen will not eat with or intermarry with them.¹

6. When a man dies the council marry his widow to some widower in the tribe. The consent of the parties and the kindred of the first husband is essential. On a day fixed the man eats at the widow's house. Next day he takes her home and puts on her a set of bangles and ear ornaments (chûri, tarli) and pays to the husband's younger brother, who accompanies her, twelve rupees, a turban and a loin cloth which are regarded as the equivalent of the bride price. The levirate is allowed on the usual conditions. They practise Beena marriage in the usual gharjaijân form.

Domestic ceremonies. 7. The domestic ceremonies are practically the same as those of the Majhwârs.

Social position. 8. The position of the Patâri is decidedly low. He is looked upon with contempt as a beggar, and he is discredited because, like the Hindu Mahâ-brâhman, he takes the clothes, utensils, etc., of the dead man which are given to him in the belief that he will pass them on for the use of the deceased in the next world. And although they are the family priests of the Majhwârs, the latter show their contempt for them by refusing to eat with them or drink water from their hands.

Pâthak.—(Sanskrit pâthaka, "a reciter, teacher") a functional division of Brâhmins, who like the Upâdhyâya, are devoted to the instruction of youths in religious knowledge and the manner of performing rites and ceremonies. The term pâtha is technically applied to the modes of recitation of the Vedic texts, of which there are five—Samhita, Pada, Krama, Jata and Ghana.

Pathân.—One of the chief Muhammadan tribes. There has been much controversy on the origin of the term. To quote Dr. Bellew, the latest and best authority on the ethnology of these races, "The origin of the name Pathân, and the nationalities originally represented by it, carries us back to very early times. The term Pathân is not a native word at all. It is the Hindustâni form of the native word Pukhtâna, which is the plural of Pukhtûn or Pakhtun (the a as in our pack) as it is pronounced by the Afrîdi. And Pukhtûn is the proper patronymic of the people inhabiting the country called Pukhtûnkhwa, and speaking the language called Pukhta or Pukhto. What the meaning of the word Pukhta, from which Pukhtûn and its derivatives are held to come, may be a matter of speculation. By some it is supposed to be the same word as the native Pukhta, "a ridge" or "hill" in distinction to Ghar, "a mountain chain" or "peak"; the two words corresponding respectively to the Persian Pashu and Koh. Be this as it may, and there is no denying the fact that the name PukhtûnKhwa, "the Pukhtûn coast or quarter", is very well in accordance with the character of the country in its physical aspect; there is also the fact that in the time of Herodotus, four centuries before our era, this very country was called Pactiya or Pactiyæa, and its natives Pactiynns. In Western Afghânistân the harsh kā is changed into the soft kh, and Pukhtûn becomes Pushtûn, Pukhta becomes Pushta, and so on. By some Pukhtûn tribes, the Afrîdi notably, Pukhtûn, Pukhtn, etc., are pronounced Pakhtûn, Pakhtn, etc., and this brings the words nearer to the Pakhtnes of Herodotus. In short, the Pakhtûn or Pukhtûn of to-day, we may take it, is identical in race and position with the Pactiyan of the Greek historian."¹

¹ This was exactly the position of the same class (spuri) under Roman law. "These children irregularly conceived, have a mother, but no legal father: they do not come under the paternal power of the father, like the child of lawful marriage and cannot be legitimated." Letourneau, Evolution of Marriage, 202.

2. The popular account is, it is almost needless to say, different. Modern genealogists trace the descent of Afghâns, Pathâns and Ghilzais from Kais or Kish, the father of Saul, and they say that the Prophet, pleased with the services of Kais named after his forefather, gave him the title of Pathân, the Syrian word for "rudder" and bade him direct his people in the true path. By one authority the name Afghân is said to mean "wailing";² but another explanation is more probable. Ashvaka, a name of Sanskrit origin was used as a territorial appellation of Gandhâra. This word, derived from asva, "a horse," signifies merely the "cavaliers." It was less an ethnic, in the rigorous acceptation of the word, than a general appellation applied by the Hindus of the Panjâb to the tribes of the region of the Kophes, renowned in antiquity for the excellence of its horses. In the popular dialects the Sanskrit word took the usual form Assaka, which reappears scarcely modified in Asakāna or Assakem in the first historians of the expedition of Alexander and subsequent writers. It is impossible here not to recognise the name Avghān or Afghān.¹ The theory which has been proposed by which Pathān is connected with the Hindi pāṭha, "the top of a hill" is as untenable as that which derives their title Khān from the Dravidian tribe of Khāndhs.² The latter word has been by others derived from the Sanskrit asu or swāmin, meaning "lord."

¹ The Races of Afghânistân, 56, 57.

² Benjamin, Persia, 112.

3 To quote Dr. Bellev, again "The traditions of the Afghāns refer them to Syria as the country of their residence at the time they were carried away into captivity by Bukhtanasar (Nebuchadnezzar) and planted as colonists in different parts of Persia and Media. From these positions they, at some subsequent period, emigrated eastward into the mountainous country of Ghor, where they were called by the neighbouring people Bani Afghān and Bani Isrāīl, or "children of Afghān" or "children of Israel." In corroboration of this we have the testimony of the Prophet Esdras to the effect that the ten tribes of Israel, who were taken into captivity, subsequently escaped and found refuge in the country of Arsareth, which is supposed to be identical with the Hazārah country of the present day, and of which Ghor forms a part. It is also stated in the Tabaqāt-i-Nāsiri, a detailed account of the conquest of this country by Changluz Khān, that in the time of the native Shansabī dynasty there was a people called Bani Isrāīl living in that country, and that some of them were extensively engaged in trade in the countries around." Mr Thorburn³ quotes in support of their Jewish extraction, some peculiar customs obtaining among the tribes of purest blood, for instance the Passover-like practice of sacrificing an animal and smearing the doorway with its blood in order to avert calamity, the offering up of sacrifices, the stoning to death of blasphemers, the periodical distribution of land and so forth, and he points out that most of the learned men who reject the tradition of Jewish descent have no personal acquaintance with the Afghān people.

1 Though the tribal organisation of the Pathāns in these Provinces is much less closely defined than Tribal organisation along the Panjāh frontier, Mr Ibbetson's

¹ St Martin quoted by McCrindle Indian Antiquary, VI, 313, sq

² Rāja Lachhman Singh Bulandshahr Memorandum, 192

³ Quoted by Ibbetson Panjab Ethnography, paragraph 390, sqq

remarks on this subject deserve quotation : " The tribe is probably far more homogeneous in its constitution among the Pathâos than among the Biloches. Sayyid, Turk and other clans have occasionally been affiliated to it, but as a rule people of foreign descent preserve their tribal individuality, become merely associated, and not intermingled, with the tribes, among whom they have settled. Even then they generally claim Pathân origin on the female side, and the tribe is usually descended in theory at least from a common ancestor. The kamsâya custom by which strangers are protected by the tribe with which they dwell is in full force among the Pathâns as among the Biloches. But with the former, though it does protect in many cases families of one tribe who have settled with another, it seldom accounts for any considerable portion of the tribe ; and its action is chiefly confined to traders, menials and other dependants of foreign extraction who are protected by, but not received into, the tribe. Thus a blacksmith living in an Utmanzai village will give his clan as Utmaozai ; but his caste will, of course, remain Lohâr. The nation is divided genealogically into a few great sections which have no corporate existence, and the tribe is now the practical unit, though the common name and traditions of common descent are still carefully preserved in the memory of the people. Each section of tribe, however small, has its leading man who is known as Malik, a specially Pathân title. In many, but by no means in all, the tribes, there is a Khân Khel or chief house, usually the branch of the tribe, whose Malik is known as Khân, and acts as chief of the whole tribe. But he is seldom more than their leader in war and their agent in dealing with others ; he possesses influence rather than power ; and the real authority rests with the Jirgah, a democratic council composed of all the Maliks. The tribe, clan and sept are alike distinguished by patronymics formed from the name of the common ancestor by the addition of the word zai or khel, zai being the corruption of the Pashto zor, meaning " son," while khel is an Arabic word meaning " association " or " company." Both terms are used indifferently for both the larger and smaller divisions. The stock of names being limited, the nomenclature is exceedingly puzzling, certain names recurring in very different tribes in the most maddening manner. Moreover, the title which genealogical accuracy would allot to a tribe or clan is often very different from that by which it is known for practical purposes, the people having preferred to be called by the name of a junior ancestor who had acquired local renown. The frontier tribe, whether within or beyond our border, has almost without exception a very distinct corporate existence, each tribe, and within the tribe each clan, occupying a clearly defined tract of country, though they are in the Indus valley often the owners merely rather than the occupiers of the country, the land and smaller villages being largely in the hands of a mixed population of Hindu origin who cultivate subject to the superior rights of the Pathāns. These people are included by the Pathāns under the generic and semi-contemptuous name of Hindki, a term very analogous to the Jat of the Biloch frontier, and which includes all Muhammadans who, being of Hindu origin, have been converted to Islam in comparatively recent times."

5 At the last Census the Pathāns of these Provinces were

Tribes of the Pathāns of North Western Provinces

classified under the following chief tribes — Afridi, Bunerzai, Bangash, Barech, Buner-wāl, Dāūdzaī, Dilazak, Durrāni, Ghulzai, Ghorgashti, Ghorī, Kākhar, Qizilbash, Khali, Khatak, Lohi, Mehmād, Muhammadzai, Rohilla, Tarin, Urmuz, Ushituryani, Warakzai, Wuziri, Yāqūbzai and Yūsufzai. The following notes are mainly taken from the writings of Dr Bellew and Mr Ibbetson

6 They represent in name and position the Aparyti of Hero-

The Afridi Pathāns

dotus. One of the four great divisions of the Pactyæ of Herodotus was that of the Gandhari, the other three were the Aparyti or Afridi, the Satrapyddæ or Khatak, and the Dadicæ or Dadi, all alike of Indian origin. "The original limits of the Afridi country probably comprised the whole of the Safed Koh range and the country on the base of it on the north and south sides, to the Kabul and Kurrum rivers respectively, whilst its extent from east to west was from the Peshawar ridge or the head waters of the Kurrum further west to the Indus, between the points of junction with it of the Kabul and Kurrum rivers, in the former direction." Of the character of the tribe Dr Bellew writes "Looking at the Afridi as we find him to day, it is difficult to imagine him the descendant of the mild, industrious, peace-loving, and contemplative Buddhist, abhorrent of the shedding of blood or the destruction of life of even the minutest of God's creatures, or even to imagine him descended from fire-worshipping ancestors, whose tender care for life was almost equal to that of the Buddhist, and whose sincere and punctilious devotion to the observances of the minute ceremonies and ordinances of their religion was surpassed by none. The Afridi of to-day, though professedly a Muhammadan, has really no religion at all. He is to a great extent ignorant of the tenets and doctrines of the religion he professes, and even if he knew them, would in no way be restrained by them in the pursuit of his purpose.

7 "Whatever he may have been as a Buddhist or as a fire-worshipper, he has now sunk to the lowest grade of civilisation, and borders upon the savage. Entirely illiterate, under no acknowledged control, each man has his own king, the nation has dwindled down to a small community of less than three hundred thousand souls, mostly robbers and cut-throats, without principles of conduct of any kind, and with nothing but the incentive of the moment as the prompter to immediate action. Even among his own nationality (the Pathân), he is reckoned the faithless of the faithless, and is held on all sides to be the most fierce and stealthy of all enemies. As we know him merely in the character of an independent neighbour, he is a wily, mistrusting, wolfish, and wilful savage, with no object in life but the pursuit of robbery and murder and the feuds they give rise to."

8. The Bangash Pathâns are regarded by Dr. Bellew as perhaps of Scythic descent, and are supposed to have come into their present positions with the Scythic irruption. They originally lived about Gardez in Zurmât, but in the latter part of the fourteenth century they increased in numbers, and being pressed upon by the Ghilzai, emigrated eastward en masse and settled in Kurram. They are descended from Luqmân, and have absorbed several tribes of doubtful origin. Their chief settlement in these Provinces is at Farrukhâbid, and a very complete account of them has been given by Mr. R. S. Whiteway.¹

The Bunerwâl Pathâns.

9. The Bunerwâl tribe take their name from the Buner country, north-east of Peshâwar.

The Daûdzai Pathâns.

10. The Daûdzai occupy the left bank of the Kâbul river as far down as the junction of the Bara.

11. The Dilazîk Pathâns were the inhabitants of the Peshâwar valley before the Pathân invasion, and ore
 The Dilazîk Pathâns apparently of Scythian origin, and came into the Panjâb with the Jâts and Kattî in the fifth and sixth centuries. "They soon became powerful and important, and ruled the whole valley as far as the Indus and the foot of the northern hills. In the first half of the thirteenth century the Yûsufzai and Momand drove them across the Indus into Chach-Pakhlî. But their efforts to regain their lost territories were such a perpetual source of disturbance that at length Jahângîr deported them en masse and distributed them over Hindustân and the Dakkhin. Scattered families of them are still to be found along the left bank of the Indus in Hazâra and Rîwalpindî." ¹

12 The name Durrânî is derived either from durr-i-daurân,
 The Durrânî Pathâns "pearl of the age," or from durr-i-durrân, "pearl of pearls." The title was adopted by Ahmad Shâh Abdâlî, when he ascended the throne, in allusion to the Abdâlî custom of wearing a pearl stud in the right ear. According to Dr. Bellew ² — "The special Afghân tribe is called Abdâlî, and is more commonly known since the time of Ahmad Shah, the first independent sovereign of Afghanistan of this race, by the name Durrânî. The Durrânî comprise the following chief divisions or clans: Saddozai, Populzai, Barakzai, Halakozai, Achakzai, Nurzai, Ishâqzai, and Khagwânî. Their home and fixed seat is in Kandahâr Province, the former country of the Gandhâra, who, at an early period of our era, spread into the present Hazâra country along the courses of the Helmand and Arghandûb rivers. Members of each clan, however, are found in small societies scattered all over the plain country up to Kâbul and Jalâlabâd, and they are there settled mostly as lords of the soil or military fiefcees, the people of the country, so far as concerns the agricultural community, being their tenants or serfs."

13 According to Mr. Ibbotson, "the Ghilzai are a race probably of Turkish origin, their name being another
 The Ghilzai Pathâns form of Khulchî, the Turkish word for 'swordsmen,' who early settled, perhaps, as mercenaries rather than as a corporate tribe, in the Shabband range of the Ghor mountains, where they received a large admixture of Persian blood. The official spelling of the name is still Ghaleji at Kâbul and Kandahâr. They first rose into notice in the time of Mahmûd Ghâznavi, whom they accompanied in his invasions of India. Not long afterwards they conquered the tract between Jalâlâhâd and Kelât-i-Ghilzai, and spread east and west over the country they now hold. In the beginning of the eighteenth century they revolted against their Persian rulers, established themselves under Mir Wais as independent rulers at Kandahâr, and overran Persia. But a quarter of a century later they were reduced by Nâdir Shâh, and their rule disappeared, to be succeeded not long after by that of the Durrâni." Dr. Bellew tells the romantic legend of Bibi Matte and Shâh Hsain, whose son was called Ghalzæ, "son of a thief," the father having stolen his daughter's honour, whence the name Ghilzai.

¹ Ibbotson loc cit para. 415

² Loc cit 20

14. He adds: "As a race the Ghilji mix little with their neighbours, and indeed differ in many respects, both as to internal government and domestic customs, from the other races of Afghânistân. Those small sections of the people who are settled in the plain live in villages and follow agricultural pursuits, but the great majority of the tribe are pastoral in their habits of life, and migrate with the seasons from the lowlands to the highlands with their families and flocks and easily portable black hair tents. They never settle in the cities, nor do they engage in the ordinary handicraft trades, but they manufacture carpets, felts, etc., for domestic use, from the wool and hair of their cattle. The pastoral clans are notoriously predatory in their habits, and continually at feud amongst themselves and with their neighbours. Physically they are a remarkably fine race, and in stature, courage, and strength of body, are second to none in Afghânistân. But they are very barbarous people, the pastoral clans especially, and in their wars excessively savage and vindictive. Several of the Ghilji or Ghilzai clans are almost wholly engaged in the carrying trade between India and Afghânistân and the northern states of Central Asia, and have been so for many centuries, to the exclusion almost of all the other tribes of the country. The principal clans employed in this great carrying trade are the Nilzi, Nâsar, Kharoti, and to some extent the Sulaimân Khel. From the nature of their occupation they are collectively styled, or individually so far as that goes, Povinda and Lawâni or Lohâni. These terms, it appears, are derived from the Persian word parkinda, 'a tale of merchandise,' and randei, 'a traveller.'"

15 The term Ghorgusht is a corruption of Ghurgisht or Ghurgusht, the third son of Kais The word is only an altered form of Girgis or Ghurghus, "wanderer on the steppe," and indicates the country whence this people originally came, namely, Northern Turkistān

The Ghori Pathāns 16 The Ghori Pathāns, who are very numerous in the Province, appear to take their name from the Ghor country to the east of Herat They are usually classed as a sub-division of the Knd, one of the septa of the Banī Isrāil, or pure Afghāns

The Kākār Pathāns 17 Of the Kākār Pathāns Dr. Bellew writes¹ — "The Kākār of Afghanistan are a people of Scythian origin, and of kindred race with the Gokhar or Ghokhar, who are settled in Chach and Rawalpindi on the other side of the Indus, and other parts of India. According to the Afghan account, Kākār was the grandson of Ghurgusht or Ghurgusht, by his second son, Dani And this Ghurgh was the youngest of the three sons of Kais or Kish, the great ancestral progenitor of the Afghān nationality of modern times It has already been shown how the name of the first son, Saraban, was merely the adoption of the race name of the people whom the Afghan genealogists classified together as one set of the descendants of Kais, and the fact of their Rajput origin might then have been made clearer by tracing up the descent to more recent times Saraban had two sons, Sharjyūn and Krishyūn, which are evidently transformations of the common Rājput names, Surjan and Krishnan, and they have been still more altered by transformation into Muhammadan names, Sharjyūn being changed into Sharfuddin and Krishyūn into Khyruddin Similar traces of Indian affinity are to be found in almost all the Afghan genealogical tables, and it is only what we might expect when we remember the tradition that the five Pāndava brothers about the time of the Mahābharat emigrated to the Panjāb and Afghānistan as far as Ghazni and Kandahār, and there established independent kingdoms which lasted for several centuries"

The Qizilbāsh or Qazalbash Pathāns. 18 Mr Ibbetson calls the Qizilbāsh Pathāns "a tribe of Tartar horsemen from the Eastern Caucasus, who formed the backbone of the old Persian army and of the force with which Nādir Shāh invaded India. Many of the great Mughal ministers have been Qizilbâsh, and notably Mîr Jumlah, the famous minister of Aurangzeb. They are said to take their name from a red cap of peculiar shape which they wear, and which was invented by the founder of the Sophi dynasty of Persia, an intolerant Shiah, as the distinguishing mark of that sect, and which his son, Shâh Tumas, compelled Humayun to wear when a refugee at the Persian Court. There are some twelve hundred families of Qizilbâsh in the city of Kâbul alone, where they were located by Nâdir Shâh and exercise considerable influence in local politics."

¹ Loc cit 31

19. The Khalîl occupy the left bank of the Bara river and the country along the front of the Khibar Pass. They have four main clans: Matuzai, Barozai, Ishâqzai and Tilarzai, of whom the Barozai is most powerful.

20. To quote Mr. Ibbetson again: "The Khataks are descended from Luqmân, surnamed Khatak. He had two sons, Turqmân and Bulâq. The descendants of the latter are still known as the Bulâqi section; while Tarai, son of Turqmân, rose to such distinction that the whole section, including two main clans, the Tari proper and the Tarkai, is called by his name. The Khatak are a fine, manly race, and differ from all other Pathâns in features, general appearance, and many of their customs. They are the northernmost of all the Pathâns settled on our frontier who speak the soft or Western dialect of Pushto. They are of a warlike nature, and have been for centuries at feud with all their neighbours and with one another. They are active, industrious, and a favourable specimen of Pathân, and are good cultivators, though their country is stony and unfertile. They are great carriers and traders, and especially hold all the salt trade with Swât and Buner in their hands. They are all Sunnis. The Marwat, the hereditary enemy of the Khatak, says: 'Friendship is good with any one but a Khatak; may the Devil take a Khatak,' and 'a Khatak is a hen, if you seize him slowly, he lies down; and if suddenly, he clucks.' Another proverb runs thus:—'Though the Khatak is a horseman, still he is a man of but one charge.'"

21. "To the Ghilzai and Lodi, the latter of whom gave a dynasty to Upper India," according to Mr. Ibbetson, "and especially to the former, belong almost all the tribes of warrior traders who are included under the term Pawinda, from parizinda the Persian word for 'a bale of goods,' or perhaps more probably from the same root as poval, a Pushto word for 'to graze.' They are almost wholly engaged in the carrying trade between India and Afghânistân and the Northern States of Central Asia, a trade which is almost entirely in their hands. They assemble every autumn in the plains east of Ghazni, with their families, flocks, herds, and long strings of camels laden with the goods of Bukhâra and Kandahâr, and forming enormous caravans, numbering many thousands, march in military order through the kâkar and Wazir country to the Gomal and Zhob passes, through the Sulimans. Entering the Dera Ismail Khân District, they leave their families, flocks, and some two thirds of their fighting men in the great grazing grounds which lie on either side of the Indus, and while some wander off in search of employment, others pass on with their laden camels and merchandise to Multan, Rajputana, Lahore, Amritsar, Delhi, Cawnpur, Benares, and even Patna. In the spring they again assemble, and return by the same route to their homes in the Hills about Ghazni and Kolât : Ghulzai. When the hot weather begins, the men, leaving their belongings behind them, move off to Kandahâr, Herât, and Bukhara, with the Indian and European merchandise which they have brought from Hindustân. In October they return and prepare once more to start for India."

22 The Muhammadzai of the Census returns are perhaps the same as the Muhammad Khel, the largest sept of the Daulatzai. The present rulers of Bhopâl belong to this tribe.

23 The country known as Pukhtûn Khwa, to which reference has already been made, is called by outsiders and foreigners, on the side of India almost exclusively, by the name of Roh, which has the same meaning as Koh, 'a mountain,' Rohilla hence means "a Highlander." Their occupation of the country called after them Rohilkhand is quite modern. After the death of Aurangzeb in A D 1707 the dissensions among the Hindus of Bareilly gave a chance to Ali Muhammad Khân the leader of the Rohilla Pathans to obtain possession of the country. In A D 1714 he conquered Kumaun as far as Almora, but two years after he was defeated by the Emperor Muhammad Shâh in the Bareilly District. He was succeeded by the famous Hâfiz Rahmat Khân and in his latter days he came in contact with Warren Hastings, when the name of the Rohillas for the first time attracted attention.¹ They assert that they are of Coptic origin, and say that, driven out of Egypt by one of the Pharaohs, they wandered westward till they arrived under that part of the mountains known as Sulaimâni Koh, or "the hill of Solomon," where they halted. The Rohilla has been always notorious for bravery and turbulence. Shore² says that in his time the Rohilla soldiers would submit to be flogged within an inch of their lives with a leathern martingale, but to be struck with a whip or cane would be an indelible disgrace and very likely to be resented by a stab or a bullet.

24. Dr. Bellew³ writes of these: "The tribal traditions are to the effect that about three or four hundred years ago the Yûsufzai or Mâdar and Moh-

The Tarin Pathâns. mand tribes of Afghâns were settled on the Gwara Margha and the headwaters of the Tarnak and Arghasan rivers, as neighbours and allies. Beyond them, lower down the course of these rivers, were the Tarin, another tribe of Afghâns, who still occupy the same positions, and the valley of Peshin. Their lands were in the summer subject to droughts, and were besides in great part waste, owing to the exhaustion at that season of the tributary streams and the diminished volume of the rivers. The consequence was a contest for the better lands, and the Tarin tribes, being the stronger of the two parties, gradually encroached on the fat pastures of the Mâdar and Mohmand tribes and finally dispossessed them of their lands."

25. Of the Ushturyâni, whom Mr. Ibbetson⁴ calls Ushturâni, he says:—"They are the descendants of Han-nar, one of the sons of Ushturyâni, a Sayyid, who settled among and married into the Shirâni section of Afghâns. They were settled with the Shirânis to the south of the Takht-i-Sulaimân, and till about a century ago were wholly pastoral and engaged in the carrying trade. But a quarrel with their neighbours, the Mûsa Khel, put a stop to their annual westward migration, and they were forced to take to agriculture. They still own a large tract of country, in ¹ For their history, see Mosul and Settlement Report, 12, 19.

The Ushturyâni Pathâns.

² Notes, II., 420.

³ Loc. cit., 63, 19.

⁴ Loc. cit., para. 63, 19.

which indeed most of them live, cultivating land immediately under the hills and pasturing their flocks beyond the border. Their territory only includes the eastern slopes of the Sulaimâns, the crest of the range being held by the Mûsa Khel and Zmanî. They are divided into two main clans, the Ahmadzai and Gagalzai, and these again into numerous septs. They are a fine, manly race, many of them in our army and police, and they are quiet and well behaved, cultivating largely with their own hands. A few of them are still carriers. They are much harassed by the independent Bozdâr (Biloch). They are all Sunnis."

26 Of the Wazirî Pathâns, Dr Bellew says¹ — "The Wazirî, who displaced the Khatak or Shattak, as it is pronounced in the Western dialect of Pushtu, from his ancient seat on the Sulaimân range from the Sattagydia of Herodotus, for he is the only one of the ancient authors who has mentioned this people, appear to be identical with the Wairî or Vairî of the early Muhammadan historians. The Wairî were a division of the Solha tribe, which itself was a branch of the Pramâra Rajput. The Wazirî appear to have made their first assault against the Khatak about five or six hundred years ago, at a time when the country was sorely afflicted with famine, and the route they took was across the Shâm plain into the adjoining valley and district of Barmal. Here they settled and remained for some time before making a further forward move. Hence they occupied the whole of the ancient Khatak country from the Shâm plain on the South to the Kohât Valley on the North. They are a powerful and entirely independent tribe, and mostly pastoral and nomad in their habits of life. In personal appearance they are very different from other Pathan tribes and retain many customs peculiar to themselves."

27 The history of the Yûsufzai Pathâns is given in detail by Dr Bellew and Mr Ibbetson. They now hold Swât, Buner, and the Lundkhwâr and Râmzai Valleys in the North-West of Yûsufzai.

28 Mr Ibbetson's remarks again deserve reproduction — "The true Pathân is perhaps the most barbaric of all the races with which we are brought in contact in the Panjab. His life is not so primitive as that of the gypsy tribes, but he is cruel, bloodthirsty and vindictive in the highest degree; he does not know what truth and faith is, in so much that the saying Afghân belmân has passed into a proverb among his neighbours, and though he is not without courage of a sort, and is often curiously reckless of his life, he would scorn to face an enemy whom he could stab from behind or to meet him on equal terms if it were possible to take advantage of him, however meanly. It is easy to convict him out of his own mouth. Here are some of his proverbs:—‘A Pathân’s enmity smoulders like a dung fire:’ ‘A cousin’s tooth breaks upon a cousin:’ ‘Keep a cousin poor but use him; when he is little, play with him; when he is grown up, he is a cousin, fight him:’ ‘Speak good words to an enemy very softly; gradually destroy him root and branch.’ At the same time he has his code of honour which he observes strictly; and which he quotes with pride under the name of Pakhtûnwâlî. It imposes upon him three chief obligations: Nanawatai, or the right of asylum, which compels him to shelter and protect even an enemy who comes as a suppliant; Badal, or the necessity to revenge by retaliation; and Melmastia, or open-handed hospitality to all who may demand it. Of these three, perhaps, the last is greatest. And there is a sort of charm about him, especially about the leading men, which almost makes one forget his treacherous nature. As the proverb says: ‘The Pathân is at one moment a saint and the next a devil.’ For centuries at least he has been on our frontier subject to no man. He leads a wild, free, active life in the rugged fastnesses of his mountains; and there is an air of masculine independence about him which is refreshing in a country like India. He is a bigot of the most fanatical type, exceedingly proud, and extraordinarily superstitious. He is of stalwart make, and his features are often of a markedly Semitic type. His hair, plentifully oiled, hangs straight to his shoulder; he wears a loose tunic, baggy drawers, a sheet or blanket, sandals, and a sheepskin coat with its wool inside; his favourite colour is dark blue; and his national arms the long, heavy Afghân knife and the matchlock or jazail. His women wear a loose shift, wide, wrinkled drawers down to their ankles, and a wrap over the head, and are, as a rule, jealously secluded. Both sexes are filthy in their persons.

Character of the Pathâns

29. “Such is the Pathân in his home among the fastnesses of the frontier ranges. But the Pathâns of our territory have been much softened by our rule and by the agricultural life of the plains, so that they look down on the Pathâns of the hills, and their proverbs have it:—‘A hillman is no man;’ and again, ‘Don’t class burrs as grass or a hillman as a human being.’ The nearer he is to the frontier, the more closely the Pathân assimilates to the original type; while on this side of the Indus, even in the riverain itself, there is little or nothing, not even language, to distinguish him from his neighbours of the same religion as himself. The Pathâns are extraordinarily jealous of female honour, and most of the blood feuds for which they are so famous originate in quarrels about women. As a race they strictly seclude their females, but the poorer tribes and the poorer members of all tribes are prevented from doing so by their poverty. Among the tribes of our territory a woman’s nose is cut off if she be detected in adultery; and it is a favourite joke to induce a Pathân woman to unveil by saying to her suddenly ‘You have no nose.’ The Pathân pretends to be purely endogamous, and beyond the border he probably is so; while even in British territory the first wife will generally be a Pathân, except among the poorest classes. At the same time Pathân women are beyond the Indus seldom, if ever, married to any but Pathâns. They intermarry very closely, avoiding only the prohibited degrees of Islâm. Their rules of inheritance are tribal and not Muhammadan, and tend to keep property within the agnatio society, though some few of the more educated families have lately begun to follow the Musalmân law. Their social customs differ much from tribe to tribe, or rather perhaps from the wilder to the more civilised sections of the nation.”

80 In these Provinces, perhaps, the best class of Pathâns are those from Rohilkhand, who are active, intelligent, and good rulers of men; many of them hold appointments in the Revenue, Police, and other Government Departments.

Distribution of the Pathans

DISTRICTS.	Afridi.	Sakardal.	Dangab.	Dareche.	Doserrahi.	Dhodra.	Dhask.	Derrah.	Ghazal.	Ghogaibul.	Ghorl.	Kakar.	Qarabab.
Dehra Dun	63	...	41	42	...	114	214	...
Babarnagar	131	11	82	31	98	...	83	10	831	3,787	...
Muzaffarnagar	693	4	6	1	18	4	4	18	12	...	203	2,630	...
Meerut	95	159	203	...	1	...	646	9	8	...	3,008	697	11
Halondabahr	33	...	12	2	...	49	3	182	404	...	1,867	81	...
Aligarh	98	...	169	1	8	123	...	8,529	8	...
Mathura	21	...	44	...	1	...	4	...	21	...	1,674	19	...
Agra	400	1	191	...	9	37	75	9	59	...	3,061	47	9
Farrukhabad	3,028	12	4,043	23	673	11	309	...	2,202	1,240	...
Malapori.	471	27	171	12	...	74	...	2,269	79	...
Etawah	84	...	207	17	...	1,791	83	...
Etah	253	...	761	19	101	2	56	279	...
Barilly	1,104	817	...	1,432	31	...	173	45	630	134	3,550	71	...
Rijoor	24	65	...	87	...	199	502	...
Dudhau	183	19	403	741	206	9	607	7	85	40	6,233	4	...
Moradabad	196	2	179	478	943	38	763	11	125	...	5,740	262	...
Shahjahanpur	609	1,070	1,117	23	1	621	2,609	63	150	...	3,907	4-6	...
Milibit	160	261	82	212	...	1,449
Cawnpur	160	...	611	9	...	4	74	29	35	...	1,579
Fatehpur	141	...	21	11	28	47	...	4,314	16	...
Danda	27	4	29	10	3	44	...	6,162	149	...
Hamiropur	11	6	59	...	3	...	1	...	36	...	1,608	64	...
Allahabad	80	9	4	606	105	743	14	...
Jhansi	12	...	42	4	11	41	...	1,168	43	...
Jalaun	21	...	114	4	11	68	...	1,423
Lalitpur	14	1	3	3	390	7	...
Benares	60	...	33	59	207	79	...
Mirzapur	20	...	411
Jaunpur	14	430	41	34	...	1,439
Ghazipur	4	34	...	18	...	49	70	...
Ballia	41
Gorakhpur	27	...	11	253	21	74	...	715	1,605	...
Basti	...	28	19	...	74	...	912	18,539	...
Azamgarh	6	29	2,479	372	...
Kumaun
Garhwal	69
Tardi	29	...	87	...	815	1	...	1	671	...
Lucknow	1,471	19	186	9	102	85	51	1,789	215	16
Unio	398	48	63	129	129	80	5,673	263	...
Ras Bareilly	431	...	87	25	203	768	843	...
Sitapur	233	23	119	30	20	2,616	1,233	...
Hardoi	800	1,163	131	69	...	5,780	1,534	...
Kheri	140	849	56	622	88	7	68	3,369	697	...
Farrukhabad	24	4	40	523	1,210	53
Godan	8	410	10,057	...
Babulich	317	...	91	3	20	19	40	63	2,315	2,909	...
Saltanpur	72	...	8	423	2	59	414	266	...
Parliabgarh	107	4	6	33	8	8	1,266	83	...
Barabanki	302	...	68	85	327	...
TOTAL	12,840	3,780	9,742	2,529	1,740	1,978	8,321	1,116	4,035	168	59,712	49,040	59

Patwa, Patua¹—(Sanskrit pata; “woven cloth;” Hindi pāt, “silk”).—The caste of braid and silk fringe makers. They are also generally known by the name of ‘Ilāqēband or ‘Alāqēband (‘ilāqa, ‘alāqa, “connection”), who are usually Muhammadans practising the same occupation: Pathār, Patahra, Pathera.

2. One tradition states that when Mahādeva was about to be married to Pārvati, a goldsmith brought the wedding jewelry for the bride, and as there was no one to string them, Mahādeva formed the “silkman” to do the duty. The Eastern Patwas trace their origin to Bareilly in the Faizābād District and to Balrāmpur in Gonda. In Ahraura, in the Mirzapur District, there is a small community of them who make silk cloth from the cocoons collected in the jungles south of the river Son. They take the title of Singh, and say that they are emigrants from Kot Kāngra, where they were originally Katanj Rājputs, a sept which does not appear in Mr. Ibbetson’s lists. In the Panjāb they say they are Khatri. In Hamīrpur they claim descent from Gokul in the Mathura District, and say that their ancestor was one Biha, a Pāurē Brāhman; they separated from the Brāhman stock on account of some quarrel about eating, and their brethren are now called Patiya Brāhman and act as their family priests. They also assert that the Gahoi Banyas are a branch of the same stock. In Farrukhābād they claim their origin from Ujjain. They are apparently a purely occupational caste, and are probably composed of many different elements.

3. At the last Census they were recorded under the sub-tribes of Agarwāla; Deobansi, or “the race of a god;” and Kbarwār, which is the name of an undoubted Dravidian tribe. In Benares, according to Mr. Sbering, their divisions are Khārēwāl or Kbandēwāl, which is the name of one of the Banya tribes; Kbara, or “genuine,” Deobansi; Lahera, or makers of ornaments in lac (Sanskrit lakṣa-kāra); and Jogi Patwa. In Mirzapur there is a sub-caste known as Khanrawa, who are said to take their name for some unexplained reason from khānr, or coarse sugar, and to be out-castes. In Lucknow their sub-castes are Gauriya, Rewar, and Tānti. In Hamīrpur they have a number of local sections which take their name from the villages in which they originally settled. These are Chhâmyân, who are named from the village of Chhîm, Ratha from Râth, Tarela, Barauniya, Sikarwâr, Kariya, Na-âmyân, and Jeorahya. Here it is said that the sub-castes are exogamous, which is certainly a mistake. But these local divisions or sections practise hypergamy among themselves. Thus the Chhâmyân, Nasâmyân, and Barauniya give their daughters in marriage to the Tarela, Ratha, and Jeorahya, but will not marry their sons in these groups.

¹ Based on enquiries at Mirzapur and notes by M. Rām Sahāy, Teacher, Tahsil School, Mahoba; M. Jamunādā, Teacher, Sumerpur School, Hamīrpur; M. Chhote Lal, Archaeological Survey, Lucknow; and the Deputy Inspector of Schools, Ballia and Farrukhābād.

4 The sub castes are endogamous and follow the usual formula of exogamy, which prohibits intermarriage in the family of the paternal and maternal uncles and aunts for two or three generations, or as long as any relationship is remembered.

Domestic ceremonies The domestic ceremonies are of the normal type practised by respectable natives of the same social standing.

6 Patwas are generally Vaishnavas of the Kabîrpanthi or Satyanami sect. To the east of the Province their clan deities are Mahahîr, the Panchon-pîr, and Hardiba or Hardaul Lâla, who is the household godling. On the tenth of the light half of Kâr they offer flowers and sweetmeats to Mahahîr, Mahadeva, Narsinha, and Narayana. At the Nagpanchami festival, in the month of Sawan, they let a ram loose in the name of Devi, and throw over it a mixture of sugar and pepper dissolved in water. Some are Nanakpanthus, and these at the Khichari festival, at the end of the month of Mâgh, worship the scriptures (granth) with an offering of the Halwa sweetmeat. This is known as karakprasâd, or "the offering from the boiler." In Ballia some worship Durga and Bhairon and some a local saint known as Gaunath. These deities are worshipped on the tenth day of the waxing moon in the month of Kâr. Unmarried girls are excluded from this worship, and only women married by the regular ceremony, and not women married by the sagâi or kâj form, are allowed to attend. In Hamirpur they specially worship Hardaul Lâla, prayer to whom averts danger at marriage and pregnancy, and brings good rain and keeps off storms. In addition to these they worship a crowd of godlings, such as Satî, Dhyân Dâs, Gharib Dâs, Goswâmi, to whom worship is done by making a fire sacrifice (hom) and burning some incense (dhoop). To the east of the Province they have no shaving ceremony (māḍaran) for children and never cut their hair. At death they only cut their nails as a sign of mourning, rub their bodies with mustard oil (karua tel), and their heads with oil-cake. Their priests are Tiwāri Brāhmanas of the Sarwariya tribe.

7. Some of the Patwas weave silk from the indigenous cocoons.

Occupation.

The 'Ilāqêband, who, as already stated, is usually a Muhammadan, makes coloured cords of silk or cotton thread need for the threading of beads and the binding together of ornaments such as the bāzuband or armlet, which consists of several pieces joined together in an elastic band, and he also makes braid, fringe, petticoat strings (nāra), and girdles for drawers (izārband). The Patwa does pretty much the same work; but the Musalmān occasionally adds to this whip-making as part of his business, which the Hindu does not. He buys up plain cotton and silk thread and dyes it himself, not, however, usually employing fast colours. The Lahera sub-caste is said to be so called because they chiefly use the lac dye (lāh-lākh) for this purpose. In Lucknow some are wealthy traders, selling lac trimming (lachka), kala-bātūn, or gold and silver thread, false gems and pearls, and they make up embroidery, presentation robes (khiṣṭ) and necklaces for entertainments (hār), etc.¹ The country Patwa very commonly deals in women's spangles and forehead ornaments (likuli), and he sells various kinds of cosmetics, substances for making caste-marks, and common medicines.

Distribution of Patwas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Agar-wāla.	Deobansi.	Kharwār.	Others	Muham-madans.	TOTAL.
Dehra Dūn	8	...	8
Sahāranpur	313	15	328
Muzaffarnagar	22	...	203	1	225
Meerut	202	10	212
Aligarh	33	...	33
Mathura	3	25	136	...	174

¹ Hoey, Monograph, 113, 27.

Distribution of Patwas according to the Census of 1891—contd.

DISTRICTS.	Agar- wāla	Deolansl	Kharwar	Others	Muham- madans	TOTAL.
Agra	529	..	529
Farrukhābād	175	...	217		392
Mainpuri . .	55	3		64	..	122
Etāwah . .	10	278	...	297
Etah . . .	37	3	...	105	...	145
Bareilly	824	...	824
Bijnor	93	...	325	..	418
Budāun . .		101	..	104		505
Morādābād	70		257	5	332
Shāhjahanpur	837		103	..	940
Pilibhīt	366		42	..	408
Cawnpur . .		216	.	410	..	650
Fatehpur . .		407		171	.	578
Etānda . .		88	..	894	.	982
Hamirpur	18	..	513		561
Allahābād	745		419	27	1,221
Jhānsi		163	...	163
Jālaun		286	...	286
Lalitpur . .	.			315	..	315
Benares	58	...	819		877
Mirzapur	975	...	196	2	1,173
Jaunpur . .	.	651		651
Ghāzipur	166	9	352	.	527
Balha . .		1,902	3	373	...	2,278
Gorakhpur . .	.	121	75	2,044	4	2,244
Past . .		118	1,281	160	...	1,559

Distribution of Patwas according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICTS.	Agar-wāla.	Deobansi.	Kharwār.	Others.	Muham-madana.	TOTAL.
Azamgarh	343	48	312	44	746
Tarāi	43	...	35	...	78
Lucknow	466	...	219	...	685
Unāo	461	...	118	...	662
Rāi Bareilly	763	...	100	...	863
Sitapur	729	...	191	...	923
Hardoi	915	...	13	...	958
Kheri	760	...	202	...	962
Faizābād	48	359	337	12	756
Gonda	1,525	65	...	1,590
Bahrāich	113	...	703	...	816
Sultānpur	136	193	433	8	820
Partābgarh	453	135	57	...	645
Bārabanki	336	...	163	37	601
TOTAL . . .	111	12,786	3,603	14,952	165	30,977

Pauhāri.—A variety of Bairāgis, who are said to derive their name from the Sanskrit payas, "milk," ahāra, "food," in reference to their rule of abstinence. The Pauhāriji of Paikauli in the Gorakhpur District is a notable personage, who wanders over that and the neighbouring Bihār Districts with a large train of followers. He has branch establishments at Baikunthpur, Ajudhya, Allahābād, and other places.

Pāwariya, Pānwariya.—A tribe of Muhammadan singers and dancers who take their name from ṛṣara (ṛṣar, foot), the mat or carpet on which they sing and play. They are apparently very closely akin to the Dhārhi and Kingariya, under which heads the account of these people has been given.

Distribution of the Pāwariya according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS	Numbers
Gorakhpur	147
Azamgarh	305
TOTAL .	513

Pokharna—A division of Brāhmaṇas of whom only a few scattered families are found in these Provinces. According to the account generally received they take their name from the sacred lake of Pokhar or Pashkar, and by one legend they were the navvies who dug the lake, and who were raised to the rank of Brāhmaṇas for their services. By their own story they were named Pushpakarna, "having a flower in the ear," because they offered flowers to Lakshmi, and, being cursed by Pārvatī for refusing to eat flesh, migrated from Jaisalmer to Sindh, Cutch, Maltān, and the Panjāb. Other castes affirm that the Pokharna is the illegitimate offspring of a Brāhmaṇa devotee and a Mohani fisherwoman, who independently undertook to ferry the holy man across the stream.¹ They wear the sacred thread, putting it on with little ceremony, generally at a relation's marriage, or at some place of pilgrimage. High caste Brāhmaṇas do not eat with them. Among members of the same gotra, marriage is not allowed. On the sixth day after childbirth, the women of the family, singing ns at a marriage, bring a clay horec from the house of the mother's father to the husband's house. At marriages the men dance in the procession and the women sing immodest songs.²

2. In the Panjāb they still worship the pickaxe with which they excavated the Pushkar Lake. They are the hereditary Brāhmaṇas of the Bhātīyas of Rajputāna, and are more strict in caste matters than the Sarasvatas. They are found in some numbers in the Western Districts of the Panjāb.³

Potgar—(Hindi pot, "a bead," Sanskrit pratahāra)—A small caste of bead-makers found only in the village of Naurera, Tahsil Patti, in the Partābgarh District, and numbering only 92 persons. They say that they were originally Kshatriyas, but have

¹ Burton, Sindh, 310

² Bombay Gasetteer, V, 41

³ Ibbetson Panjāb Ethnography para 513

⁴ From a note by Mr D Calnan C. S.

no tradition as to how they came to adopt their present occupation. They wear the Brāhmanical cord. They do not admit outsiders into the caste. They follow the customs of high caste Hindns. They will not touch liquor or eat any kind of flesh, and are strict vegetarians. They will not eat or smoke with any caste other than their own. A full account of the bead manufacture has been given by Dr. Watt.¹

Prānnāthi.—A Hindu religious order which takes its name from one Prānnāth, a Kshatriya, who, being versed in Muhammadan as well as Hindu learning, composed a book called the Mahitārīyal, in which the Qurān is reconciled with the Vedas. He lived in the latter period of the reign of Aurangzeb, and is said to have acquired great reputation with Chhatrasāl, Rāja of Bundelkhand, for whom he discovered a diamond mine. They appear in the Census returns chiefly in the Gorakhpur Division; but Professor Wilson says that Bundelkhand is the chief seat of the order, and at Panna is a building dedicated to the use of the sect, in one apartment of which, on a table covered with gold cloth, lies the volume of the founder.²

2. "As a test of the disciple's consent to the real identity of the Hindu and Muhammadan creeds, the ceremony of initiation consists of eating in the society of members of both communions; with this exception, and the admission of the general principle, it does not appear that the two classes confound their civil or even religious distinctions; they continue to observe the practices and ritual of their forefathers, whether Musalmān or Hindu, and the union, beyond that of the community of eating, is no more than any rational individual of either sect is fully prepared for, or the admission that the God of both and of all religions is one and the same."

Distribution of the Prānnāthīs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.										Numbers.
Palibhita	7
Lalitpur	13
Gorakhpur	26
Basti	23
TOTAL										69

¹ Dictionary of Economic Products, I, 427, esp.

² Essays, I, 721. For an account of the religious books of this sect see Gleadow, Mathura, 200, 202.

Pundir—A sept of Rajputs who appear to belong to the Dahima, one of the thirty-six royal tribes, of whom Colonel Tod¹ writes—“The Dahima has left but the wreck of a great name. Seven centuries have swept away all recollection of a tribe who once afforded one of the proudest themes for the song of the bard. The Dahima was the lord of Bayāna and one of the most powerful vassals of the Chauhān Emperor, Prithivī Rāja. Three brothers of this house held the highest offices under this monarch, and the period during which the elder, Kaunas, was his minister, was the brightest in the history of the Chauhān. But he fell a victim to blind jealousy. Pundir, the second brother, commanded the frontier at Lahore. The third, Chāond Rāṭ, was the principal leader in the last battle, where Prithivī Rāja fell, with the whole of his cavalry, on the banks of the Kāgar. Even the historians of Shahāb-ud dīn have preserved the name of the gallant Dahima, Chāond Rāṭ, whom they style Khandē Rāṭ, and to whose valour, they relate, Shahāb-ud dīn himself nearly fell a sacrifice. With the Chauhān, the race seems to have been extinguished.” The original seat of the Panjāb² Pundirs was Taanesar and the Kurukshetra of Karnāl and Ambāla, with local capitals at Pūndri, Ramba, Hābri and Pūndrak; but they were dispossessed by the Chauhān under Rāna Har Rāṭ, and for the most part fled beyond the Jumna. From this event most probably their settlement in these Provinces dates. In the Duāb they say that they came from Hardwar in the Sahāranpur District. Their leader is said to have been Raja Damar Singh, who established himself at Gambhira in Pargana Akrahād of the Aligarh District. Their fort was Bijaygarh, which took its name from Bijay, brother of Damar Singh. It was captured in 1803 at the cost of the lives of Colonel Gordon and other British officers. It has now passed into the hands of the Rāja of Awa. These Duāb Pundirs hold a respectable rank and intermarry with the higher Rajput septs.

2. In the Upper Duāb they are reported to give girls to the Bargūjar, Chauhān, Gahlot, Kathiya, Tomar, Chhokar, and Bhatti; and to take brides from the Bargūjar, Chauhān, Gahlot, Tomar, Bais, and Bhatti septs.

¹ Annals, I 123

² Ibbetson, Panjāb Ethnography, section 413

for the office which arose between the families of Vasishtha and Visvamitra¹

2 The functions of the Purohit in modern times are confined to the performance of the less intricate rites, those of more ceremonial intricacy and importance being left to the Achârya, Hotri, Bidua, and other priests of higher rank. He helps his master to perform the annual Srâddha, nets the part of a Brâhman, who must be fed before his employer breaks his fast, officiates at the family shrine of the household gods, helps the barber to find a husband for his master's daughter, cooks for him on a journey, and arranges for the feeding of Brahmans. He sometimes does a vicarious pilgrimage for his employer, and the extension of these functions to the richer members of the lower castes is the chief method by which they are brought within the fold of Brahmanism.

3 Of these Brâhman priests Sir Monier-Williams writes : " His anger is as terrible as that of the gods. His blessing makes rich, his curse withers. Nay, more, he is himself actually worshipped as god. No marvel, no prodigy in nature, is believed to be beyond the limits of his power to accomplish. If the priest were to threaten to bring down the sun from the sky or arrest it in its daily course in the heavens, no villager would for a moment doubt his power to do so. And indeed the priests of India in their character of Brahmans, claim to have worked a few notable miracles at different times and on various occasions. One of their number once swallowed the ocean in three sips another manufactured fire, another created animals and another turned the moon into a cinder. The priest confers incalculable benefits on the community of which he is a member by merely receiving their presents. A cow given to him secures heaven of a certainty to the lucky donor. The consequences of injuring him are terrific. A man who does him the smallest harm, must make up his mind to be whirled about after death, for at least a century, in a hell of total darkness."

Parwal, Purwar —A sub caste of Banyas who are believed to take their name from Puri or Jagannath. According to Mr Sherring² they live in large houses in Benares and are persons of consequence. The sub-caste is divided into twenty branches. Some are Vaishnavas and some Jains.

¹ Muir Ancient Sanskrit Texts I 198 Note. Manu Institutes XII 46. Harig Aitareya Brâhmanam I 67 II 508. Max Muller Ancient Sanskrit Literature 485 599.

² Monier Williams Brahmanism and Hinduism 457.

³ Hindu Castes I 233.

Distribution of Purwál Banyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Jains.	TOTAL.
Sahāranpur	1	7	8
Bolandsahr	5	5
Mathura	9	86	95
Agra	434	4,048	4,482
Farrukhābād	664	15	679
Meerut	336	237	573
Etāwah	9,621	7	9,628
Etah	3,159	3,159
Bareilly	519	...	519
Budāun	41	...	41
Filibhit	42	...	42
Cawnpur	1,859	20	...
Fatehpur	40	...	40
Bānda	189	161	350
Hamirpur	512	61	573
Alīghābād	36	...	36
Jhānsi	189	1,504	1,693
Jālaun	1,167	...	1,167
Lalitpur	6,694	6,694
Ballia	25	...	25
Gorakhpur	6,183	...	6,183
Lucknow	13	...	13
Sitapur	4,078	...	4,078
Kheri	685	...	685
Gonda	156	...	156
Bahrāich	3,063	...	3,063
Bārabanki	1,041	...	1,041
TOTAL	30,003	16,010	46,013

Q

Qâdiri, Qâdiriya —An order of Muhammadan Taqirs, who are the followers of Abdul Qâdir Jilânî, who is buried in Baghdad. The Arabs, who have no hard g letter, alter to Jilân the name of his birth-place Gilan, a tract between the Caspian and the Black Sea. He is also known as Pîran i-Pîr and Pîr Dastgîr, "the saint of saints, the helper of the helpless," and as Ghaus ul Azam, Ghaus ul Sumdam, Mahhûb Subhânî, and so on. He was born in 1078 A D, and died in 1166 A D, and was buried at Baghdad, where he held the post of guardian of Abu Hanîfa's tomb¹. Mr MacLagan writes²—"Most of the Sunni Maulavis of the Panjab belong to this order, as does also the Akhund of Swât. They practise both the silent and the loud form of service (the zikr i khafi as well as the zikr i jalli). In youth they shout the Kalîma with a particular intonation of the words illâh 'illâhu, but afterwards articulate it with suppressed breath. They reject musical accompaniments, and seldom indulge in songs, even unaccompanied by music, in their religious devotions. They wear green turbans, and one of their garments must be of ochre a colour first used by the saint Hasan Basrî. The repetition of the Daiûd, or salutation to the Prophet, bears a conspicuous part in the ceremonial of this order. Their chief places of sanctity in the Panjab are the Khanqah of Maulana Muhammad Fâzil in Batîla, the Mausoleum in Lahore of Shah Muhammad Ghaus, whose disciples are found as far as Kâbal, Ghazni, and Jalalabad, the shrine of Tâhir Bandagi in Lahore, and that of Shâh Kamal at Hujra Shah Muqim in the Montgomery District. There is also a shrine of his between the fort and the city at Ludhiânâ where the saint is said to have left his tooth brush. A fair, called the Roshani Fair is held here on the 14th of Rabî us Sâni, cattle are tied up at night at the shrine for good luck, and are said to keep watch (chanki) at the shrine, and women who desire offspring make offerings."

2 The order has a special interest, as it was into this that Sir R. Burton was initiated before his famous pilgrimage to Makkah and Madîna. The curious may consult the record of the journey for a copy of the diploma investiture which he received³.

¹ Beal Oriental Dictionary s. v.

² Panjab Census Report 191.

³ II 377

Distribution of the Qādiris according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Numbers.	DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Dehra Dūn	71	Bānda	8
Sahāranpur	316	Hamīrpur	6
Muzaffarnagar	164	Allahābād	78
Bulandshahr	759	Jhānsi	1
Mathura	13	Lalitpur	14
Agra	2	Ghāzipur	129
Farrukhābād	21	Gorakhpur	21
Mainpuri	22	Tarāi	453
Etāwah	36	Lucknow	32
Etah	65	Rāē Bareilī	110
Bareilly	1,152	Sitapur	2
Budāun	206	Faizābād	236
Morādābād	294	Gonda	1
Shābjahānpur	401	Bahrāich	15
Pilibhit	677	Bārābankī	129
Fatehpur	2	TOTAL	5,436

Qalālgar (Arabic qaldī, "tin").—The man who tins the copper cooking-vessels, which are so widely used both by Muhammadans and Christians. The caste, so-called, is purely occupational, and all who entered their names as such at the last Census were Muhammadans.

Distribution of the Qaldigars according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Numbers.	DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Muzaffarnagar	4	Tarāi	12
Budāun	22	Lucknow
Morādābād	31	Gonda	1
Fatehpur	3	Bahrāich	1
Jhānsi	2	Soltānpur	2
Ghāzipur	10	TOTAL	69

Qalandar.—A caste of Muhammadan Faqirs, bear and monkey eaders. According to Mr Platte, the word is used for the original kalandar, "a rough, unshaped block or log." They trace their origin to the Saint Bo Ali Qalandar, who died in 1323-24. Of him many wondrous tales are told. He used to ride about on a wall, but at last settled down at Panipat. "The Jamna then flowed under the town, and he prayed so continuously that he found it convenient to stand in the river and wash his hands without moving. After seven years of this he got stiff, and the fishes ate his legs, so he asked the river to step back seven paces and let him dry. In her hurry to oblige the saint, she retreated seven miles, and there she is now. He gave the people of Panipat a charm which drove away all flies from the city. But they grumbled and said they rather liked flies, so he brought them back a thousandfold. The people have since repented. There was a good deal of trouble about his funeral. He died near Karnal, and there they buried him. But the Panipat people claimed his body, and came and opened his grave, on which he sat up and looked at them till they felt ashamed. They then took some bricks from his grave with which to found a shrine, but when they got to Panipat and opened the box, they found his body in it, so he now lies buried both at Panipat and Karnal."¹

2 The Qalandar of these Provinces is generally a lazy, swindling

Occupation rascal, some of whom go about with snakes, others with tame bears and monkeys. He wears round his neck several strands of white stones or beads and glass. He also carries a bead rosary (tabish), and usually on his right wrist two or a single brass bangle. On his right leg he has an iron chain. He also has a vessel (kushki) made of cocoanut shell (darydi ndriyal), and a brass tota. Sometimes he has an iron bar as well. He announces his approach by twanging the damaru, or little drum, shaped like an hour glass. Those who have monkeys, the male being generally called Maula Bakhsh and the female Zahuran, make them dance to amuse children. Those who have bears, make them dance, and allow for a consideration little boys to ride on their backs, which is believed to be a charm against the small pox. They also sell some of their hair, which is a favourite amulet against the Evil Eye. Some go about as ordinary beggars. Though they wander about begging they are not absolute vagrants, as they have settled homes and families.

¹Ibbetson, Panjab Ethnography section 2nd; Lady Burton Arabian Nights I, 51 VI 2nd

3. Marriage among them takes place at the age of from ten to twenty. They follow in all their ceremonies the rules of the Snnni sect of Muhammadans, to which they belong. Some of them have taken to the trade of the Bisâti, and make tin frames for lanterns and small boxes (diliya) out of tin. All Muhammadans will eat and smoke with them. No Hindu, except a Dom or a Dharkâr, will touch their food.

4. The Qalandar is our old friend the Calendar of the Arabian Nights. Most of them are merely loafing beggars; but in Rohilkhand there appears to be a branch of them known as the Langrê, or "lame," Qalandars, who are said to be Rohillas from Râmpur.¹ They were formerly residents of Hardoi, and devoted themselves to stealing horses and ponies, which were passed from Oudh to British territory and vice versa. Shâhâbâd, in Hardoi, was regarded as their head-quarters, and there they had the name of Machhlê. On the annexation of Oudh, they divided into gangs, and nominated one Bânkê as their leader (sargiroâ), with two assistants, known as the Bhandâri, or purveyor, and Kotwâl, or police officer. On the celebration of the marriage of any of their members they continue, if possible, to assemble together and distribute food and wine to the best of their ability; on the occasion of marriage ceremonies among the Khattris, when any of the gangs are present, gifts of food and money are given to them, which they designate their birt, or "maintenance." This is also the name given to what they receive on certain occasions when religious ceremonies are performed. They are very superstitious, and have their own omens and signs, some of which are considered lucky, and others the reverse. Thus the barking of a hyena behind them or on their left is considered a bad omen.

5. This tribe, or rather the numerous gangs composing it, proceed through districts disguised and call themselves Langrê Qalandar or Rohillas of

Mode of thieving.

¹ Report of Mr. H. Ross, District Superintendent of Police, Pilibhit.

Râmpur In Râmpur and the neighbourhood they use the former, and towards Lucknow the latter. They travel about in the cold and hot weather, but in the rains they settle down and occupy themselves in begging. Their wives and children accompany them, but they do not encumber their movements with any luxury, such as cattle, furniture, etc., having only one or two ponies for the transport of their personal effects, in addition to which, hidden among their quilts and blankets, are reins, ropes, and headstalls for the stolen ponies. This is undoubtedly the reason why they have hitherto never been classed as a criminal tribe, nor have raised suspicion as to their real character. They pass the night under trees or in the fields, or, if near a populous place, in a convenient grove. During the day, disguised as beggars, they mark down the horses and ponies which they purpose to steal. When they obtain a fair number of animals, they pass off as horse-merchants, and make their escape as rapidly as possible. Animals stolen near Lucknow are sold in the northern parts of Oudh and the North-West Provinces—their chief markets being Bilaspur in the Râmpur State, Darâo in the Tarai, and Chichant in Bareilly. They chiefly frequent the districts of Pilibhît, Kheri, Bahrûch, and the Tarâi, as they are close to Nepâl, where ponies and fodder are plentiful.

6 These people have a regular thieves' argot of their own, of Thieves' argot of the Langrô Qalandars which the following are examples —

Bidna	.	.	.	Man
Bidni	.	.	.	Woman.
Basta	.	.	.	Rupce
Bairgi	.	.	.	Cot
Botay	.	.	.	Sheet, quilt
Bayrin	.	.	.	Gun.
Bodi	.	.	.	Hair tuft
Châl	.	.	.	Hair
Chelha	.	.	.	Flour
Chiki	.	.	.	Fire
Chitya	.	.	.	Cat
Chirimi	.	.	.	Fish
Charya	.	.	.	Tree
Chirma	.	.	.	Colt
Dtsind	.	.	.	Barglary.

Dhun	.	.	.	Ear.
Dúdrín	.	.	.	Leg.
Dhurd	.	.	.	Grain.
Dhurcha	.	.	.	Red pepper.
Dhungara	.	.	.	{ The Singhára nut (water caltrop).
Dhingaila	.	.	.	Bullock.
Dhingaili	.	.	.	Cow.
Dhúwar	.	.	.	Pig.
Dhung	.	.	.	Sheep.
Dhujja	.	.	.	Cock.
Dhuttar	.	.	.	Camel.
Dhúhari	.	.	.	Sugarcane.
Dhulludár	.	.	.	Police Officer.
Dhuddah	.	.	.	Duck.
Dhurangi	.	.	.	European.
Dhúsa	.	.	.	Mouse.
Ealakh	.	.	.	Oil.
Ghutrín	.	.	.	Eyes.
Ghummar	.	.	.	Elephant.
Ghutlani	.	.	.	Eight annas.
Ghurka	.	.	.	Water pot, jug.
Jurha	.	.	.	Pony.
Jurhi	.	.	.	Pony mare.
Khunji	.	.	.	Buffalo.
Kumdár	.	.	.	Comrade.
Khuranga	.	.	.	Donkey.
Khurchna	.	.	.	Pipe, hugqah .
Khunnay	.	.	.	House.
Khail	.	.	.	Wine.
Lálka	.	.	.	Butter, ghi .
Lung	.	.	.	Rope.
Morhay	.	.	.	Tooth.
Matláo	.	.	.	Tank, pond.
Maikrín	.	.	.	Goat.
Mogán	.	.	.	Jackal.
Mithkar	.	.	.	Sugarcane.
Mukhi	.	.	.	Sheep.
Mohidár	.	.	.	Village Watchman.
Markni	.	.	.	Bludgeon.

Nudli	Village.
Niklu	Bread
Oi	A well.
Phirkni	Cart.
Pecha	Pice.
Patki	Grass.
Rdp.	Foot.
Ratdila	Stomach.
Ratki	Wheat.
hípún	Shoe.
Sarpna	Nose.
Thunda	Boy.
Thundi	Girl.
Thúb	Hand.
Tena	Head.
Thum	Grain.
Tundul	Rice.
Theman	Salt.
Thimman	Coarse sugar (gur).
Thimjái	Sweatmeat.
Thubláh	Reins.
Thokay	Jungle.
Urka	Grain.
Dhulluddr áya har, paté hoé.					{ The Sub-Inspector is coming, run away.
Khurchna tudlo	Smoke the huggah .
Oi sé chayan marap lúo	{ Fetch the water from the well.
Phirni par dhurru lo	Get into the cart.
Dhurangi bakussa	A European approaches.
Khunnay men dhaind lagi	{ A burglary has been com- mitted in the house.
Mohiddr bakussa, jurhi thokay men khan do.	{ A watchman is coming, take the pony into the jungle.
Nakla nudli men kurka	{ A dog is barking in the jungle.

Distribution of the Qalandars according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Numbers.	DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Dehra Dûn . . .	13	Ghâzipur . . .	106
Meerut . . .	317	Ballia . . .	241
Bulandshahr . . .	644	Gorakhpur . . .	929
Aligarh . . .	36	Basti . . .	3,833
Mathura . . .	23	Lucknow . . .	11
Agra . . .	11	Unâo . . .	8
Farrukhâbâd . . .	19	Râo Bareilly . . .	207
Bareilly . . .	157	Sitapur . . .	62
Philbhit . . .	73	Kheri . . .	74
Cawnpur . . .	8	Faizâbâd . . .	316
Patehpur . . .	12	Gonda . . .	4
Allahâbâd . . .	265	Bahrâich . . .	10
Benares . . .	25	Sultânpur . . .	58
Mirzapur . . .	63	Bârabanki . . .	93
		TOTAL . . .	7,629

Qassâb, Qassâi—(Arabic qasab, "to cut"), the butcher caste.—They are usually separated into two endogamous sub-castes: Gau, Gawa or Gorû Qassâi, who kill cows and buffaloes, and Bakar Qassâi, who kill only goats. The latter is also known by the names Chik, Chikwa or Buzqassâb (Persian buz, "a goat"). The Chiks are all Hindus, and have various sub-castes, one of which is Khatîk. The Qassâbs are all Muhammadans of the Sunni sect, and follow the ordinary Muhammadan rules of exogamy and inheritance. Marriage usually takes place at the age of fifteen or sixteen, and when there are two or three marriageable youths in a family, they are generally married at the same time to save expense. Special reverence is paid in the east of the Province to the Pânchon Pir, and in particular to Ghâzi Miyân, to whom fowls, cakes (malida), sweetmeats, and garlands of flowers are offered. The food, after dedication, is consumed by the worshippers. At the Shab-i-bâit festival, they offer food to the sainted dead. The Gau-qassâb, from his trade, is naturally an object of detestation to orthodox Hindus. A common proverb runs Jahîn sagarê gdon qassâi, tahân ek Ramiddâ ki kâ basâi? "How can a single servant of God live in a village of butchers?" In effecting his purchases, he often has to assume disguises, and sometimes procures his supplies through the agency of Nats. In Lucknow¹ there are two classes of Qassâbs. Kamelâdar and Ghair Kamelâdar, Kamela meaning the "shambles," the former are slaughtermen, who sell wholesale, and the latter are retailers of meat, who buy from them and sell at shops. The former always count the hide their profit, and the latter sell at a fixed charge of one anna per ser for meat with bone, and one and a half annas per ser for boneless meat. Chikwas sometimes combine in a partnership of three or more, one remains in charge of the cattle yard and the other two go to neighbouring villages and buy up sheep and goats. Both Qassâbs and Chikwas again deal in hides.² Some, again, add to their meat business a trade in cloth and stone. A few hold land as non-occupancy tenants. "The Indo-Europeans all make their appearance in history as meat-eating peoples, and only among the Hindus did animal food as early as Vedic times give way more and more to a vegetable diet, obviously because of the climate."³ In Vedic times the Vnikarta was the butcher, who cut up and distributed the flesh of the sacrificial victim, and the custom is distinctly recognized and prescribed by Manu.⁴ In Buddhist times, however, we learn that in Madhyadesa "they do not keep swine or fowls they do not deal in living animals, nor are there shambles or wine shops round their markets."⁵

Distribution of Chikis and Qassâbs according to the Census of 1891

DISTRICTS	CHIKI		QASSÂB
	Khatik	Others	Bakar qassâb	Others
Dehra Dûn				79
Salâranpur				11701
Muzaffarnagar		.	17	12170

¹ Hoey Monograph 163

² See Hoey ib id 90 277

³ Schrader Preh. storie Ant. quæst. 315

⁴ Inst. tutes V 3^e 277

⁵ Deal Fall an 50

Distribution of Chiks and Qassâbs according to the Census of 1891—contd.

DISTRICTS.	CHIK.		QASSÂB.
	Khatik.	Others.	Dakar-qasâb.	Others.
Meerut	16,013
Bulandshahr	906	8,384
Aligarh	291	5,461
Mathura	5,418
Agra	4,300
Farrukhâbâd	1,936	403	1,243
Mainpuri	551	...	1,019
Etâwah . . .	34	812	...	745
Etab. . .	"	722	...	2,917
Bareilly	287	2,394	242
Bijnor	766	8,500
Budâun	532	841	1,746
Morâdâbâd	33	6,851
Sbâhjahânpur	585	533	2,519
Pilibhit	43	146	2,404
Cawnpur . . .	2	1,774	40	2,040
Fatehpar	95	10	2,554
Bânda	778	38	134
Hamirpur	541	...	575
Allahâbâd	409	621	2,675
Jbânsi	15	48	293
Jâlaun	138	...	30
Benares	1,295
Mirzapur	74	40	553
Jaunpur	510	1,240
Ghâzipur	1,945

Distribution of Chiks and Qassâbs according to the Census of 1891—concl.

DISTRICTS.	CHIK.		QASSÂB.
	Khatik.	Others.	Bakar-qassâb.	Others.
Ballia	8	385
Gorakhpur.	19	1,624
Basti	1,250	248
Azamgarh	124	2,610
Târai	2	...	690
Garhwâl	8	...
Lucknow	25	2,054	2,161
Unâo.	207	2,860
Râo Bareli.	11	1,020	1,443
Sitapur	1,183	1,388
Hardoi	13	50	1,559	892
Kheri	1	1,183	829
Faizâbâd	570	1,105
Gonda	231	1,900
Bahrâich	918	675
Sultânpur	1,191	520
Partâbgarh	506	301
Bârabanki	1,962	1,263
TOTAL	49	9,381	23,155	1,25,361

R

Râdhâ : Bhagat 1.—A tribe found chiefly in Rohilkhand and Oudh. The people returning themselves as Bhagat in the last Census returns are probably the same people. In Bareilly they have three endogamous sub-castes the Bhatela, Khatiya, and Bichauri. The rule of exogamy is that common to all tribes of this grade. According to tribal usage polygamy is forbidden, but this regulation is violated by the chief men of the tribe. They know nothing of their origin except that they are in some way connected with Râdhâ, the mistress of Krishna. They are perhaps, like the Kingariyas, akin to the great Nat race. They have now settled down and do not admit outsiders to their tribe. Those who can afford it practise infant marriage, the poor seldom marry till they are adult. The women are allowed no license either before or after marriage. Polyandry is prohibited as well as widow marriage. A wife detected in adultery is expelled from the house. They are Hindus and worship Parameswar, Devi, Mahâdeva, the Ganges, and the Miyân of Amroha, who is honoured with a sacrifice of sweet cakes (gulgula) and goats. These offerings are received by the Madîris who attend his shrine. Men and women both worship this godling. They engage Brahmans for their religious and quasi religious ceremonies. Such Brahmans are received on equal terms with their brethren. They burn their adult dead and bury children. The ashes are consigned to the Ganges or any of its tributaries. They perform the usual śrâddha in the month of Kârîr as a propitiation to the spirits of the dead.

2 Their profession as is shown by their name, is singing and dancing, and it has been so from time immemorial. Their musical instruments are the tabla, or tambourine, and the sârangi, or guitar. Some of them have now turned to cultivation. They do not, like other similar tribes, prostitute their girls or married women. They abstain from intoxicating liquor, and eat no meat but that of goats.

Distribution of the Râdhas and Bhagats according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	RÂDHA.		BHAGAT.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
Sabârânpur	1	...	1	...
Farrukhâbâd	60	61	82	103
Mainpuri	4	6	5	2
Etâwah	2	10
Etah	76	61
Dareilly	29	23	12	2
Budâun	8	5	6	5
Morâdâbâd	1
Fârhjâbânpur	231	232
Pûbbit	61	74
Cawnpur	1
Bânda	3	1	1	2
Benares	67	67
Tarâi	7	4
Locknow	8	10
Aligarh	359	376
Hardoi	373	673
Kheri	313	301
Patna	107	120
Râmpur	14	23
Total	2,026	2,079	212	211

Rādha Vallabhi — A Gṇeśān order founded by Hari Vans, of whom Mr Growse¹ says — “His father Vyāsa was a Gṇr Brāhman of Devaban in the Sahāranpur District who had long been childless. He was in the service of the Emperor, and on one occasion was attending him on his march from Agra, when at last his wife Tara gave birth to a son at the little village of Bād, near Mathura, in the Sambat year 1659. In grateful recognition of their answered prayers, the parents named the child after the god they had invoked and called him Hari Vans, i.e., ‘Hari’s issue.’ When he had grown up he took to himself a wife by name Rukmini, and had by her two sons and one daughter. After setting his daughter in marriage, he determined to abandon the world and live the life of an ascetic. With this resolution he set out alone on the road to Brindaban, and had reached Chauthawal near Hodal, when there met him a Brāhman, who presented him with his two daughters, and insisted on his marrying them, on the strength of a divine command which he said he had received in a vision. He further gave him an image of Krishna with the title of Rādha Vallabha which, on his arrival at Brindaban, was set up by Hari Vans in a temple that he had erected between the Jugal and the Koliya Ghats on the banks of the Jamuna. Originally he had belonged to the Madhvācharya Sampradāya, and from them and the Nimbāraks, who also claim him, his doctrine and ritual were professedly derived. But in consequence of the mysterious incident by which he had been induced to forego his intention of leading a celibate life, and to take to himself two wives, or rather in consequence of his strong natural passions which he was unable to suppress and therefore invented a fiction to excuse, his devotion was all directed, not to Krishna himself, except in a very secondary degree, but to his fabled mistress Rādha, whom he deified as the goddess of lust.”

2 After quoting some of his poems, Mr Growse goes on to say “If ever the language of the brothel was borrowed for temple use it has been so here. But, strange to say, the Gṇsams, who accept as their gospel these nauseous ravings of a diseased imagination, are for the most part highly respectable married men, who contrast rather favourably with the professors of rival sects that are based on more reputable authorities. Several of them have a Distribution of the Rādhas and Bhagats according to the Census of 1891.

Districts	RĀDHA.		BHAGAT.
	Males	Females	Males	Females
Balrampur	1	..	1	..
Barrabhad	60	61	52	103
Balrampur	1	6	5	2
Biknah	2	10
Elah	70	61
Baran	22	24	12	5
Balrampur	8	8	6	6
Barrabhad	1
Barrabhad	251	242
Baran	61	74
Cawnpur	1
Tanda	3	1	1	3
Baran	62	67
Tanda	2	4
Locknow	8	10
Baran	312	376
Baran	772	662
Kheri	313	301
Barrabhad	107	130
Baran	19	33
TOTAL	2,036	2,079	212	233

Rādha Swāmī.—A small sect, containing at the last Census only 188 adherents, mostly residents of Mathura; is said to have been founded by Rāj Siliṅ Rām, late Postmaster General of these Provinces. The tenets of the sect seem to differ little from those of the modern reformed Vaiṣṇavas.

Râdha Vallabhi.—A Gusâin order founded by Hari Vans, of whom Mr. Growse¹ says:—"His father Vyâsa was a Gaur Brâhman of Devaban in the Sahâranpur District who had long been childless. He was in the service of the Emperor, and on one occasion was attending him on his march from Agra, when at last his wife Târa gave birth to a son at the little village of Bâd, near Mathura, in the Sambat year 1559. In grateful recognition of their answered prayers, the parents named the child after the god they had invoked and called him Hari Vans, i.e., 'Hari's issue.' When he had grown up he took to himself a wife by name Rukmini, and had by her two sons and one daughter. After settling his daughter in marriage, he determined to abandon the world and live the life of an ascetic. With this resolution he set out alone on the road to Brindaban, and had reached Charthâwal near Hodal, when there met him a Brâhman, who presented him with his two daughters, and insisted on his marrying them, on the strength of a divine command which he said he had received in a vision. He further gave him an image of Krishna with the title of Râdha Vallabha, which, on his arrival at Brindaban, was set up by Hari Vans in a temple that he had erected between the Jugal and the Kohya Ghâts on the banks of the Jamuna. Originally he had belonged to the Mâdhvâcharya Sampradâya, and from them and the Nimbâraks, who also claim him, his doctrine and ritual were professedly derived. But in consequence of the mysterious incident by which he had been induced to forego his intention of leading a celibate life, and to take to himself two wives, or rather in consequence of his strong natural passions which he was unable to suppress and therefore invented a fiction to excuse, his devotion was all directed, not to Krishna himself, except in a very secondary degree, but to his fabled mistress Râdha, whom he deified as the goddess of lust."

2. After quoting some of his poems, Mr. Growse goes on to say: "If ever the language of the brothel was borrowed for temple use it has been so here. But, strange to say, the Gusâins, who accept as their gospel these nauseous ravings of a diseased imagination, are for the most part highly respectable married men, who contrast rather favourably with the professors of rival sects that are based on more reputable authorities. Several of them have a very good knowledge of literary Hindi; but their proficiency in Sanskrit is not very high.

¹ Mathura, 185, 227.

3. "To indicate the fervour of his passionate love for his divine mistress, Hari Vans assumed the title of Hit Ji, and is popularly better known by this name than by the one which he received from his parents. His most famous disciple was Vyās Ji of Orchha, of whom various legends are reported. On his first visit to the Swāmi he found him busy cooking, but at once propounded some knotty theological problems. The sage, without any hesitation, solved the difficulty, but first threw away the whole of the food which he had prepared, with the remark that no one could attend properly to two things at once. Vyās was so struck with this procedure that he then and there enrolled himself as his disciple, and in a short space of time conceived such an affection for Brindaban that he was most reluctant to leave it, even to return to his wife and children. At last, however, he forced himself to go, but he had not been with them long before he determined that they should themselves disown him, and accordingly he one day in their presence ate some food from a Bhāngi's hand. After this act of social excommunication, he was allowed to return to Brindaban, where he spent the remainder of his life, and where his Samādhi or tomb is still to be seen."

Distribution of the Rādhā Vallabhi Gurdāns according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Numbers.	DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Muzaffarnagar	30	Morādābād	2
Agra	70	Lahitpur	5
Mainpuri	5	Gorakhpur	13
Etah	13	Gonda	111
Bijnor	3	TOTAL	252
Males		160
Females		92

Raghubansi.—A sept of Rājputs connected with the Nikumbh (q. v.). Those in Sultānpur¹ profess to be lineally descended from Raghu, an ancestor of Rāma, and claim to have been settled in their present abode ever since the time of their eponymous ancestor. For centuries they resisted successfully the threatened encroachments of the Bachgotis, and maintained intact a frontier marked by a little nameless affluent of the Gumti. It was not till within the half century of disorder and misrule which preceded the annexation of the Province, that they succumbed, and even now, though only in a subordinate position, they retain no considerable portion of their ancient heritage. In Sitapur¹ they have suffered much in recent times, and are gradually dying out. In their estates a tradition exists that the cultivation of sugar is fatal to the farmer, and that the tiling of a house brings down divine displeasure upon the owner, hence to this day no sugar is grown and not a tiled house is to be seen.

2 In Sultanpur they marry girls of the Bilkhariya, Tashariya, Chandaurya, Kath Bais, Bhalé Sultan, Chandel, and Palwar septs, and give brides to the Tilokchandi Bais, Mainpuri Chauhans, Surajbansis of Māhni Gantams of Nagar, Majhaub Bisens, Rajkumar and Bachgoti. Their gotra is Kasyapa. In Jaunpur they take brides of the Nikumbh, Gaharwar, Chaupat Khamb, Bais Bisens, Kakan, Singhel, Sombansi, and Ujjaini.

Distribution of the Raghubansi Rājputs according to the Census of 1891

DISTRICTS	Numbers	DISTRICTS	Numbers
Saharanpur	9	Bareilly	59
Meerut	21	Budaun	349
Algarh	46	Morādābād	95
Mathura	19	Shāhjahanpur	1 396
Agra	63	Pilibhit	114
Farrukhābād	210	Cawnpur	261
Mainpuri	291	Fatehpur	479
Etāwah	294	Bānda	1 795
Etah	414	Hamirpur	614

Distribution of the Raghubansi Rajputs according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICTS.	Numbers.	DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Allahâbâd . . .	403	Lucknow . . .	269
Jhânsi . . .	57	Unho . . .	394
Jâloun . . .	33	Râs Bareli . . .	797
Lalitpur . . .	10	Sitapur . . .	611
Benares . . .	15,197	Hardoi . . .	156
Mirzapur . . .	2,035	Kheri . . .	431
Jaunpur . . .	17,412	Faizâbâd . . .	2,021
Ghâzipur . . .	2,956	Gonda . . .	11
Dallia . . .	161	Dahedich . . .	175
Gorakhpur . . .	1,445	Soltânpur . . .	3,687
Basti . . .	997	Partâbgarb . . .	90
Azamgarh . . .	2,477	Bârsbanki . . .	1,249
Tarâi . . .	20	TOTAL . . .	61,216

Rahwâri¹ (rahwâr, "quickpaced, active").—A caste of camel owners and drivers, also known as Riwâri, Râewâri. Of these people Abûl Fazl writes²:—"Raibâri is the name given to a class of Hindus who are acquainted with the habits of the camel. They teach the country-bred loh camel so to step as to pass over great distances in a short time. Although from the capital to the frontiers of the Empire, into every direction, relay horses are stationed, and swift runners have been posted at the distance of every five kos, a few of these camel riders are kept at the palace in readiness. Each Raibâri is put in charge of fifty stud arwadâhs, to which, for the purpose of breeding, one bughur and two lohs are attached." Colonel Tod,³ writing of the Raibâris, says:—"This term is known throughout Hindustân only as denoting persons employed in rearing and tending camels, who are there always Muslims. Here they are a distinct tribe and Hindus, employed in rearing camels, or in stealing them, in which they evince a peculiar dexterity, uniting with the Bhattis in the practice as far as Dâûdputra. When they come upon a herd grazing, the boldest and most experienced strikes his lance into the first he reaches, then dips a cloth in the blood, which, at the end of his lance, he thrusts close to the nose of the next, and, wheeling about, sets off at speed, followed by the whole herd, lured by the scent of blood and the example of their leader." Of the Bombay branch of the tribe we are told that "in Kachchh they say they came from Mârwar, and this is supported by the fact that the seat of their tribe goddess Sikotra is at Jodhpur. The story of their origin is that Siva, while performing religious penance (tap), created a camel and a man to graze it. This man had four daughters, who married Râjputs of the Chanhân, Gambhîr, Solaukî, and Pramâr tribes. These and their offspring, were all camel drivers. Tall and strongly made, with high features and an oval face, the Rahwârî, like the Ahîr, takes flesh and spirits, and does not scruple to eat with Musalmâns. He lives for days solely on camel's milk. Except a black blanket over his shoulders, the Rahwârî wears cotton clothes. This waist cloth (dhoti) is worn tucked through his legs, and not wound round the hips like a Râjput's. They live much by themselves in small hamlets of six or eight grass huts. They are described as civil and obliging, honest, intelligent, contented, and kindly. They are very poor, living on the produce of their herds. Each family has a she-camel called Mâta Merî, which is never ridden, and whose milk is never given to any one but a Hindu"¹

¹ Largely based on a note by Bâbu Atma Râm, Head Master, High School-Mathura.

² Blochmann, Ain-e-Akbari, I, 147, sq. For a complete account of the camel, see Watt, Economic Dictionary, s.v.

³ Annals, II, 357.

2. They pretend to possess a complete set of gotras; but no one can even attempt to give a full list of them.

The Rahwârîs of the North West Provinces. A man cannot marry in his mother's or grandmother's gotra. They claim to be Râjputs, but cannot designate any particular sept as that from which they have sprung. They do not admit outsiders into their tribe. Both infant and adult marriages are allowed, and no sexual license on the part of the girls is tolerated before marriage. Polyandry is prohibited, and polygamy allowed up to the extent of three wives at a time. The marriage is celebrated in the usual Hindu fashion, and the perambulations

¹ Bombay Gazetteer, V, 80, see also VII, 137, 12

(bhânwar phirna) round the nuptial shed are the binding part of the ritual. A widow may marry again by the dharîcha form, and the levirate is permitted, but it is not compulsory on the widow to marry the younger brother of her late husband. A wife can be expelled from the house for infidelity, and for no other cause. Such a woman may marry again in the tribe by the dharîcha form.

3. The Rahwâris are Vaishnavas and worship Bhagwân. They worship Devi in the months of Chait and Religion and customs. Kuâr, as well as Zâhir Pîr in Bhâdon. They eat the offerings themselves, which consist of sweetmeats and fruits. They employ Brâhmanas as their family priests, and such Brâhmanas are received on an equality with those who do the same service for other castes. They burn their dead. Poor people leave the ashes on the cremation ground; those who can afford it take them to the Ganges or Jumna. They do the srâddha, and some even go to Gaya for that purpose. Their primary occupation is rearing, tending, and letting out camels for hire. Some have purchased land, others cultivate as tenants, and others are landless labourers. They eat the flesh of cloven-footed animals, fowls, and fish; but not mookkeys, pork, beef, flesh of whole footed animals, crocodiles, snakes, lizards, jackals, rats, or other vermin, or the leavings of other people. They can eat pakks in the same dish with Jâts, and can use their tobacco pipes, and they will also smoke with Gûjars; but they will eat kachchi only with their own caste. The Rahbâri, as he appears in these Provinces, has rather an evil reputation for high-handedness, and he is proverbially deceitful and untrustworthy.

Distribution of the Rahwâris according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS	Numbers.	DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Muzaffarnagar . . .	39	Meerut . . .	34
Meerut . . .	18	Etah . . .	4
Bulandshahr . . .	89	Jhânsi . . .	2
Mathura . . .	454	Ghâzipur . . .	4
Agra . . .	254	TOTAL . . .	898

Raikwâr.—A sept of Râjputs who claim to be of Sûrajbansi origin. Their settlement in Bahraich¹ dates from about 1414 A. D., when, during the anarchy that prevailed through Hindustân on the decline of the house of Tughlaq, the two brothers, Pratâp Sah and Dondî Sah, Sûrajbans Râjputs, migrated from Raika in Kashmîr, whence they profess to take their name, and finally took up their abode at Râmnagar in the Barabankî District. His sons overcame the Bhar Râja and acquired his estate about 1450 A D, and since then the Raikwârs have been masters of the western part of the district. In the time of Akbar, Harihar Devî, fifth in descent from Pratap Sah, who had been summoned to court to explain a breach of good manners in levying toll from one of the Princesses as she passed through his estate on a pilgrimage to the shrine of Sayyid Salîr, rendered such assistance to the Emperor in his campaign against the rebellious Governor of Kashmîr, that he was granted nearly nine parganas. The connection of the Unâo¹ family with the great Râjys on the banks of the Ghagra had been entirely broken off, but when they began to rise in political importance they sought to renew it, and Mitthu Singh and Bakht Singh went to Râmnagar and claimed brotherhood with the Raja. He heard their story and entertained them with hospitality, and sent them out food. Amongst other things he provided tooth brushes made of the wood of the nîm tree. All other Rajputs place a special value on this wood, but the Raikwars alone are forbidden to use it. The rejection of these tooth-brushes by his guests proved to him that they were truly of his own kin. The brother of the founders of the families of Baundi and Ramnagar² was Bhairwanand. His nephews concocted a prophecy that their uncle should be sacrificed to secure the future greatness of the family, and he gave up his life for their sake. A platform, erected in the village of Chanda Sihah, marks the tradition that Bhairwanand fell into a well and was allowed to drown there in the hope that the prophecy would be fulfilled and their rule continue for ever. To the present day Raikwars make an annual pilgrimage to the platform of Bhairwanand.

2 In Raê Bareh³ their sons marry girls of the Bisen and Trans Ghagra Bais, their daughters marry in the Bais, Panwar, and Amethya septs. In Bareilly they select brides from the Bachhal and Gautam sept; their sons marry Jaaghâra, Bhûr and Katheriya girls. In Farrukhâbâd they claim to belong to the Vasishtha gotra; their girls marry in the Sombansi, Râthaur, and Chauhâa sept; their sons, in the Katheriya, Gaur, Baisgaur, Nikumbh, Jaiswâr, Chamâr Gaur, Ujjai, and Parihâr. In Unâo their daughters marry Dikhits, Gaharwârs, Janwârs, Chauhâas, and Chaadels; their sons, Mahrors and Gahlots. In Unâo they say they belong to the Bhâradvâja gotra; they take brides from the Bisen, Ahban, Katheriya, Gaur, and Chandel, and give brides to the Sombansi, Chandel, Gaur, Chauhâa, Tomar, and Ahban. In Hardoi,¹ during the Mutiny, they were remarkable for their lawlessness, and it was in attacking their fort at Ruiya that the lamented Adrian Hope was killed.

¹ Ellott Chronicles 45 sq.

² Manual of Titles in Oudh 10. Oudh Gazetteer, I 11ⁿ 1^o sq. 25ⁿ 285

³ Settlement Report Append x C

Distribution of the Raikwâr Râjputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Dehra Dûn	1	...	1
Sahâranpur	14	14
Muzaffarnagar	606	606
Mathura	2	...	2
Agra	1	...	1
Farrukhâbâd	623	33	655
Mainpuri	87	...	87
Etâwah	80	...	80
Etah	39	...	39
Harailly	355	..	355
Budâun	760	...	760
Morâdshâh	41	...	41
Shâhjahânpur	99	10	109
Pilibhit	2	10	12
Cawnpur	261	...	261
Fatehpur	116	...	116

¹ Settlement Report, 1891.

Distribution of the RAIKWAR Rajputs according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Bānda	28	...	28
Hamīrpur	63	...	63
Allahābād	401	45	446
Jhānsi	4	...	4
Jālaun	462	1	463
Lalitpur	3	...	3
Benares	1	...	1
Jaunpur	95	...	95
Ghāzipur	228	...	228
Ballia	701	...	701
Gorakhpur	843	14	857
Basti	881	...	881
Azamgarh	1,025	...	1,025
Lucknow	407	...	407
Unāo	2,070	431	2,501
Rāo Bareilly	169	39	207
Sitapur	1,165	62	1,227
Hardoi	2,073	...	2,073
Kheri	308	9	315
Faizābād	1,758	...	1,758
Gonda	737	...	737
Bahrāich	4,247	350	4,597
Sultānpur	282	42	324
Partābgarh	916	116	1,032
Bārabanki	2,578	17	2,595
TOTAL	23,909	1,708	25,707

Râin.—A gardening and cultivating caste found in the Meerut and Rohilkhand Divisions, with both a Hindu and Muhammadan branch. They are the same as the Arâins of the Panjâb, of whom Mr. Purser writes:—"The Arâins say they came from Sirsa, Raniya, and Delhi, and were originally Hindu Râjputs. They claim to be descended from Râê Jaj, the grandson of Lava, founder of Lahore. Jaj was the ruler of the Sirsa territory, and on that account was called Râê; and his descendants became subsequently known as Arâin. They became Muhammadans chiefly in the time of Shahâb-ud-din Ghori, or at the end of the twelfth century. Some three hundred years ago they came to this part of the country. Some of the Arâins of the Jalandhar Tahsîl say they are the descendants of Râja Bhûta, fifth in descent from Râja Karan, and were settled in Uchh. They were forcibly converted by Mahmûd of Ghazni. They then migrated to Sirsa, and thence at various times came into the Panjâb. They had to leave Uchh because they refused to give a lady, called Basanti, to the king. This is clearly proved by this verse, which also shows the straits they were reduced to—

*Uchh na âlê Bhûtian chata Basanti nâr ;
Dâna pâni chuk gaya ; châban moti hâr.*

'The Bhûtas neither gave Uchh nor the lady Basanti; food and water were exhausted; they had to eat pearls.'

2. "One of the chief Arâin clans is called Bhutta. They are generally supposed to be converted Kambohs, and say they are legitimate, and the Kambohs the illegitimate, offspring of a common ancestor. In my enquiries they would admit no relationship. It would seem they were originally located on the lower Indus, and that one section of them settled on the Ghaggar. When this river dried up, they moved into the Jumna and Cis-Satlaj tracts; and perhaps spread along the foot of the hills and across the line of movement of their brethren, who were moving up the valleys of the great rivers. By some they are said to be the same stock as the Sainis; but this is certainly not a common tradition, and the assertion is probably based on the fact that the Arâins are called in Persian Bâghbânân, which is the translation of Mâli, or gardener, and that Saini is only a local term for the Mâlis. It may be noted that Mahr is a title among the Arâins, and also among the Gôjars."

3. From Hissâr Mr. Fagan writes:—"In Hissâr they are exclusively Musalmân and claim Râjput descent, their ancestor having lost caste by taking to agriculture. Their gotras appear to bear Râjput names, such as Siroha, Chanhân, and Bhâti. There is however one gotra called Katma, which is said to consist of the true Arâins, who are not Râjputs. The tradition of the Sirsa Râins is that they were expelled from Uchh, near Multân, by their enemies, and escaped by abandoning their military rank and taking to market gardening, the tribal occupation of their neighbours, the true Râins. They came and settled on the Ghaggar, and up to the famine of 1793 A.D. they are said to have held the whole of the Ghaggar valley from Bhatner up to Tohâna in Fatchâbâd. The famine, combined with the attacks of the marauding Bhatti Râjputs, weakened their hold on the laad, and they finally broke before the Châlîsa famine of 1783 A.D. (Sambat 1840) and many of them emigrated to Bareilly, Pilibhît, and Râmpur in the North-West Provinces. On the advent of British power they again expanded, principally in Sirsa. One clan deny any connection with the Musalmân Kambohs, which the Sirsa Râins appear to admit."

4. Mr. Ibbetson says¹—"The Satlaj Arâins in Sirsa say that they are, like the Arâins of Lahore and Montgomery, connected by origin with the Hindu Kambohs. Mr. Wilson thinks it probable that both classes are really Kambohs who have become Musalmâns, and that the Ghaggar Arâins emigrated in a body from Multân, while the others moved gradually up the Satlaj into their present place. He describes the Arâins of the Ghaggar as the most advanced and civilised tribe in the Sirsa District, and he considers them at least equal in social status to the Jâts, over whom they themselves claim superiority."

Distribution of Râins according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS	Hindus	Musalmâns	TOTAL
Dehra Dûn	135	135
Sahâranpur	131	1,168	1,299
Muzaffarnagar	12	2,099	2,111

¹ Panjab Ethnography, 267.

Distribution of the Râins according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Musalmañs.	TOTAL.
Mathura	1	1
Bareilly	1,918	1,918
Morâdâbâd	1	1
Pilibbît	5,197	5,197
Jbânsi	3	3
Gorakhpur	3	...	3
Tarâi	4,573	4,573
Bahrâich	2	2
TOTAL	146	15,097	15,243

Râj, Râj Mistri, Thawai (in Persian Me'mâr).—The mason and bricklayer caste. The word Râj means either a "head workman" (Hindi râja) or is a corruption of the Persian râs; Mistri is a corruption of the Portuguese mestre; Thawai of the Sanskrit sthâpati. The caste is a purely occupational one, and is recruited from many of the lower castes, among whom Chamârs are very numerous.

Distribution of the Râj Mistris according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Musalmañs.	TOTAL.
Sabâranpur	318	166	484
Muzaffarnagar	390	166	556
Meerut	246	77	323
Bulandshahr	577	4	581
Aligarh	285	2	287
Mathura	54	...	54
Agra	8	56	64
Farrukhâbâd	16	189	205
Mainpuri	181	...	181

Distribution of the Râj Mistris according to the Census of 1891—contd

DISTRICTS	Hindus	Musalmanas	TOTAL
Etâwah	157	2	159
Ftâh	115	90	235
Bygnor		258	258
Budâun	41	327	368
Moradâbâd	26	290	316
Shâhjahanpur	12	122	134
Pilibhit		3	3
Cawnpur		38	38
Fatehpur		158	158
Hamirpur	20	1	27
Allahâbâd	21	35	56
Jlâusi	123	3	126
Jâlsun	10		10
Benares		98	98
Jaunpur		109	109
Ghazipur		10	10
Gorakhpur	34	128	162
Basti		112	112
Azamgarh		12	12
Tardâ		5	5
Lucknow	2	5	7
Unâo		249	249
Râs Bareilly		184	184
Sitapur		4	4
Hardoi	4	4	8
Kheri	145	36	181
Faizabad		90	90

Distribution of the Râj Mistris according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Musalmans.	TOTAL.
Gonda	28	28
Bahrâich	171	...	171
Sultânpur	238	239
Partâbgarh	21	21
Bârabanki	73	148	221
TOTAL	3,165	3,468	6,633

Râji ("the royal people").—A tribe, apparently of non-Aryan affinities, found in Askot, in Kumann, and in small numbers along the lower Himâlayan ranges.

2. They have been identified with the Râjya Kirâtas, who, in early Sanskrit literature, are joined with the Traditions of origin. Snkas and Snvaras as Dasyus, and are placed by the Vraha Samhita between Amaravana and China, or between Jagesar and Tibet; and the title will mean either "the princely Kirâtas" or the "the Kirâtas of Râjya."¹ The Râjis have often been noticed by ethnographers whose speculations have been based on a few lines by Mr. Traill.² It is there said that the Râji represent themselves as descendants of one of the aboriginal princes of Kumann, "who with his family fled to the jungle to escape the destruction threatened by an usurper. Under the pretension of royal origin, the Râwats or Râjis abstain from offering to any individual, whatever his rank, the usual Eastern salutation." He also states that there is a total dissimilitude of language between the Râjis and Kumâunis, and that the Doms may have been descended from these Râjis, "the former being, for the most part, extremely dark, almost black, with crisp, curly hair, inclining to wool." This, until the present enquiries, is the only account that has been given on any authority regarding the Râjis; yet

¹ Muir, Ancient Sanskrit Texts, II, 363, 431; Wright, Nepal, 82, 101, 110, 312; Journal, Asiatic Society of Bengal, 1849, pages 753, 766; 1858, page 410, quoted by Atkinson, Himalayan Gazetteer, II, 561, 591.

² Report, Kumann, 19, 57; Asiatic Researches, XVI, 150.

Professor Rutter found in it confirmation of the opinion that a Negro race may have been among the aboriginal inhabitants of the Himalaya and Kuen Inn. There is no foundation for the statement that the Doms have curly hair inclining to wool. Out of hundreds that have come under notice, not a single one can be said to have any Negroid characteristic, though many are of an extremely dark complexion, like the other similar servile castes in the plains. Dr Pritchard¹ conjectured that the Rājīs would be found to resemble the other numerous aboriginal tribes found along the Himalayan border, all "possessing the physical character of the Bhotiys in general and very unlike the Doms." Dr Latham² too expresses his conviction that the Rājīs are "the equivalents to the Chepang of Nepal." Captain Strachey noticed "nothing very remarkable about them, except an expression of alarm and stupidity in their faces, and they are perhaps darker and otherwise more like lowland Hindustanis than the average Kumaun Pahāris." They manufacture wooden bowls for sale and "live under temporary huts, frequently moving from place to place amidst the jungles of Chipula, their principal subsistence being certain edible sorts of wild plants and what game they can catch, and they occasionally get presents of cooked food from the villagers. They have a dialect of their own, but some of them can communicate with their civilised neighbours in Pahārī Hindi." The scanty vocabulary of the Rājī languages that has been collected supports the connection with the tribes of Nepal suggested by Dr Latham.

3 The following more particular account of the Rājīs has been prepared from notes by Bhawanī Singh, Fresh enquiry Teacher of the Deohya Kot School in the

Almora District —

4 They are known by two names Rājī and Rāwat. These names are used by the people themselves as well as by outsiders. They say that they are descended from the servants of the Rājā of Kutpur, by whom they were expelled for some fault. Since then they have been wandering about in the hills and forests, living on jungle produce. At the time of their expulsion the Rājā of Kutpur was Nīl Kapāl, but they cannot say how many years ago he lived. This Kutpur family, they say, reigned for thirty-eight generations—from Vikramaditya to Biram Deo. All the members of the tribe consider themselves equal and intermarry freely. Their appearance, in the opinion of this observer, suggests a doubt as to whether they are not the degraded descendants of one of the higher castes. Their tribal deity is Bâgb Nâtb, "the tiger lord," who has a shrine at Kutpur, supported by an endowment of villages. They practise the ordinary Hindu law of exogamy; but they are not allowed to marry two sisters. They are monogamous, but can keep concubines. The bridegroom's father or, in default of him, some near relation, arranges the marriage. If the parties are minors, the consent of the parents is essential. Some small bride-price is usually paid. Part of this is paid a few days before the marriage, and the balance when the husband brings home his bride. The greater part of it becomes the special property of the bride, and if she be divorced, which can be done if she proves unfaithful or contracts leprosy, she takes away with her her own share of the bride-price. A divorced woman, can marry again, and the offspring of regular marriages, widow marriages, and those contracted with divorced women, all inherit equally the property of their father. The levirate is allowed with the usual restriction that it is only the younger brother of the husband that can marry his widow. If the widow marries an outsider, the guardianship of her children by her first husband falls to the brother of her late husband. They succeed to the whole estate of their father; if there be no sons, his brethren succeed.

Traditions and marriage

¹ Researches IV 206 231

² Ethnology of the British Colonies 132 Atkinson loc. cit. 366

5. The baby is named five days after birth, and on that day the family eat specially good food. There is no trace of the couvade and no custom of adoption.

Birth ceremonies.

6. When a boy attains majority, his father goes and arranges the price of a bride for him. He pays over something in advance to close the bargain, and is then feasted, and remains there for the night. Then a date is fixed, and the boy's father comes with his friends and relations and takes the bride home. A betrothal cannot be annulled by the friends of the girl once they have received part of the bride-price in advance. The only ceremony at the reception of the bride into the family of her husband is that his mother rubs some yellow pigment on her forehead as she enters the house.

Betrothal.

7 They bury their dead in any convenient place in the jungle. The clothes of the dead person and the sheet in which the corpse is wrapped are laid over the grave and not removed by the friends. It may be conjectured that the idea is to provide clothing for the naked spirit in the next world.

8 The children of the deceased and his younger brothers get their heads, beards, and moustaches shaved, and the hair is thrown on the grave as a sacrifice to the spirit of the dead man. They appear to perform no ceremony in the nature of the śriddhā, and no loss of ceremonial purity results after death, childbirth, or menstruation.

9 They call themselves Hindu by religion. They worship Devi in the month of October under a large tree with an offering of cooked food and animal sacrifice. When any one gets ill, they worship the gods, ghosts, and demons of the jungle, but they erect no temples in their honour, and make no pilgrimages. They appear to have no caste initiation ceremony, and no priests. Their religious duties are performed by the eldest male member of the family. The worship of Devi is performed publicly by day, but that of the ghosts and demons, secretly by night. The special offering to Devi consists of goats, the demon and ghosts are propitiated by a sacrifice of fowls. These offerings are made on the tops of hills or under some large trees. After the offering is made, the meat is consumed by the worshippers.

10 The r festivals are the Kark Sankrant, or "passage of the sun into the sign of Cancer," and those of Ardes and Capricornus. Mekha, Molara k Sankrant, marriage days and after childbirth. On these festivals they eat specially good food themselves and entertain their relations and friends. They believe that demons and ghosts inhabit the tops of mountains, rivers, wells, and wherever water accumulates. If, after a visit to the jungle, a person becomes ill, they attribute the attack to the wrath of the jungle demon. It is then necessary to propitiate him with appropriate sacrifices. The fields are haunted by a special demon known as Chhal, who is, as a rule, benignant. Though they keep no annual feasts in their honour, they live in excessive dread of the ghosts of their deceased relations. These ghosts are of two kinds: some are worshipped as the protectors of the household ; and others because, if neglected, they bring disease and death.

11. Their chief omens are derived from throbbing of various parts of the body. Thus the throbbing of the left eye or of any member on the left side of the body forebodes evil ; the opposite is the case with the throbbing of any member on the right side of the body.

Omens.

12. They are much in dread of the Evil Eye, and of demoniacal influence generally : the favourite precaution is to bestow opprobrious names of their children.

Evil Eye.

13. They are not skilled in any special form of magic or witchcraft, but certain persons occasionally fall under the influence of a demon, and in a state of ecstasy pour out incoherent expressions, which are regarded as oracles. In such cases the family guardian demon is invoked to expel the malignant intruder, and he instructs them which form of worship or sacrifice should be used to bring about this result. The name of this family demon is Baitâl, the Sanskrit Vetâla.

Magic and witchcraft.

14. They are not allowed to eat food which has been touched by Doms, Dholis, and similar foul castes. Their chief business is to act as the pioneers of civilization by clearing the jungle. In this occupation they believe themselves to be much exposed to the attacks of the demons of the jungle ; and in order to ward them off, they bury in the earth some animal bones or hang them on a tree close to the spot where they are working. They eat the flesh of cloven-footed animals and fish. They drink spirits freely when procurable. There is no food or drink specially reserved for males. All members of the family eat together in the same plastered enclosure (châuka), within which they place the leaf vessels in which they take their food. They are said never to use any form of salutation, either to strangers or to relatives and friends ; the reason of this is, that they pretend to be of royal blood, and consider themselves inferior to no man. They are very shy in their intercourse with strangers ; but those who gain confidence are well received and hospitably entertained on the roots and fruits which form their ordinary food. Usually when they see a stranger approaching, they run away and hide in the jungle. They have a dialect of their own, which is not intelligible to outsiders, and this language is always spoken by the women and children. Most of the adult males are able to communicate with strangers in rude Pahārī Hindi. They are constantly on the move in search of jungle produce of various kinds, and it is only recently that they have begun to settle down and have taken to a rude form of cultivation in which they burn down scrub jungle and sow the seed in the ashes. Thus is the dhāya cultivation of the Central Indian Plateau. At present one of their chief industries is the making of rude vessels out of the wood of the genū tree, these they exchange in the villages bordering on the jungle for scraps of coarse cloth and grain. When they acquire any grain by barter in this way or by cultivation, they hide it away in caves or tie it up in leaves and hang it from the branches of trees. Meanwhile they live on any roots and fruits they can secure, and return to their grain stores only when pressed by extreme hunger. Some roots and fruits they hide away in caves for use in time of need. Their cultivation has hitherto been of the most casual and careless kind, but in recent years they have been helped by Government to obtain cattle and implements and the younger generation show signs of taking more steadily to cultivation than their forefathers. The bride-price is almost invariably paid in coarse earthen or wooden vessels and implements for digging jungle roots.

Social rules and occupation.

15 From this account they appear to be in about the same stage of culture as the Korwas of Mirzapur.

2 Rajkumar (Sanskrit rāja kumāra, "a prince") — A sept of Rajputs in Oudh and the Eastern Districts. The term Rajkumar is commonly applied to the junior branches of all houses in which a Raj exists, and thus there are Rajkumār Bas, Rajkumar Kanhpuriyā, and Rajkumar Bachgoti. It is to the last of these that the term is most generally applied, and the only explanation suggested of their appropriation of the title is that it is to distinguish them from their brethren the Rajwars, who could once pride themselves on their chief being a Raja. With them alone the distinction has superseded the broader appellation of the clan.¹ The clan to which Bariyār Singh, the common ancestor, belonged, has now five branches, from which circumstance it is likened to the five fingers of a man's hand: these are the Chauhan, the Rajkumār, the Rajwār, the

¹ Suādāpur Settlement Report 150

Bachgoti, and the Khânzâda.¹ The Rāj Kumārs, through Bariyār Sinh, claim direct descent from Rāja Kundh Rāj, brother of Prithivi Rāja of Delhi. Opinions are divided as to the birth-place of Bariyār Sinh. Some fix it at Sambhal near Morādābād; some at Sāmhar in Ajmer. By one account his emigration was due to the defeat of the Delhi Chauhāns; by another story his father, who had already twenty-two sons, married a young bride and she insisted that her son should succeed to the title; so Bariyār Sinh and his brothers were driven to go abroad and seek their fortunes. The chief families of the sept are Dera, Meopur, Nānau, and Pāras Patti. The history and traditions of the sept have been elaborately illustrated by Mr. Carnegie. One of the earliest accounts of Rājput infanticide referred to the Rāj Kumārs.²

2. In Sultānpur it is reported that they take brides from the Bilkhariya, Tashaiya, Chandaurya, Kath Bais, Bhālē Sultān, Raghubansi, and Gargbansi; and give girls to the Tilokchandi Bais, Mainpuri Chauhāns, Sūrajbansi of Māhāl, Gautams of Nagar, Bisens of Majhauī, Kānpuriya, Gahlot, and Sombansi. Their gotra is said to be Vatsyn. In Jannpur it is said that they take brides from the Raghubansi, Bais, Chaupat Khamh, Nikumbh, Dhanmast, Gautam, Gaharwār, Bisen, Panwār, Chandel, Saunak, Drighansi; and give girls to the Kalhans, Sirnet, Gantam, Sūrajbansi, Bachgoti, Rajwār, Bisen, Kānpuriya, Gaharwār, Baghel, and Bais.

Distribution of the Rāj Kumār Rājputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Numbers.	DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Mathura	199	Pānda	2
Agra	4	Allahābād	216
Farrukhābād	2	Jhānsi	11
Morādābād	27	Benares	190
Pilibbīt	1	Mirzapur	115
Cawnpur	12	Jannpur	5,745
Fatehpur	4	Ghāzipur	38

¹ Forābād Settlement Report, 129; Elliot. Chronicles of Undo, 43.

² Asiatic Researches, IV, 340; Calcutta Review, I, 377.

Distribution of the Rāj Kumār Rājputs according to the Census of 1891—concl.

DISTRICTS.	Numbers	DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Ballia	6	Sitapur	2
Gorakhpur	255	Faizābād	1,575
Basti	337	Gonda	10
Azamgarh	212	Farrāksh	23
Lucknow	20	Sultānpur	15,299
Unāo	8	Partābgarh	123
Rās Bareli	219	Rārabanki	61
		TOTAL	21761

Rājput (Sanskrit rāja-putra, "son of a king").—The warrior and land owning race of Northern India, who are also known as Thākur, "lord" (Sanskrit thākkura), or Chhatri, the modern representative of the ancient Kshatriya. All or most of the Rājput tribes in these Provinces have legendary accounts of their origin from the country known as Rajwāra, Rajasthān or Rajputāna. As General Cunningham writes¹:—"The term Rajputāna is at present restricted to the States lying between the Jumna and Narbada, of which the Jumna forms the eastern boundary; but previous to the Mahratta conquest it really extended from the Satlaj on the west to the Chhota Sindh River of Mārwar on the east.

2. "Within these limits the old States of Rajputāna may be conveniently divided into three large groups according to their relative positions, as Western, Eastern, and Southern.

3. "Western Rajputāna including the Rāthaur States of Bikāner and Mārwar; the Jādon Bhatti State of Jāysalmer; the Kachh-wāha States of Jaypur and Shaikhāwati; and the Chauhān State of Ajmer.

4. "Eastern Rajputāna would include the present Narūka-Kachh-wāha State of Alwar; the Jāt States of Bharatpur and Dholpur; the Jādon State of Karauli; the British Districts of Gurgāon, Mathura, and Agra; and the whole of the Northern Districts of Gwālior, which still bear the names of their old Rājput proprietors, as Jādonwāṭi, Tomargār, Kachhwāhagār, Bhadaurgār, and Klichīwāra.

¹ Archaeological Reports, XX, 1, sqq.

5. "Southern Rajputāna including the two Chauhān States of Bundi and Kotah, with the whole of Mewār and Mālwa.

6. "In ancient times the whole country lying between the Arvali Hills of Alwar and the Jumna was divided between Matsya on the west and Surasena on the east, with Dasūrana on the south and south-west border. Matsya included the whole of the present Alwar territory, with portions of Jaypur and Bharatpur. Bairāt and Muchārī were both in Matsyadesa; while Karnān, Mathura, and Bayāna were all in Surasena. To the east was Panchāla, including the Antarveda and Rohilkhand. The Surasenas were Yadavas or Yaduvansis. A large portion of their old country is still in the possession of the Jādon Rāja of Karauli. Their chief towns were Methora and Kleisobaras, Mathura and Krishnapura. The Yadavas first succumbed to the great Maurya dynasty of Magadha, and were afterwards overwhelmed by the Indo-Seythians under the Satrap Rajubul and his son Saudāsa. It next fell under the Gupta dynasty, the power of which was broken by the death of Skanda Gupta in 319 A.D. At the time of Hwen Thsang's visit in 635 A.D., the King of Mathura was a Śūdra, but a few centuries later the Jādon Rājputs were in full possession of both Bayāna and Mathura. Nearly the whole of Eastern Rajputāna, therefore, belonged to the Yaduvansi or Jādon Rājputs. They held one-half of Alwar with the whole of Bharatpur, Karauli, and Dholpur, besides the British Districts of Gurgāon, Mathura, and the greater part of Agia west of the Jumna. It seems possible also that they may have held some portions of the present Gwālīor territory, lying along the Chambal River, opposite Karauli."

7. It was on the death of Harsa Varddhana, the famous king of Kanauj, who reigned from 607 to 650 A.D., that most of the Rājput families would seem to have risen to power. The Tomaras of Delhi, the Chandelas of Khajuraho, and Sisodiyas of Chithor, as well as the Kachhwāhas of Narwar and Gwālīor, all begin their genealogies from that time.¹ As far as the eastern part of the Province is concerned, Sir C. Elliott² suggests that the amount of pressure from the Muham-madan invaders determined the character of the Rājput colonisation.

¹ Archæological Reports, II, 311.

² Chronicles of India, 23, sq.

The Chauhāns are scattered over a wide extent of country and broken up into many small estates, while the powerful Gahlots of Chithor and Kachhwahas of Amber maintained their independence for three centuries more and threw out hardly any colonies. The Oudh Rājputs may be divided into three great classes: the Bisen, Gahrwar, and Chandel were settled in the pre-historic period, the Guntam, Janwār, Chauhan, Rakwar, Dikhit and Sakarwar emigrated after the incursion of Shahab-ud-din Ghorī at the close of the twelfth century, the Gahlot, Sengar, Panwar, Gaur and Panhār came after the establishment of the Muhammadan power, the Rāwat and Mahrar are indigenous to Unao and are not found elsewhere. According to the Ghazipur traditions, only from fifteen to thirty generations have elapsed since the first advent of their forefathers. Except the Hayobans and Kinwar septs, all the tribes name places in the north north west, or west as the homes of their race. Malwā, Bundelkhand, the Ganges-Jumna Duab, the country beyond the Jumna from Agra to Delhi, Oudh, and the country beyond the Ghaghra, all are named as the old home of tribes now found in Ghazipur.¹ The Oudh septs which claim an extra provincial origin, trace their descent to single Chhatra leaders and not to troops of Rājput invaders. Such are the Bais of Baiswara, who claim descent from Tilokchand, who came from the Central Provinces, and the Rajkumārs from Bariyār Singh Chauhan of Manipur, through whom they claim kindred with Prithvī Rāj of Delhi. With these exceptions none of the clansmen of Eastern Oudh claim Western origin.²

8 The traditions of the septs, which have been separately referred to exemplify the fact that many of them are probably connected closely with the aboriginal races, and that there are grave grounds for suspecting the purity of their descent. Thus the Kanhpuriya and Bandhulgoti septs are traditionally descended from misalliances between two Brahman brothers and women of the Alur and Dharkar castes. The Chamar Gaur are supposed to be descended from a Chamar father and a Gaur woman. Within the memory of man an Amethya chieftain has according to General Sleeman taken to wife the daughter of an ex-Pasi village watchman and raised up orthodox seed unto himself. The Raotārs, another form temporary connections with women of the low wandering tribes, such as Nâts, Kanjars, Beryas, and the like. There has thus grown up in many of the septs two classes of different social rank: one the offspring of wives of legitimate descent, married in the orthodox way, the other the descendants of irregular connections with low caste women. Such people, as a rule, if they marry at all, marry in their own grade, and, unless they are wealthy, find it impossible to procure brides of unequivocal ancestry. It is needless to say that this connection of Rajput youths with women of these criminal races is a fertile source of crime. Gypsy gangs hang round Rajput villages and are supported and protected. During recent epidemics of violent crime in these Provinces, it has always been found that the dacoit bands were largely recruited from these half-bred Rajputs and their criminal associates.

¹ Oldham Memo I 45

² Carnegie Journal Asiatic Soc et al of Ben gal 1876

11 The country legends abound with instances of the conflict between the Rajput and the Brahman in pre-historic times. As a survival of this it may be noted that, in Bundelkhand, Brâhmins will not allow the navel string (nara) of Rajput children to be buried in their villages lest the latter tribe may some day enplant and dispossess them.¹

Distribution of Rajputs according to the Census of 1891

DISTRICTS	Hindus	Muham- madans	Aryas	Jainas	Sikhs	TOTAL
Dehra Dûn	46 060	677	131		3	46 870
Saharanpur	37 806	21 089	59		56	59 010
Muzaffarnagar	21 911	20 526	82			42 519
Meerut	60 904	30 606	215	1	13	91 839
Bulandshahr	84 301	31 400	1 585			117 312
Aligarh	77,806	808	188		2	78 801
Mathura	59 000	8 040	31	355	14	67 445
Agra	93 232	5 501	82	73	67	98 955
Farrukhâbâd	58 802	1 697	92			59 591

¹ Elliot & Supplemental Glossary s.v. Athmans

Distribution of Rájputs according to the Census of 1891—contd.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	Aryas.	Jainas.	Sikhs.	TOTAL.
Mainpuri . .	53,175	329	46	53,550
Etáwah . .	54,743	522	52	...	3	55,320
Etah . . .	60,036	4,911	236	65,183
Bareilly . .	35,013	6,358	5	...	24	41,400
Bijnor . .	84,183	3,265	79	87,527
Budáun . .	60,999	5,636	152	...	5	66,792
Morádábád . .	60,065	8,194	183	...	6	77,447
Sháhjábánpur . .	64,503	3,596	59	68,158
Pilibhít . .	10,078	950	159	111,187
Cawnpur . .	88,081	785	121	88,937
Fatehpur . .	44,830	6,141	50,971
Bánda . .	51,926	1,653	...	2	8	53,580
Hamirpur . .	35,085	457	35,542
Allahábád . .	53,131	2,173	55,304
Jhánsi . .	18,075	146	23	...	18	18,262
Jálsau . .	35,155	329	35,483
Lalitpur . .	15,887	39	15,926
Benares . .	51,203	1,146	52,349
Mirzapur . .	63,171	210	147	63,528
Jaunpur . .	112,242	3,903	116,145
Gházipur . .	85,406	13,746	43	...	2	99,197
Hallia . . .	139,194	1,385	140,579
Gorakhpur . .	97,487	10,833	1	98,321
Basti . . .	50,038	39,465	90,403
Azamgarh . .	130,168	15,495	145,673
Kanauan . .	255,536	255,536
Gorhwal . .	231,953	231,953

Distribution of Rājputs according to the Census of 1891—continued

DISTRICTS	Hindus	Mulam- madans	Aryas	Jains	Sikhs	TOTAL.
Tarai . . .	16,557	636	6	17,099
Lucknow . . .	26,565	1,309	28	...	119	28,020
Unao . . .	60,766	2,028	26	...	29	62,849
Rat Bareilly . . .	69,661	7,767	6	77,427
Etahpur . . .	37,693	9,057	.	.	10	37,760
Hardoi . . .	79,365	2,293	81,648
Kheri . . .	26,361	11,887	23	.	..	38,271
Fazābād . . .	69,660	11,662	.	..	10	80,552
Gonda . . .	61,361	27,431	88,792
Dal rāich . . .	23,162	11,812	6	..	210	35,570
Sultānpur . . .	89,517	23,497	114,011
Paritāgarh . . .	61,487	4,793	66,282
Bārābanki . . .	40,615	7,501	.	.	17	48,036
TOTAL . . .	3,251,118	375,833	3,710	431	819	3,632,211

Ramaiya¹ (Sanskrit ram, Hindi ramna, "to wander")—A pedlar class found in small numbers to the west of the Province. The Ramaiya of the east of the Panjāb is the Bhātra, under another name. "The Bhātra claims Brāhman origin, and his claim would appear to be good, for he wears the sacred thread, applies the tika, or forehead mark, and receives offerings at eclipses in that capacity. He is probably a low class of Gujarāti or Dakaut Brāhman, and, like them, practises as an astrologer in a small way. The Bhātras of Gujarāt are said to trace their origin to the south beyond Multān. The Bhātras hawk small hardware for sale, tell fortunes, and play on the native guitar, but do not beg for alms."² The Ramaiya of these Provinces, who is a pedlar and beggar, is properly a Sikh; but he is now so thoroughly domiciled here that it is difficult to distinguish him from other Hindus. Begging is recognized by him as an honourable profession, and a Ramaiya who is rich will have no hesitation in marrying his daughter to another Ramaiya who gains his living by begging. They trace their origin to Amritsar, and say they first began to come into these Provinces about four generations ago. Some of the wealthier members of the caste in Bijnor still draw their Brāhmans, their priests, or barbers, from the Panjāb. Some of them say that they are the direct descendants of the Guru Govind Sinh.

¹ Mainly based on notes by Pandit Janardan Dat Joshi, Deputy Collector, Bareilly.

² Ibbetson, Panjāb Ethnography, para 552.

2. Their sections, as given in the Census returns, indicate that they are a very mixed race and made up of elements foreign to the races of these Provinces. Of the Hindu branch we find Bamra, Bank, Barsari, Bhalira, Bhât, Bhatti, Bisâti, Dargal, Gajra, Gaur, Gûjar, Gujarân, Hardoiri, Kathak, Nomâin, Râdi, Râd, Rânipâri, Râthaur, Sinha, and Siphmatua; of the Muhammadan branch, Banjâra, Râjput, Ramai.

3. The tribal council (panchâyat) includes representatives from every family in the village, and is under a headman (chaudhary). The office is permanent and is conferred on the richest and most influential man in the community.

4. The rule of exogamy is that a man must marry in a gotra different from his own, and avoid connections with near relatives on the female side, such as the daughter of his sister or aunt. He may not have two sisters to wife at the same time, but there is no rule against his marrying the younger sister of his late wife. They very seldom marry more than one wife, and then only with the object of getting an heir. Girls are married from five to ten years of age; it is exceptional for a girl not to be married till fifteen, and the richer the family is the greater tendency there is towards infant marriage. The bride gets presents of jewelry from both sides, but there is no bride price paid. There is no formal divorce, but a wife detected in adultery is turned out of the house. Widows are married by the form known as kâj, kârao, of which the feast to the clansmen is the most important part. The levirate is allowed if the younger brother of the late husband is himself unmarried. She has power to marry an outsider if her brother-in-law does not claim her.

5. The woman is attended by some elderly woman of the family, or by a dâi, or professional midwife, if she be procurable. At the birth of a son, charity is distributed to Brāhmanas and to the poor, and the child is named by the Brāhman on the eleventh day.

6. The betrothal is marked by the distribution of some coarse sugar to the clansmen by the father of the bridegroom, and then the engagement is announced. The binding portion of the marriage ceremony is the walking of the pair seven times round the sacred fire.

7. They burn their dead. The ashes are thrown into some river and some of the fragments of the bone are kept to be consigned to the Ganges. The corpse is tied on a bier, a pinda is offered, some gold is put in the mouth, and with an appeal for aid to Guru Govind and the words Rām ! Rām ! it is cremated. They do not perform the regular śrāddha ; on the third day (tīja), the clansmen bathe and eat at the house of the deceased ; they are regarded as impure by their neighbours until this ceremony is done. On the tenth day, the Brāhman is given food, clothes, bedding, and other necessities for the use of the spirit in the other world. This ceremony is repeated on the first anniversary of the death, and after this nothing more is done. On the last day of the Kanāgat fortnight, they place food on the house roof for the use of the deceased ancestors. A little water is then sprinkled, and the Ramaiya with folded hands invokes the spirits of the departed, and first of all that of Guru Govind. Those who make the pilgrimage to Gaya, even once in their lives, omit this ceremony. The invocation and all the prayers are in Hindustāni. They call this the śrāddha ; but of course it does not conform to the regular ritual. They employ Brāhmanas as their priests, but consider it more meritorious to give charity to the son of a sister or daughter than to a Brāhman.

8. By religion they are Sikhs, and particularly respect the Guru and the Grantha. But they also worship the ordinary Hindu deities, such as Ganesa, Devi, Siva, and Bhūmīya. They visit the Sikh temples at Patna, Amritsar, Dehra Dûn, and Nānakmatha, of which the last is the favourite. The married pair after the ceremony go to the temple of Bhūmīya and make an obeisance. They also worship snakes, like ordinary Hindus, and respect the pīpal tree. Some visit the tomb of Guru Rām Râi in the fair during the month of Bhādon. Their temple is known as Dharmśāla or Nānakshāli Dharmśāla. It bears the flag of the Guru, and contains the holy book known as the Granth Sāhib. During the Dasahra they hold a festival known as the Parva, when they assemble at the Dharmasāla to hear the Granth Sāhib read. The praises of the Guru are recited, and some halwa if purchased with the contributions of those present, is distributed. The most binding oath is by the Granth Sāhib, and then by the Guru; in ordinary cases the oath is taken by Ganesa or one of the ordinary Hindu deities. Women are not allowed to visit the Dharmasāla.

9. They eat no food forbidden to ordinary high caste Hindus.

Social rules.

When they eat they throw a little food into the fire in the name of the Guru. Their salutation is Wāh Gurnjī ki fatch, "Victory to the Guru." When inferiors salute superiors, they say Alatha teko, "I lay my forehead at your feet." They will not eat kachchi prepared by any one but a casteman, not even by a Brāhmaṇ. Pakki can be eaten if cooked by any Hindu of respectable caste.

10. They live by petty trading and begging. Those who are pedlars sell coral beads and medicines. Those who beg, have a sort of picture (patta) representing the gods and the various hells. One important part of it is a drawing of a miser dragging a chain in hell, which they show to people to stimulate them to give alms. They do not appear to rob or steal at home, but in more distant parts of the country their conduct is not free from suspicion, and some are notorious swindlers.

Occupation.

11. To this may be added the following account of the tribe by Mr. F. S. Bullock, C. S.:—"The Ramaiyas have been for years past settled down in the Bijnor District in the Chāndpur and Dhāmpur Tahsils. Altogether they are found in thirty-five or forty villages, but chiefly in large groups in the villages of Nūrpur, Rohanagli, Nahilpur, and Harupur. I believe this to be the only district in India in which they have settled down in any number; but they live in a few villages in the Panjāb, viz., in Delhi, Amritsar, and Patiyāla, one village (Chilkhāna) in Sahāranpur, two villages (Chāndpur and Soron) in Aligarh, and Bettiah and Bhāgalpur in Bengal. They are pedlars by profession, and sell precious stones and borwāla goods, such as mirrors, combs, soap, candles, and stones. They call themselves Sikhs by religion, and they worship Guru Nānak, and say they came from the Panjâb. Some shave their heads, and some do not. In fact they seem to have two sects, and account for it thus:—Guru Nānak had two sons: Srichand, who founded the Sādhu Branch; and Lakshmi Dās, who founded the Sikh Branch. The descendants of Srichand shave and look like Hindus, but they are a drunken lot, eat meat, but do not worship the cow. They travel all over India, chiefly in the Dakkhin, while the Sikhs travel chiefly in the Panjâb. The small number of males as compared with females in Bijnor is accounted for by the fact that the males travel about and earn their living, while the women stay at home. They do not cultivate, but are well off and earn large sums by peddling goods.”

Distribution of the Ramaiyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Dehra Dûn	4	...	4
Sahâranpur	156	...	156
Muzaffarnagar	95	158	253
Meerut	308	...	308
Bulandshahr	4	...	4
Bareilly	53	...	53
Bijnor	2,980	...	2,980
Moriddâbâd	58	...	58
Pilibhit	21	...	21
Târai	86	...	86
TOTAL	3,765	158	3,923
Males	1,372
Females	2,993

Rânghar, Rângar.—A sept of Muhammadan Rājputs principally found in the Upper Ganges-Jamna Duâb. According to Colonel Tod¹ the word is derived from vana, “strife,” in the sense of “turbulent;” but this is very doubtful. Mr. Ibbetson² says:—

¹ Annals, I, 457.

² Panjâb Ethnography, para. 416; Census Report, North-Western Provinces, 1865, I, Appendix 8.

"Rāngar is a term sometimes contemptuously applied in the Eastern and South-Eastern Districts of the Panjāb to any Musalmān Rājput. I am told, however, that in Ferozpur and Gurdāspur, there are small Rājput colonies known only by this name; and, if so, it is probable that they have emigrated from the Delhi territory. If a Hindu Chauhān Rājput become a Musalmān to-morrow, he would be called a Chauhān Rājput by both himself and his neighbours of both religions; but his Hindu brethren would call him Rānghar, which he would resent as only slightly less abusive than chōṭīkāt, a term of contempt applied to those who have, on conversion to Islām, cut off the chōṭī or Hindu scalp lock."

2. The Bhatti or Jaiswār Rājputs of Bulandshahr claim descent from Rāja Dalip, son of Jaswant Rāo, of Nānaman near Bithūr in the Cawnpur District. He is said to have had two sons named Bhatti and Rānghar. The descendants of the latter were converted in the time of the Sultān Qutb-ud-dīn and Alā-ud-dīn, and were called Rānghars after their eponymous ancestor.¹

3. Again, according to Sir H. M. Elliot,² many of the Kankariya and Naigāniya Ahīrs have been converted to Islām and are known as Rānghars. In the Dūn they are said to be descendants of strangers of Pundir extraction from Sahāranpur, who gained a footing during the decline of the Garhwāl kingdom. There are very few of them, and they are being gradually absorbed by marriage with lūll women.³ In Hariyāna their sections are said to be Jāt, Satrola, and Raghu.⁴ The sept, in fact, seems to be a sort of cave of Adullam for out-castes of various tribes.

4. The Rānghars have always borne an evil reputation for turbulence. This is shown by the many proverbs concerning them:—Gūjar, Rānghar, do; kuttā, billī, do; ye chār na ho; to khulē kīdārē so: "The Gūjar and the Rānghar are a pair; so are the dog and the cat; if it were not for these four, you might sleep with open doors." Another says:—Yār Dom ne kiya hīnagharya; aur-na dekha aisa harya: "A minstrel made friends with a Rānghar and found no worse thief than he."

¹ Census Report, North-Western Provinces, 1853, I, Appendix 15.

² Supplemental Glossary, s. v. Ahir.

³ Williams, Memo., 27.

⁴ Indian Antiquary, VI, 311; Journal Asiatic Society, Bengal, 1863.

Distribution of the Rânghars according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS	Numbers	DISTRICTS	Numbers.
Dehra Dûn . . .	133	Bijnor . . .	2,256
Saharanpur . . .	368	Pilibhit . . .	163
Muzaffarnagar . . .	1,174	Cawnpur . . .	2
Meerut . . .	2	Jhansi . . .	7
Bulandshahr . . .	31	Lalitpur . . .	5
Methua . . .	5	Tardi . . .	166
Agra . . .	44	Lucknow . . .	23
Mainpuri . . .	16	Unao . . .	2
Etah . . .	4
		TOTAL . . .	4,401

Rangrez¹ (Rang = "colour," rez, rekhtan = "pouring").—The dyer caste. The Census returns show in the Hindu Branch, which is very scantily represented in the Provinces, as one sub-caste—Haral. There are 81 sections of the Muhammadan Branch, which are of the usual type,—some territorial, like Desi, Deswâla, Gaur, Multani, others occupational or connected with other tribes or castes, such as Bhât, Chandelwal, Chauhan, Ghosi, Guâl Pathân, Kamângar, Khatri, Quraishi, Nilgar, Pathân, Shaikh, Sadiqi, and Usmani. In Mirzapur there are three endogamous sub-divisions: Rangrez, Mauâlê (who take their name from the town of Mau in Azamgarh), and Mârwarî Rangrez. Each of these again is broken up into a Pathân and Shaikh sept, which are also endogamous. They appear to aim at the full prohibited degree of Islam,² but practically only sisters' daughters are excluded. Religious differences are so far regarded that a Sunni cannot marry a Shiah. All marriages are local, and are contracted with those families with which they have been accustomed to eat and smoke. They believe themselves to be descendants of one Khwâja Bah, who was a very pious man about whom the following verse is current — Khwâja

¹ It is really a Hindustani corruption of Persian Rangraz—Ata-ikbari, Blochmann I 307

² Qurân Sûrah, IV, 23, 27

Bali Rangrez Rangê Khuda ki see : "Khwâja Bali dyes the bed of God."

2. They do not admit outsiders into the caste; if any one happen to be admitted, he cannot be married in the caste. Marriage takes place at the age of ten or twelve; and polygamy is allowed. Marriage is by three forms: Charhauwa, when the bridegroom goes in procession and marries the bride at her house; Dola, used by poor people, when the bride is brought home quietly and married at the house of the bridegroom; Sagâi, for widows. The binding portion of the ceremony is, in all cases, the recital of the Sharah. A widow can marry her deceased husband's younger brother or an outsider; the levirate does not seem to be enforced. A man can divorce his wife for adultery, and a wife, her husband, if he is converted to another religion. All divorce is by leave of the tribal council. Divorced women can remarry, but there is a prejudice against it, and the friends of such a woman have to make it worth the man's while to take her over.

Marriage rules.

3. They are mostly Sunni Muhammadans, and their tribal deities are Ghâzi Miyân and the Panchon Pîr.

Religion.

They are worshipped jointly on the first Sunday in Jeth with offerings of parched barley flour (sattu), cucumber (kafrî), melon (kharbûza), and sweetmeats. Ghâzi Miyân is also worshipped after marriages with an offering of boiled rice, curds, and a fowl. This offering is known as kandûrî.¹ With Ghâzi Miyân the Panchon Pîr are also worshipped with an offering of sweetmeats and garlands of flowers. They bury their dead in a graveyard in the usual Muhammadan fashion, and at the festivals of the 'Id and Shab-i-bârât make offerings of vermicelli (sinaiyan, senwai), milk, and kalwa sweetmeats to the spirits of deceased ancestors. They also offer them bread and meat at the festival of the Baqar-'Id.

4. Their trade is dyeing cloth; the process has been very fully described by Mr. Hoey.² Owing to foreign competition the trade has become much reduced in recent years, and many of them have now taken to agriculture and petty shopkeeping. Their women are reputed chaste. They indulge in liquor, but secretly, and the practice is reprobated. They eat the flesh of goats, sheep, cows, buffaloes, camels, and fowls, and all fish except the fresh water shark (gunch). All Muhammadans eat and smoke with them. The women will not eat food touched by Hindus. Only Chamars and Doms eat their leavings. Their social status is low, and they rank about on a level with Julahas and other low Musalman castes.

Occupation and social status.

¹ Kandûrî or sahnak is properly the term used for a special worship of Fâtima, the daughter of the Prophet, by the most virtuous women. No male is ever allowed to see the food cooked as an offering on this occasion.

² Monograph on Trades and Manufactures, 165, sqq.

Distribution of the Rangrez according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madan-.	TOTAL.
Delra Dûn		48	48
Sakāranpur	1,581	1,581
Muzaffarnagar	4,239	4,239
Meerut	4,919	4,919
Bulandshahr	1,679	1,679
Algarh	502	502
Mathura		616	616
Agra		878	878
Farrukhabad	667	667
Mainpuri	193	193
Etawah	519	519
Etah	488	488
Bareilly	1,392	1,392
Bijnor	2,556	2,556
Budaun	515	515
Moradabad	1	1,176	1,177
Shahjahanpur	805	805
Palibhit	495	495
Cawnpur	2	382	384
Fatehpur	350	356

Distribution of the Rangrez according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Mulam- madans.	TOTAL.
Bānda	20	20
Hamirpur	591	591
Alahābād	6	311	316
Jhānsi	133	133
Jālaun	123	123
Lalitpur	81	81
Benares	304	304
Mirzapur	86	86
Jaunpur	481	481
Ghāzipur	543	543
Ballia	762	762
Gorakhpur	1,131	1,131
Basti	231	231
Azamgarh	1,136	1,136
Tarāi	573	573
Lucknow	467	467
Unāo	244	244
Rāi Bareilly	680	680
Sitapur	136	136
Hardoi	193	193
Kheri	467	467
Faizābād	648	648
Gonda	320	320
Behrāich	198	198
Sultānpur	531	531
Partābgarh	163	163
Bārābanki	586	586
TOTAL	8	35,135	35,143

Rangsâz (Rang, "colour," sâz, silkhan, "making").—The caste of painters and varnishers. With the almost entire disappearance of the palanquin their business has reduced; but there is a considerable trade in carriage painting and house painting in the larger cities and towns.

Distribution of the Rangsâz according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Moham- madans.	TOTAL.
Sahâranpur	215	215
Muzaffarnagar	1	210	211
Meerut	452	452
Bulandshahr	28	28
Mathura	1	1
Farrukhâbâd	17	...	17
Mainpuri	20	15	41
Etâwah	22	22
Etah	36	36
Budâun	6	6
Morâdâbâd	38	38
Shâhjahanpur	4	22	26
Cawnpur	1	12	13
Fatehpur	18	18
Hamirpur	39	39
Allahâbâd	3	3
Jhânsi	11	11
Jâlân	87	87
Gorakhpur	24	24
Azamgarh	7	14	21
Unâo	8	8
Râo Bareilly	12	12
Sitapur	7	7

Distribution of the Rangsâz according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Hardoi	10	19	29
Gonda	15	15
Bâhrâich	8	8
Fultânpur	17	18	35
Partâbgarh	1	...	1
TOTAL	67	1,100	1,167

Rastâogi, Rastaugi.—A sub-caste of Banyas found nearly all over the Province. Those in Ondh have, according to Mr. Carnegie, one peculiarity, that their women will not eat food cooked by their husbands. There they are said to have come originally from Amethi, and have three endogamous sub-divisions: Amethi, Indrapati, and Mauhariya. In Mirzapur they name two sub-divisions: Purbîha or Purbîya, "Eastern," and Pachhiwâha, or "Western," which have their boundary at Allahâbâd. It has been found impossible to obtain a complete list of their gotras and sections at Mirzapur. Religious differences are a bar to marriage. Thus, those who worship Hardîha Deva or Hardaur Lâla, do not intermarry with the votaries of Mahâbir or the Panchon Pir. The Mirzapur Rastaugis say they came here from Delhi about the time of the Mutiny. They marry between the ages of eight and twelve. Widow marriage is forbidden. They can marry two wives. They are generally initiated into the Râmanandi sect, and their priests are Gaur Brâhmans, who have come with them from the West. The use of meat and spirits is forbidden.

2. In Mirzapur they generally keep shops for the sale of cloth (basâzi) and brass vessels. "In Lucknow," according to Mr. Hoey,¹ "there are two special classes of money-lending by the account-book (batî), practised chiefly by Rastaugis: avgahî and rotahî. Avgahî is lending of money to be repaid with interest at 20 per cent. in monthly instalments. Thus, if a Rastaugi lends on the 1st January R10, he receives one rupee on the first of each month for twelve months, and thereby realises R12, of which R2 are interest. A Rastaugi's augahi bahi is a curiosity. It is ruled like a chess board, but has twelve columns. As each month's instalment is realized, it is entered in a square until the twelve squares are filled. He generally also keeps a separate lahi in which the principal is noted when lent. It may, however, be noted in the margin of his check-pattern account. Rozahi is money lent to be realized in daily instalments with interest at 25 per cent. Thus, if a rupee be lent, one half anna (taka roz) will be realized daily. The account of this money is kept in a similar way, but the account-book will be ruled in lines of forty squares. A Rastaugi keeps his accounts by locality, that is, he has several 'fields' (khet). Debtors are called asāmi, and the amount to be collected is 'rent' (lagān). A separate set of account-books is kept up for each khet, and a servant (generally a Brāhman) is employed to collect at each khet."

Distribution of Rastāogi Banyas according to the Census of 1891

DISTRICTS	Numbers	DISTRICTS	Numbers
Sabārenpur	8	Jānāsi	1
Aluzāfārnagar . .	107	Jālsoun	3
Meerut	3,109	Benares	858
Bolāndāshahr . . .	799	Mirzāpur	97
Agra	22	Ghāzīpur	412
Farrukhābād . . .	811	Bālha	1
Etāwāh	1	Gorakhpur	167
Etāh	37	Rasti	496
Bijnor	654	Azamgarh	420
Budaun	892	Tārāi	100
Moradābād	1,679	Lucknow	1,066
Palibhīt	9	Unāo	1
Cawnpur	292	Pāi Bareh	35
Fatehpur	488	Fazābād	56
Bānda	91	Gonda	81
Hamīrpur	3	Bahrāich	21
Allahābād	453	TOTAL	14,133

Râthaur (Sanskrit râshtrakûta, "royal house").—A famous sept of Râjputs. Besides that already given, which is probably correct, there are various explanations of their name. According to the tradition current in Mârwar,¹ the family deity of its rulers was, in the Krita Yuga, or first epoch, Mansa Devi; in the Treta Yuga, Râshtra Sena; in the Dwapara Yuga, Pankhâni; and in the present or Kali Yuga, Nâganechi. The legend runs that the authors of the human race were Mâyâ and Brahmâ. In the first epoch the female deity was called Mansa as at her desire (manas) the world was formed. Then she successively took the names of Pankhâni, "the winged one," and Râshtra Sena, "the falcon of the State." The name arose because the goddess Râshtra Sena gave her blessing (vara) on the present Râthaur race. In the present epoch the name of the deity was again changed to Nâganechi, because when Duhâr, the grandson of Sivaji (the original founder of the Râthaur dynasty in Mârwar), succeeded his father as ruler, he went to the Kânâtak, where the Râthnurs ruled previous to becoming kings of Mârwar, for the purpose of bringing the image of the goddess to his own land. When the cart containing the image came to the village of Nâgana of Mârwar, the vehicle came to a standstill. Upon this he built a temple for her there, and she took her present name, which means "resident of Nâgana." The same story is told of the image of Kesava Deva.² Another derivation of the name of the sept is that they sprang from the spine (rahi) of Indra. They are the Ornatus of Pliny's lists. He notes of them that their king had only ten elephants, though he possessed a strong force of infantry.³

2. The history of the sept begins in 1050 A.D., when they History of the clan. expelled the Tomars from Kanauj, which once more became a famous kingdom and the rival of Delhi both in extent and magnificence. Here Jay Chand, the last of the dynasty, celebrated the Aswamedha, or horse sacrifice, and here in open day did Prithivi Râja, the daring Chief of the Chauhâns, carry off the willing daughter of the Râthaur king in spite of the gallant resistance of the Banâphar heroes, Alha and Udal. The war that ensued between Delhi and Kanauj paved the way to the Muhammadan invasion, until finally, in 1191 A D, Muhammad Ghor, after the fall of Delhi, marched on Kanauj and defeated Jay Chand at Benares, where he was drowned in the Ganges. Thus ended the Rāthaur kingdom in the Ganges-Jumna Duāb¹

¹ Rajputana Gazetteer, II, 214.

² Grover, Mathura, 124.

³ Indian Antiquary, VI, 211.

3 Subsequent to these events, Sivaji, who was by one account the grandson, and by another the nephew, of Jay Chand, entered Mārwar on a pilgrimage to Dwārka, and halting at the town of Pali, displayed his valour by routing a body of marauders. The Brahmans requested his protection, and he established himself there and became the founder of the Rāthaur dynasty of Marwar. In less than three centuries after their migration from Kanauj the Rathaur occupied an area of 80,000 square miles. Colonel Tod² estimated their numbers in his time, in spite of the ravages of war and pestilence, at half a million of souls. This estimate must have been much too high. The Census of 1891 shows the total Rāthaur population of Rajputāna to be 173,909, of whom 80,858 are in Marwar. The Mughal Emperors owed half their conquests to the one hundred thousand Rāthaur (lākh talwār Rāthaurān) who served under them. In Bikaner³ they have fewer prejudices than their more Eastern brethren: they will eat food without enquiring by whom it was dressed, and will drink either wine or water without asking to whom the cup belonged. The opium draught (piyāla) is a favourite with every one who can afford it.

4 According to Dr Hoernle⁴ the so-called Rathauris were a branch of the Gaharwars, and it may well be that about the time of Mahipala a separation occurred in the Gaharwar clan, possibly on religious grounds. For the Palas professed Buddhism, while the Chandras were Brahmaists. The secession was marked by the departure of the latter to Kanauj, and by a change in nomenclature—Chandra and Rāthaur for Pala and Gaharwar. The contempt for the Gaharwars, alluded to by Colonel Tod, may perhaps be accounted for by their heretical faith in the time of the Palas. The head of the family in these Provinces is the Rāja of Rampur in the Etah

The Rathaur of the North Western Provinces and Oudh

¹ Cunningham Archaeological Reports, I 233

² Annals 33 24

³ Ibid II 218

⁴ Indian Antiquary XIV, 88 21

District, who claims to be thirty-ninth in descent from Jay Chand. Besides these there are two other families of the genuine Rāthaur in the Central Duāh, those known as the Dhir Sāh ki Sākha and the Khimsipur Rāo family; of the former the Rāja of Kurāoli is the head, but he acknowledges fealty to the Chief of Rāmpur. In Mathura they are represented by the Rāja of Kishngarh, and the Farrukhābād branch claim descent from Parjan Pāl, and through him to Jay Chand. Of the same stock is the Usait family in Budāun. The Eastern branch is of much lower status. In Gorakhpur they do not marry in the higher tribes, and the Azamgarh family allege that they conquered the Rājbhars some nineteen or twenty generations ago.¹

5. In Farrukhābād they claim to belong to the Kasyapa gotra. They give girls in marriage to the Bhadauriya, Kachhwāha, and Chauhān, and receive brides from the same septs. In Aligarh they marry Chauhān, Gahlot, Sakarwār, Jangāra, Chandel, Bunnela, Dhākṛē, Tomar, Pundir, and Solankhi girls, and give brides to the Gahlot, Pundir, Sakarwār, Chauhān, and Jangāra septs.

Distribution of the Rāthaur Rājputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Mohammadans.	TOTAL.
Debra Dūn	9	...	9
Sahāranpur	195	16	211
Muzaffarnagar	80	213	302
Meerut	152	...	152
Balansabahr	212	22	234
Aligarh	1,975	...	1,975
Mathura	339	1	340
Agra	1,529	2	1,531
Farrukhābād	6,815	3	6,818
Mainpuri	3,098	5	3,103
Etāwah	2,025	...	2,025

¹ Mainpuri Settlement Report, 21; Mathura Settlement Report, 23; Farrukhābād Settlement Report, 13; Dochaun, Eastern India, II, 428.

Distribution of the Rāthaur Rājputs according to the Census of 1891—contd.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muhamma- dans.	TOTAL.
Etah	6,537	19	6,556
Bareilly	3,002	...	3,002
Bijnor	31	...	31
Budāun	4,215	101	4,316
Morādābād	795	...	795
Shābjahānpur	5,774	3	5,777
Pilibhit	923	...	923
Cawnpur	2,417	1	2,418
Fatehpur	323	31	359
Bānda	170	25	195
Hamīrpur	233	...	233
Allahābād	162	...	162
Jhānsi	143	...	143
Jālaun	1,180	...	1,180
Lalitpur	181	..	181
Benares	46	14	60
Mirzapur	48	...	48
Ghāzipur	1	...	1
Ballia	121	4	125
Gorakhpur	1,699	...	1,699
Basti	1,691	...	1,691
Azamgarh	1,135	127	1,262
Tarāi	3,137	82	3,219
Lucknow	129	...	129
Unāo	204	3	207
Rāi Bareilly	598	...	598
	1,151	1	1,152

Distribution of the Râthaur Râjputs according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Mahammas. dans.	TOTAL.
Sitapur	1,992	103	2,095
Hardoi	3,114	2	3,116
Kheri	3,117	222	3,339
Fairâbâd	50	...	50
Gonda	438	...	438
Bahrâich	395	38	433
Sultânpur	114	...	114
Partâbgarh	131	...	131
Bârabanki	682	...	682
TOTAL	62,557	1,038	63,595

Ranniyâr, Roniyâr.—A sub-caste of Banyas confined to the Benares and Gorakhpur Divisions. Mr. Nesfield derives the word from ravan in the sense of "crying or hawking wares for sale." Others derive it from rauna, to "shout;" but having regard to the special occupation which they follow, the word may possibly be a corruption of latanakâra, or "a person engaged in the salt trade."

2. In Mirzapur the Rauniyârs have two endogamous sub-divisions: Kbariha and Samariha or Sambhariya.

Tribal organization.

These they say are descended from two brothers, one of whom dealt in khâra, or alkaline salt, and the other in Sâmbar, or the salt which comes from the lake of that name in Râjputâna. A man must marry in his own sub-division, and their rule of exogamy is that a man cannot marry in the family of his maternal uncle, father's sister, his own family or that of his sister, as long as any recollection of relationship exists. In Mirzapur they say that they are emigrants from Patna, whence they came some four or five centuries ago. On the contrary the Ranniyârs of Bihâr say that they have come from these Provinces.¹ In Champâran they have broken up into two endogamous groups: Chhatri and Samri (who are probably akin to the Samarihas of Mirzapur): the former of whom claim to be Rājputs from the North-West Provinces, who were degraded for intermarrying with women of the Banya caste.

¹ Esley, Tribes and Castes, II, 198.

3. Rauniyârs marry at the age of nine or ten. They cannot take a second wife in the lifetime of the first unless she be barren. As in Bengal they make no concealment of the fact that they allow widow marriage.¹

4. Some of them are Saivas, but they appear to prefer the Vaishnava sect. In Mirzapur they employ Sarwariya Brāhmans as their priests, but in Bihār they say that they are usually served by those of the Sāka-dwipi tribe.

5. In these Provinces they say that their real business was selling salt, whence they derive their own name and that of their two endogamous groups. But they are very often what is known as pheriwālas or ladākas and wander about with bullocks from village to village, collecting grain and other country produce, which they exchange for salt, sugar, etc. They are generally men of small capital.

6. Those who are not initiated into any particular sect use meat and spirits; but there is no drinking allowed at meetings of the tribal council, and if a man is found drunk at such occasions, he is put out of caste. Brāhmans and Kshatriyas in Bihār are said to eat pakki from their hands; but this is not the case in Mirzapur. They will eat kachchi cooked by Brāhmans and pakki cooked by Haliwāns, Brāhmans, and Kshatriyas.

Distribution of the Rauniyâr Banyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Numbers	DISTRICTS.	Numbers
Farrukhâbâd . . .	1	Gorakhpur . . .	4,321
Mirzapur . . .	649	Azamgarh . . .	14
Ghâzipur . . .	474	Gonda . . .	2
Ballia . . .	2,703	TOTAL . . .	8,164

¹O' Donnel, Bengal Census Report, 201.

Rawa.—A caste confined to the Western Districts, who call themselves low Rājputs, and say they came into this part of the country in the time of the Emperor Shāhjahān. The women of this caste procure divorce in a peculiar way. All they have to do is to throw a cowdung cake (upla) from outside into the house. Seeing this done, the husband separates finally from his wife without any further formality. They rarely rise above the grade of farm servants.

Distribution of the Rawas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Muzaffarnagar	6,042
Meerut	8,270
Bijnor	11,139
TOTAL	25,451

Rohtaki.—A sub-caste of Banyas who claim descent from a certain Rāja Rahat, the founder of Rohtāsgarh. The foundation of it is, however, more usually ascribed to Rāja Rohitaswa, the son of Harischandra. They are more probably a local sub-caste deriving their name from the Rohtak District in the Panjāb. They are said to be very careful in religious observances. Rāja Lachhman Sinh¹ says they are numerous in Sayāna in the Bulandshahr District; but the last Census shows none of them in that District.

Distribution of Rohtaki Banyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Numbers.	DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Shāhjabānpur	1	Bijnor	835
Muzaffarnagar	118	Morādābād	460
Meerut	4	Pilibhit	1
Agra	29	Lucknow	10
Bareilly	23	TOTAL	1,486

¹ Memo. of Bulandshahr, 163.

Ror — A small caste of cultivators in the Western Districts Of their kinsmen in the Panjāb Mr Ibbetson writes ¹—“The real seat of the Panjāb Rors is in the great dhal jungles south of Thanesar on the borders of the Karnāl and Ambala Districts, where they hold a Chaurāi, nominally of eighty-four villages, of which the village of Amin where the Pandavas arranged their forces before their last fight with the Kauravas, is their head village But the Rors have spread down the Western Jumna Canal into the lower parts of Karnāl and into Jind in considerable numbers They are fine stalwart men of very much the same type as the Jats, whom they almost equal as husbandmen, their women also working in the fields They are more peaceful and less grasping in their habits than the Jāts, and are consequently readily admitted as tenants, where the latter would be kept at arm's length Of their origin I can say nothing certain They have the same story as the Aroras, of their having been Rajputs, who escaped the fury of Parasurama by stating that their caste was aur, or ‘another’ The Aroras are often called Roras in the east of the Panjāb, yet I can hardly believe that the frank and stalwart Ror is of the same origin as the Arora The Amin men say that they came from Sambhāl in Moradabad, but this may be only to connect themselves with their neighbours the Chauhan Rajputs, who certainly came from there But almost all the Rors seem alike to point to Badli in the Jhajjar Tahsil of Rohtak as their immediate place of origin, though some of them say they came from Rajputāna Their social status is identical with that of the Jats, and they practise karewa or ‘widow marriage,’ though only, they say, within the caste Their divisions appear to be exceedingly numerous, some of them are Sagwāl, Maipā khichī, and Jograñ”

2 In Saharanpur the Rors claim to have been created at Kaithal by Śrī Krishna in the war of the Mahabharata Their marriage ceremonies resemble those of Jats and Gūjars, they permit widow marriage, and the levirate is practically compulsory They eat mutton, fish, pork, and venison, and drink spirits It is said that they will eat lachhī and palkī and drink and smoke with Jats and Gūjars

3 From an account of the Rors of Bijnor supplied by the District Officer, it appears that the tribal tradition of their origin is that when Râma Chandra severed his connection with Sita, she was pregnant, and went into the jungle under the protection of the Rishi Vâlmiki. She bore a son there, who was named Lawa, and one day, when she was leaving the house, she put the child in charge of the Rishi. The child followed his mother, and the Rishi missing him, and supposing him to be dead, constructed another child out of a wisp of kusa grass. When Sita returned and saw the other child, she asked what it all meant. The Rishi said, "roraphora" (apparently meaning 'this useless thing') "is also your son." Hence they were called Rors.

¹ Panjab Ethnography sect on 46

4. They are supposed to have emigrated to Bijnor some four centuries ago from a place called Fatchpur Pundri in the Karnâl District. Half this village was owned by the Rors, and half by a colony of Sayyids. The Sayyids quarrelled with the Rors, who were forced to emigrate under their leader Mahi Chand. By another story they were originally Tomar Râjputs of Delhi, which they were forced to leave after the conquest of their tribe. By a third account, their emigration from Delhi took place in the time of Anrangzeb.

5. They marry and perform their other family ceremonies in the usual manner common to respectable Hindus. Widows can marry again, and the levirate, though permissible, is not compulsory on the widow. There is no regular form of divorce, but a wife detected in adultery is expelled from the tribe by the decree of the tribal council, and cannot subsequently on payment of a penalty be readmitted to caste rights.

6. Their chief occupation is agriculture, to which they add the making of hemp matting and twine (tât, sulli).

7. They eat mutton, goats' flesh, and fowls. They will not eat beef, monkeys, or vermin. They will not eat kachchi cooked by any caste but their own. They will smoke with Jâts and Gûjars, and eat pakki cooked by them or any superior caste.

Distribution of Rors according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Numbers.	DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Debra Dûn . . .	3	Etâwah . . .	5
Sahâranpur . . .	3,320	Bijnor . . .	614
Muzaffarnagar . . .	475	Bonares . . .	41
Mathura . . .	1	TOTAL . . .	4,459

S

Sadgop, Satgop (also known as Châsa) —A cultivating caste of Bengal Proper, who are supposed to have separated themselves from the Guilas by abandoning pastoral pursuits and taking exclusively to agriculture. Mr Rusley has given a full account of the tribe¹. Those found in these Provinces are only Bengal pilgrims.

Distribution of the Sadgops according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS	Numbers	DISTRICTS	Numbers
Sabaranpur	6	Allahâbâd	22
Mathura	144	Gorakpur	2
Etâwah	3	TOTAL	177

Sâdh—(Sanskrit sâdhu, "pure, saintlike") —The word Sâdh ordinarily means nothing more than a Hindu ascetic or devotee, but it is applied in a special sense to a sect of Hindu Unitarians, which had its origin in the Panjab, but has now widely spread into these Provinces. In the Samvat year 1600 (1543 A D) Bîrbhan of Bijesar, near Narnanl, is said to have received a mysterious communication from Udho Das, who was a pupil of Râê Das, the founder of the Satnâmi sect, of which some account has been given in connection with the Chamârs. To Bîrbhan was communicated the present creed of the Sâdhs. Udho Das gave at the same time to Bîrbhân sundry marks by which he might know him at his re appearance—First, that whatever he foretold should happen, second, that no shadow should be cast by his figure, third, that he would tell him the thoughts of his heart, fourth, that he would be suspended between heaven and earth, fifth, that he would bring the dead to life.

2 The Sadhs of these Provinces are known by that name to outsiders, but they generally use the name Satnâmi among themselves. Adults are required to wear a white dress, and ornament and the use of rich apparel of every kind are prohibited. They never wear a cap, but use instead a turban of a peculiar shape. They are enjoined by their religion never to tell a lie and never to take an oath. They are in the same way prohibited from using any kind of intoxicant or any article which borders upon luxury. Wine, opium, ganja, bhang, betel and tobacco are abominations to them. They have an intense respect for animal life, which extends to even the smallest insect, and the use of any kind of animal food is strictly denounced. They will salute no one but the Divine principle, which they term Sat or "The Truth;" and when they meet a European or any superior they salute merely by raising the hands to the level of the breast. They detest idolatry and all outward forms of religious belief. They are very reticent about their beliefs, and it is only with the greatest difficulty that it has been possible to obtain a copy, which is probably incomplete, of the book of religious songs (śāhi) which embody the principles of their faith. All controversy or argument on religious matters with strangers to the sect is reprobated. Their religious books, known as pothi, are written in Bhāṣha, or ordinary Hindi, and are not the work of any single author, but contain a number of songs, many of which are taken from the writings of Nānak and Kabīr. These books are read almost daily in their chapel or meeting-house, which is known as jumlaghar, or "house of assembly," or chauti, "station." The service takes place in the evening, when all members of the sect, male and female, attend. This is their only form of worship.

3. It has been held judicially that the ordinary Hindu law of succession applies to them. The principal Regulations of the sect. seats of the sect in this part of India are Delhi, Agra, Jaypur, and Farrukhābād. There is a small colony of them in Mirzapur, who do not appear in the Census returns. They live by calico printing. They deny that there are any caste divisions among them. They are endogamous, and in arranging their marriages they pay no regard to wealth or station. To recognise any distinctions of rank is forbidden, and the only disqualification is the violation of the rules of the sect and the practising of any degrading or sinful occupation. They all eat and drink together, and any jealousy, hatred, or quarrels between the members are considered disgraceful. They appear to have no regular formula of exogamy; marriage with near relations is forbidden, and they will not marry in a family with which any previous connection by marriage is remembered. They all live together in the same muhalla, or "quarter," and are always ready to assist each other and provide for the poor, widows, and orphans of the sect. They are hard-working and industrious; it is considered disgraceful to be dependent for support on another, beggary is unknown among them

4 Children are betrothed in infancy, and marriage is solemnised at the age of twelve, fourteen, or sixteen

Marriage

No bride price is given, but the bride usually receives a dowry Polygamy is not approved and polyandry is unknown, and the very idea of such an institution is most abhorrent to them As they all live close together, their betrothals are arranged privately among themselves When the father of the youth contemplates his marriage with a certain girl, he sends a man or woman of his family as an envoy to the father of the girl As they have no horoscopes there is none of the almost endless bother which accompanies the preliminaries of a betrothal among respectable Hindus, in order to ascertain if the match is unobjectionable from the astrologer's point of view If the father of the girl agrees to the proposal of the marriage, he feeds the envoy with sweetmeats or makes him drink some milk, and gives him money Thus settles the engagement (mangni pakli)

5 When the pair reach puberty the marriage day is fixed The notice of the appointed date is sent by the father of the girl, and on receipt of the message the father of the youth calls a meeting of the members of the sect, to whom the approaching marriage is announced The envoy is fed and is given a present of a turban and a sheet During all this time the songs known as Mangal or "rejoicing," of which examples are given below, are sung From that day begins the usual anointing (ublauni) of the bride and bridegroom Every day the members of the sect assemble at the meeting-room (chanki), and the Mangal is recited On the wedding day the father of the bride gives a feast to the members of the sect at noon In the evening the bridegroom, accompanied by his father and friends, goes to the house of the bride where they are all seated on a white floor-cloth Opposite them the pair are seated on two cushions After sitting in this way for a short time, the garments of the bride and bridegroom are knotted together, and both of them move four times round the cushions, while some member of the sect reads the Mangal verses This constitutes the whole of the marriage service The binding portion of the service is the revolutions round the cushions of the bride and bridegroom All then return to the house of the bridegroom and the bride stays for a short time at the house of the bridegroom ; she is then escorted home by her brother, and, when it is so arranged, she comes permanently to live with him ; but there is no further ceremony like the Hindu gauna.

6. They divorce their wives only when they have committed some offence which renders them liable to excommunication from the sect. In this case all that is done is to announce the fact before a meeting of the members of the sect. They arrange most of their affairs before a council of the caste, and they very seldom have recourse to the Courts.

7. As already stated, the Sâdhas are Unitarians and worship one God, the Author of the universe, under the name of Satya Guru or Satya Nâm. There is no material representation of Him of any kind. By meditation on Him, and the practice of virtue, they believe that they attain ultimately absorption into the Divinity. Their religion teaches them that they should give alms only in secret, and not to strive after riches or the hoarding of wealth. The following are the rules of the faith :—

(1) "Worship one God, Who is the Creator of all and has power to destroy. None is higher or loftier than He ; and man should not in wantonness worship any stone, metal, wood or tree, or other created thing. Rather, all honour and renown are due to Him. He is the only God and His the only word. Whoever fixes his thoughts on anything near him, errs and sins ; and whoever sins goes to Hell.

(2) Preserve a modest and humble demeanour and fix not your heart on things of this world ; and perfectly carry out the principles of your faith. Do not practise what is contrary to your faith, and this some Sâdhas deny, saying that the order is—"First feed one's own people ; feed no stranger."

(3) Never speak falsely, and curse not the earth, the water, the trees, nor the beasts. Use your tongue only in praise of God, and never spoil any one of his land, wealth, or beasts. Steal not their goods ; be not critical of them or their possessions ; and be content with what you have. Think not upon what is evil ; and cast not your eye upon what is shameless or unlawful, be it man or woman, dance or pastime.

(4) Think not on evil words, but employ yourselves in the praise and glory of God, and amuse not yourselves with stories, nor fables, nor singing, nor music, but only with hymns

(5) Do not greedily desire anything, whether wealth or beauty, and take not what belongs to another. God is the giver of all, and as you put your trust in Him, so you will receive

(6) When you are asked "Who are you?" say, "I am a Sadh' Make no mention of caste, and enter not into controversy Rely firmly on the strength of your religion, rest not your pride and hopes on man

(7) Wear white clothes, use not antimony, nor belladonna, nor benna Wear not caste marks, either on the body or forehead Put on no chaplet, nor Brahmanical thread, nor jewels

(8) Eat vegetables, not flesh, nor certain kinds of fish Eat no betel Snuff not up sweet perfumes, smoke not, and make no use of opium Lift not up your hand and bow not your head before any idol or man

(9) Slay not, tyrannise over no one, give no evidence on oath, take nothing by force

(10) Let each man have one wife, and each wife have one husband A married man should not eat the leavings of his wife, but a wife should eat what is saved from her husband's food, as is customary, and the wife should obey her husband

(11) Assume not the guise of faqirs and ask not for alms, take no presents, fear not magic, before you trust in anything, test it well The assembly of good men is your place of pilgrimage Recognise good people before they salute you

(12) The Sadh should observe no particular days Pay no attention to the intercalary months, nor the months themselves Do not look upon as your own the voice of any bird or beast Seek only the word of God, and be content therewith "

Writing from Fatehgarh Mr Steel says — "In spite of the injunction to say, when asked who they are, 'I am Sadh', there was a marked tendency in the recent Census operations to put down the Sadhs as Hindus Also the order to wear plain clothes is more honoured in the breach than the observance, the wealthy Sādh's of Farrukhābād being very gorgeous in their attire A story is told (perhaps by their enemies), but denied by the Sādh's themselves that in Nawabi times their funeral ceremony consisted in tying the corpse in a standing position to a tree with its face to the wind and leaving it so. This used to take place north of the city of Farrukhâbâd. It is said that the practice was interdicted in consequence of the remonstrances of the English Officers at the Fatehgarh Cantonment. The whole story is probably a Brâhmanical invention."

8. Marriage songs of the Sâdhs :—

*Darshan dē Gurn ! param sanchi !
Tum bina dukh pāwai mori dehīn !
Nīnd na dūē, ann na bhāwai !
Bar bār mohin birah satāwai ;
Ghar angana mohin kachhū na suhāē ;
Pajar bhai par birah na jāē.
Nainan chhūtai sahāl dhāra ;
Nis din panth nihārūn tumhāra.
Jāise mēn marai binu nīra,
Aisē tun bina dukhat sharīra.*

"O most beloved preceptor ! Let me see thee !
My frame aches without thee ! I feel no desire for sleep or food !
Again and again, I grieve for separation from thee ;
I feel no pleasure in my house or courtyard ;
When the morn dawns the pain of separation does not leave me.
Floods of tears flow from mine eyes ;
I consider thy doctrine night and day.
As a fish without water, so does my frame ache without thee."

*Dukhat tum bina ; rotat dūāē ; pargat darshan dījiyē.
Binti karūn merē sāniya bālī jāūn, bilam na kījiyē !
Bibid bibid kar bhaydūn byākul tina dekhen chit na rahai.
Tapat juāa ulhat tan men, kathin dukh mero ko sahāi.
Augun aprādhi dāya kījai augun kachhū na bichāriyo.
Patil pānwan rakhū pati ab pal chhin na bisāriyo.
Dāya lījo, daras dījo, ab kī badi ko chhoriyo.
Bhar bhar nayanān nīrkhi dekhen nij sanch na toriyo.*

"My frame aches without thee ! I am wailing at thy door ! Now appear and let me see thee.

O my Lord ! I pray thee make no delay !

I have become restless through weeping and wailing.

I cannot live without the sight of thee.

Flames rise within me and consume my frame. Who can endure my pain ?

I am full of faults and sin, do thou have mercy upon me
 Take not my faults and failings into thy regard !
 O thou that freest the soul from sin ! maintain my honour !
 Forget me not even for a moment, and have mercy upon me !
 Show me thy form and forget my sins of the present !
 Cast thine eyes full upon me, and sever not thy love from me !'
 9 Death song of the Sâdhs —

*Tujhê binâna kiya pari tu apna nîber ?
 Bajai tâl bajant re man bâwarê ! Sulari na chher ?
 Par haqq chhâro haqq picchâro Samajhwâla pher.
 Jhûtha bân jagat la, man bâwarê ! Sun shahd ki ter
 Kâya to nagri salal bhamarî pânch jamen ser
 Guru gyân kharag sam bhal lē, man bâwarê !
 Yam karai na zer
 Tera jiwana chhin pal ek, jag men phir na aisi ber.
 Tera para jahâz samudra men, man bâwarê ! phir sakai pher
 Sabhi musâfir râh kē sab kharē kumar kasē
 Lenâ hoē so lîjiyē, man bâwarê, bîli jât aber,
 Kar sumaran Sât Guru chhâro dund duhel.
 Tijē bhâm milain Sât nâm sē, man bâwarê ! man bâwarê, jagat ki na zer*

“What hast thou to do with others ? Guard against the danger that awaits thee !

Why needest thou awake the sleeper ?

Abandon what is unreal. Recognise what is real

This is only the perversion of the understanding

O foolish mind ! The things of this world are false, so saith the Voice of Truth

The body is like a city, in it are five lions

Gird on the sword of the knowledge of the Preceptor, and then,

O foolish mind ! thou needest not fear the Lord of Death !

Thou livest for a moment, yea for the twinkling of an eye

Thou shalt never have such time at thy disposal

Thy bark has sailed into the deep, O foolish mind ! If thou canst steer it safe to the yonder shore

All thy fellow passenger stand ready with their lions girt.

Take what thou desirest to take, O foolish mind ! The time is fast passing away

Leave the noise and tumult of the world. Repeat the True Name.

Then shalt thou gain the third virtue (God) through the True Name; and then, O foolish heart! thou shalt have no longer to endure the labour of this world!"

Distribution of the Sâdhs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
FarrukhÂbâd	1,866
Cawapur	4
TOTAL .	1,870

Sahariya.¹—A tribe, which is apparently of Dravidian origin, found in Lalitpur and some of the adjoining parts of Bundelkhand. They do not appear in the returns of the last Census, having apparently been included with the Soiri. The name of the tribe is usually derived from the Arabic sahara, "a wilderness," which is familiar as the name of the great desert of Northern Africa; but this, of course, is out of the question. It may perhaps be conjectured that the name is connected with that of the Savaras, the name in Sanskrit writers of the aggregate of the Kolarian or Dravidian tribes who dwelt in the highlands of Central India, and included races like the Kols, Mundas, Kurkus, Bhils, Bhuiyas, and their kinsfolk. Some account of them will be found in connection with the Soiris. Another name for these Sahariyas of Bundelkhand is Râwat, which comes from the Sanskrit Râja-dûta, "King's messenger," or Râja-putra, "King's Son."

2. The Sahariyas of Lalitpur are divided into a number of exogamous sections (gotra), such as the Sirausiya, Kodoriya, Thegotiya, Sanauliya, Rajauriya, Jachoriya, Kusmorwa, Sarosawa, Chakardiya, Chirauncha, Kurwariya, Bagauliya, Sanhauriya. Of the origin of these names the tribe can give no account. Further enquiry will probably show that some of them at least are of totemistic origin. These sections are, as has been already said, exogamous. But as is usual, the rule of exogamy is reinforced by the prohibition of intermarriage between at least first and second cousins. Of their origin and history they can give no account. In Lakhtpur they profess to be indigenous to the district.

¹ Principally based on a note by Mr. H. G. Ferard, C. S.

3 When the bride is admitted into the family of her husband, she has to perform the rite of confarreatio, which is known among them as dudha bhāts, or "the eating of boiled rice with milk." A man may marry as many wives as he pleases, but he cannot take a second wife in the lifetime of the first, unless she is barren or suffering from some serious disease. Concubinage, with the leave of the tribal council, is permitted. Unmarried girls are obliged to be chaste. If an unmarried girl is detected in an intrigue with a man of the tribe, she and her relations are put out of caste, until they feed the brethren, she can then be married, usually to her paramour. As far as possible infant marriage is the rule, and a girl should not remain unmarried after the age of ten. There is no regular bride-price, but by tribal custom the father of the bridegroom pays eight rupees to defray the expenses of the marriage. If a married woman is found intriguing with an outsider, she is permanently expelled, and thus, being done with the sanction of the tribal council, operates as an absolute divorce, and such a woman cannot be remarried or taken as a concubine by a member of the tribe, on pain of the man she lives with being also excommunicated. But if her paramour be a member of the tribe, the matter is brought before the council, and on giving the necessary dinner to the brethren, her husband can take her back, if he be so disposed, if he refuse, she is made over as a concubine to the man who seduced her. Children, the offspring of an adulterous connection with a stranger to the tribe, are not admitted to full caste rights, and, being considered as of a lower grade, find husbands and wives for themselves as best they can among persons of their own rank. Widow marriage and the levirate are allowed under the usual restrictions. If the deceased husband leave a brother who has no wife, and is of the suitable age, he generally takes over the widow of his brother, but under no circumstances can an elder brother take the widow of his younger brother. If a widow marry an outsider, she loses all right to the custody of her children and to a share in the goods of her late husband. The heirs of a man are his sons, and there is no trace of the fiction by which the children of the levir are attributed to his dead brother.

4. There is no ceremony during pregnancy. The mother is attended by a midwife of the Basor tribe, and on the tenth day the birth impurity is removed by the daswadū rite, when the brethren are feasted ; or, if the family is very poor, some hoiled gram (ghughurā) is distributed among them. There is no trace of the convade and no rule of adoption.

Birth rites.

5. When the match has been arranged by the parents of the parties and their friends, the father of the boy, accompanied by a few of his brethren, goes to the house of the bride, and taking her in his lap puts a rupee and some sweetmeats in her hand. The party are then entertained, and next morning, as he is going away, the father of the girl gives a rupee to the father of the boy, which fixes the betrothal. On the wedding day, the bridegroom and his relatives go to the house of the bride, and a mark (tilak) is made on his forehead. Next day the pair walk five times round the shed in the presence of the brethren, and this concludes the marriage. No Brāhman is employed, and the ceremony is carried out by an old man of the tribe or the brother-in-law of the bride.

Marriage ceremonies.

6. The dead are cremated, except those who are unmarried or those who die of some epidemic disease. The ashes are thrown into some neighbouring stream, and the mourners have their heads shaved. There is no rite of the nature of the Śrāddha, and no funeral priest is employed. The man who fires the pyre is impure for three days. A woman is impure for three days after her menses, and for ten days after her confinement. The impurity after the menstrual period is removed by bathing.

Death rites.

7. They are chiefly worshippers of Bhawāni, but they also reverence Bāma and Krishna. They have no special ancestor worship, and do not employ

Religion.

Brāhmans in any of their domestic rites, which are conducted by the sister's son or by some old man of the tribe. They propitiate demons and evil spirits with the sacrifice of a goat ; sometimes the ear of the victim only is offered. When an animal is sacrificed, the worshippers consume the flesh themselves. They have also various local deities, such as Gaur, Narasimha, Sānwar, Goraiya, Katiya, Tholiya, Somiya, and Ahay Pāl,—most of which appear to be deified

Distribution of the Sâins according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICTS.	Numbers.	DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Tarâi	7	Gonda	34
Lucknow	34	Bahrâich	116
Unâo	19	Bârabanki	201
Sitapur	489	TOTAL .	6,655
Kheri	645

Saini.—A gardening and cultivating tribe found only in the Meerut Division and Bijnor. As is shown by their sub-castes, they are very closely allied with the Mâli, if not identical. From Jâlandhar Mr. Purser writes¹:—"According to their own account the Sainis were originally Mâlis and lived principally in the Mathura District. When Mahmûd of Ghazni invaded India, the ancestors of the Sainis came into these parts, and, finding the land suitable for cultivation, settled down here and went not back to their homes. The explanation of the name Saini is that they were such good agriculturists and did such wonders with the land that the natives called them the Rasaini tribe (from rasâi, "cleverness, skill"), and in course of time the first syllable was lost and the present name Saini left. They are admirable cultivators, and surpassed by none in industry and skill. They do more market gardening than the Jâts, and perhaps even than the Arâins, but this is in addition to, and not in place of, ordinary farming. They have no bad qualities to distinguish them which call for special notice. The Sikhs among them pay much respect to the Granth Sâhib, and in every village have a copy of it, which is read diligently in the audience of the people. Men of this tribe not seldom take service and especially in the cavalry." In Jâlandhar, according to another account,² they claim Râjput origin, and say they are connected with the Arâins, though the latter know nothing of the relationship. In Amlâla they are described as an ill-conditioned set, first-rate cultivators, but refractory and intriguing. Another derivation of their name current in these Provinces is that it is taken from sâna, which is the technical word for mixing up the chopped millet fodder with chaff and water for farm cattle In their customs and manners they are identical with the Mîh.

¹ Settlement Report, 81.² Ibbetson, Panjâb Ethnography, 207.

2. In Sahâranpur many of them breed ducks for the markets in the adjoining hill stations.

Distribution of the Sainis according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS	Bahenya.	Bhâgi rathi	Colâ	Phôl- mâli	Others	TOTAL
Dehra Dûd	97	97
Salâtanpur . .	2 265	2,898	7,191		7,010	20,264
Muzaffarnagar .	1,816	19 023	578	47	1,714	23,177
Meerut . .	221	4,265	..	.	3,022	7,508
Agra		1	1
Bijnor . .	7,184	37 663	126		3 380	18,313
Benares . .					18	18
Tarâi . .					1	1
TOTAL .	11,486	63,618	7,895	47	16,140	99 423

Saiqalgar, Sighgar, Sikhgar—(Arabic saiqal, "a polisher")
 —The caste of armourers and polishers of metals They are also known as Bâriya (bâr, "the edge of a weapon", Sanskrit pâlî) or Sânwala, Sândhara (sân, "a grindstone"), but these are especially cutlers and razor setters In Mirzapur some call themselves Shaikh and others Pathân, and these do not intermarry In Benares they say that they were originally Râjputs from Mârwar¹ At Mirzapur they trace their origin to Partâbgarh, and call themselves the descendants of Dâud or David, probably in reference to the passage in the Quran which says (Surah XXI, 79-80) "We taught him (David) the arts of making coats of mail (for before his time plates of metal were used) for you among mankind in general, that they might defend you from your suffering in warring with your enemies" They follow the ordinary Musalman rules of exogamy, marriage, and inheritance Widow marriage and the levirate are recognised,

¹ Sherring, Hindu Tribes and Castes I, 317

2. They pay special reference to the Panchon Pir, Shaikh Saddu, Kālī Bhawāni, and Ghāzi Miyān. To the Religion.

Panchon Pir and Ghāzi Miyān the offerings consist of melons, mangoes, parched gram, pulse, cakes (bari), boiled rice, sugar, curds, and clarified butter. When cholera rages, they sacrifice a goat to Kālī Bhawāni. Shaikh Saddu is more specially venerated in Oudh. His visitations cause melancholy and hypochondria. He is worshipped by the distribution of sweets to the poor and the sacrifice of a black goat. He once found a magic lamp, the powers of which he abused, and was torn in pieces by the Jinn.¹ By the Saiqalgars he is worshipped with an offering of sweet cakes (gulgula) and the sacrifice of a goat.

3. Since the disarming of the country the trade of the armourer and cutler has become depressed. The ordinary Saiqligar seen in towns is a trader of no worth, and his whole stock-in-trade is a circular whetstone (adn) worked by a strap between two posts fixed in the ground. He sharpens a four-bladed knife, a pair of scissors or two razors for a pice (three pies). Their status is that of ordinary Muhammadans of the lower artisan class.

Distribution of the Saiqalgars according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Dehra Dūn	45	...	45
Sahāranpur	12	312	324
Meerut	18	33	51
Bulandshahr	23	23
Aligarh	74	74
Mathura	8	42	50
Agra	49	43	92
Farrakhabād	8	...	8
Mainpuri	3	70	73

¹ For a full account of this worthy, see Mrs. Mir Hasan Ali's Observations on the Muhammadans of India, II, 324, 327.

Distribution of the Saiqalgars according to the Census of 1891—continued

DISTRICTS							Hindus	Muham- madan-	TOTAL.
Etawah	2	39	41
Etah		7	7
Bareilly	2	18	20
Budāun	23	9	32
Morādābād		17	17
Shāhjahānpur	88	112	200
Pilibhīt	23	11	34
Cawnpur	53	14	67
Fatehpur		4	4
Hamirpur		12	12
Allahābād		65	65
Jhansi	1	..	1
Jālaun		53	53
Lalitpur		1	1
Jounpur		103	103
Ghāzipur		72	72
Gorakhpur		305	305
Basti		107	107
Azamgarh		231	231
Tarai	148		148
Lucknow	88	7	93
Unāo	1	..	1
Pāñ Bareilly		89	89
8 tspur	12	230	242
Hardoi	1	116	117
Kheri	66	181	247
Fazabād		130	130

Distribution of the Saiqalgars according to the Census of 1891—concluded.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Gouda	263	263
Bahrâich	61	260	314
Sultânpur	190	190
Partâbgarb	1	85	86
Bâiabanki	113	113
TOTAL	701	3,416	4,160

Sâkadwipi, Sâkaldwipi.—A tribe of Brâhmanas who take their name from the land of Sâkadwipa, which has been identified with the Kâbul Valley which was occupied by the Sâkas in the first century before Christ. In the Mahâbhârata the Sâkas are associated with the other Dasyu races of the North-Western Frontier, and we are told that Saincya, the charioteer of Krishna, "made the beautiful earth a mass of mud with the flesh and blood of thousands of Kambojas, Sâkas, Savaras, Kirâtas, Varvaras, destroying thy host;" and the same record affirms their connection with the Aryas in the verses:—"These tribes of Kshatriyas, viz., Sâkas, Yavanas, Kambojas, and Drâviras have become Vrishalas from seeing no Brâhmanas." How it came to pass that these Kshatriyas lost their Aryan status is thus related:—"Satyavrata was degraded to the condition of a Chandâla, or outcast, and called Trisanku on account of three sins (tri sanku),—of killing a cow, displeasing his father, and eating flesh not properly consecrated. But on his repentance and feeding the family of Visvâmitra during a twelve years' drought, he was transported to Heaven. His descendant Bahu was vanquished by the tribes of Haihayas and Talajhangas and died in exile. To him a posthumous son, named Sâgara, was born, who nearly exterminated the Haihayas and would have also destroyed the Sâkas had they not applied to their family priest Vasishtha for protection. The priest desired Sâgara to refrain from the slaughter of those who were as good as dead; for he had compelled the tribes to abandon the duties of their caste and all association with the twice born, and Sâgara thereupon imposed upon them peculiar distinguishing marks. He made the Yavanas shave their heads completely, the Sâkas to shave the upper half of their heads, the Paradas to wear their hair long, and the Pahlavas to let their beards grow. He deprived them of all religious rites, and thus, abandoned by Brahmans, they became Mlechchhas¹. This notable instance of early ethnography shows that the writers of the early Pauranik periods believed that these Scythian races, some of whom like the Chinese shave the fronts of their heads, were of common origin with themselves. "They, at the same time," as Dr. Mun notes,² "erroneously imagined that these tribes had fallen away from Brâhmanical institutions, thus assigning to their own polity an antiquity to which it could in reality have no claim." What real connection there may be between these Indo Scythian Sâkas and the Sâkadwîpi Brahmans it is now impossible to ascertain.

2 The legend of their origin is thus told by themselves.

Tribal legend. Sûraj Narayan the Sun god married the daughter of Visvakarma the craftsman of the gods. When she was incommoded by the heat of her spouse, she went and complained to her father, but he said that he could not interfere unless Sûraj Narayan himself asked him to come with her to Visvâmitra. When he arrived, Visvakarma told him that the only way by which his heat could be diminished was by cutting him into twelve pieces. Sûraj Narayan agreed to have this operation performed, and thus came to existence the twelve units (kala). As Visvakarma was cutting the Sun's body with his file, eighteen fragments fell in Sakadwîpi and from these sprang the eighteen divisions of Sakadwîpi Brahmans. It may be noted in passing that Sun worship prevailed largely among the Indo Scythian tribes. The story goes on to say that Sri Krishna by the advice of the Sun, summoned these Brâhmanas from Sâkadwîpi to cure his son Samba, who had been stricken with leprosy. They came flying through the air on the back of Garuda and effected the cure, for which they would take no remuneration. Again they started on the back of Garuda for Gaya where the Raja Suloma was afflicted with the same disease. Him they also cured and the Rani was so pleased that she secretly made to some of them a gift (dâna) of five villages, the names of which she wrote on betel leaves, and made the Brâhmans chew. Seeing them degraded by thus accepting a reward for their services, Garuda refused to take them back again, so they were obliged to settle at Gaya. But four of them were so conscious of the disgrace which resulted from the treachery of the Râni, that they retired to the holy land of Badarinâth (Badari ka âsrama), and there died in the Himalayan snow. The four who thus lost their lives were Suratkrita, Sutaya, Sudhrama, and Sumati. The remaining fourteen founded the existing gotras of the Sâkadwîpis—Mihransu, Vasu, Parâsara, Kaudinya, Kasyapa, Garga, Bhṛigu, Bhabhyamati, Sûryadatta, Nala, Arkadatta, and Kausila. They have in these Provinces at least no division by local areas (diâ) and their system of exogamy depends altogether on the gotras.

¹ Professor Wilson's Works VIII 291

² Ancient Sanskrit Texts I 468

3. Their titles are Misra, Pâthak, and Pânṛê. In Bengal, according to Mr. Risley¹ their tribal organization is different: "It is an curious fact that although the Sâkadwîpi have the standard eponymous gotras of the Brâhman caste, their marriages are regulated not by these, but by ninety-five divisions (pur) of the local or territorial type, that is to say, a Sâkadwîpi man may marry a woman of his own gotra who in theory is descended from the same mythical ancestor or Rishi as himself, but may not marry a woman whose forefathers are shown by the name of her pur to have come from the same village or the same tract of country as his own. To abandon the gotra altogether, and to substitute for it exogamous divisions based on a wholly different order of facts, involves so serious a departure from orthodox usage that one is inclined to doubt whether the Sâkadwîpi can never have been organised on the orthodox lines. This doubt is borne out by the statement made by Mr. Sherring that the test applied to a stranger pretending to be a Sâkadwîpi is to offer him what is called jhûtha pâni, or water from a vessel from which another person has drunk,—a custom prohibited by all strict sects of Hindus. Should the stranger not be a Sâkadwîpi, he will refuse the water, probably with some indignation, as by drinking it, his caste, whatever it was, would be broken. If a Sâkadwîpi, however, he will take it willingly."

4. Whatever may be the case in Bengal, there seems little doubt that in these Provinces the Sâkadwîpi follow the ordinary Brâhman formula of gotra exogamy; and it is perhaps possible that the rule which, according to Mr Risley, prevails in Bihār, represents a falling off from the stricter rules of the Western Branch of the tribe. In these Provinces the Sakadwipi act as family priests and astrologers and seem to have a preference for the Tantrika rites.

Distribution of Sākadwīpi Brāhmins according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS	Numbers	DISTRICTS	Numbers
Sahāranpur . . .	7	Gorakhpur . . .	12 272
Meerut . . .	11	Basti . . .	6 736
Bulandshahr . .	1	Azamgarh . . .	2 697
Mathura . . .	2	Tanda . . .	1
Farrukhābād . .	3	Lucknow . . .	121
Mainpuri . . .	179	Rāz Bareilly . . .	171
Bareilly . . .	3	Sitapur . . .	1 313
Morādābād . . .	16	Hardoi . . .	5
Pilibhiti . . .	4	Kheri . . .	195
Cawnpur . . .	24	Faizābād . . .	1 615
Etānda . . .	22	Gonda . . .	8 263
Benares . . .	1 773	Bahraich . . .	14 526
Mirzapur . . .	657	Sultānpur . . .	1 551
Jaunpur . . .	47	Bārabanki . . .	7 121
Ghāziपुर . . .	1 938
Ballia . . .	2 331	TOTAL	67 186

Sakarwār.—A sept of Rājputs who take their name from some place named Sikri. This, by one account, is Fatehpur Sikri, where Akbar built his famous palace near Agra. "In Urdu" they are the least considerable of all the clans who figure in these chronicles, and their weakness has had the common effect of destroying their ancestral pride and effacing the memory of their old traditions. None of them can give a clear account of where they came from, or what their history has been. But there seems reason to believe that they are a portion of the same Sakarwârs, who, emigrating into Ondh from the West, settled in the Faizâbâd District, near Dostpur. These latter are certainly earlier colonists than the Bachgoti and Râjkumâr Râjas, who have now nearly succeeded in reducing them to servitude, and whose immigration was contemporaneous with that of the Chaubâns of Chaubâna. The latter probably colonised their present position in 1350 A. D., and belong to the first class of colonists; and, consequently, if the above line of reasoning be correct, the Sakarwârs, who are earlier than them, belong to the first class also."

2. They appear to have held North Gorakhpur¹ before the Sirnets. They are the strongest Hindu landowners in Ghâzipur,² except the Kinwâr Bhûinhârs. They claim to have been originally Mîr Brâhmans from Fatehpur Sikri. They have split into a Râjpûnt and Bhûinhâr branch, and some are Muhammadans. In Azamgarh³ the Râjpûts ignore the Bhûinhâr branch; but the latter assert that they are of the same stock, which is generally believed. They call themselves Gadiya, and derive the name from an ancestor named Gâd, or one who was afflicted with ringworm (gâd). Another story is that he was a Râja Gâdh, who was the founder of Ghâzipur and the ancestor of the Sakarwâr as well as the Kausik sept. In the Azamgarh story he lived at Sikrigarh, near Lahore, which was the home of the sept. Another branch moved into the hills and are known as Parbatiya. They settled in Pargana Nizâmâbad after expelling the Suiris. The Muhammadan branch in Sultânpur trace their origin to one Pâran Mal, who is said to have been converted to Islâm in the time of Tamerlane, or more probably of one of his successors.

3. It is reported that the Sakarwârs give and take brides to and from the Bhadauriya, Dhâkra, Gablot, Kachhwâha, Panwâr, and Parihâr septs.

¹ Buchanan, Eastern India, II, 453.

² Oldham, Memo., I, 61.

³ Settlement Report, 30, 57.

Distribution of the Sakarwār Rājputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Ulalandshahr	31	17	48
Mathura	228	31	269
Agra	10,001	13	10,014
Farrukhābād	276	...	276
Mainpuri	381	3	387
Etāwah	310	...	310
Etah	405	3	408
Budāun	319	...	319
Morādābād	506	...	506
Shāhjahānpur	35	...	35
Cawnpur	46	10	56
Fatehpur	112	...	112
Bānda	56	...	56
Allahābād	57	1	58
Jhānsi	21	...	21
Jālaun	112	3	115
Benares	485	13	498
Mirzapur	5	...	5
Jaunpur	121	116	237
Ghāziṣpur	5,616	6,101	11,717
Ballia	1,776	31	1,807
Gorakhpur	2,702	111	2,813
Basti	585	103	688
Azamgarh	2,179	281	2,463
Lucknow	90	9	99
Undo	222	...	222
Rāo Bareli	411	...	411

Distribution of the Sakarwâr Râjputs according to the Census of 1891—concluded.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Sitapur	341	11	352
Hardoi	2,418	...	2,418
Kheri	128	11	139
Faizâbâd	618	1,473	2,091
Bahrâich	16	...	16
Sultânpur	897	1,104	2,001
Partûbgarh	231	23	257
Bârabanki	18	...	18
TOTAL	31,897	9,594	41,491

Saknyâni, Shaknyâni.—A class of Hill Brâhman. Common report makes them the progenitors of both Sarolas and Gangâris, and the name is said to be derived from the great Sâka race. Others connect the name with a colony of ascetics who lived near Tapuban and Rikhikes; others again assign the name to a great grove of salix trees, whose bluish flowers are used in worship, and which gave the name of Sakinyâni to the parent village and Saknyâni to the people. Those who remained on the banks of the Ganges became known as Gangâris. They intermarry with Ghildyâls, Unyâls, Ingwâls, Dâdnâs, and Naithâna and Bughâna Brâhman.¹

Sanâdh—A tribe of Brâhman most numerous in the Central and Lower Ganges-Jumna Duâb and Rohilkhand. Sir H. M. Elliot lays down the boundaries of the Sanâdh country as follows:—"They touch the Kanaujiyas on the North-West, extending over Central Rohilkhand, and part of the Upper and Central Duâb, from Pilibhit to Gwâlior. The boundary line runs from the north-west angle of Rampur, through Richa, Jahânâbâd, Nawâlganj, Barilly, Paridpur, to the Râmganga; thence through Salimpur and the borders of Mehâbâd; thence down the Ganges to the borders of

¹ Athlone, Himalayan Gazetteer, III, 271.

² Supplemental Glossary, B. V. Asan, 1904.

Kanauj; thence up the Kāhnadi to the western border of Alipur, Patto, through Bhongānw, Sij, Bibāman, and down the Jumna to the junction of the Chambal. Instances, of course, occur of occupation by either party on the other line, but they are very rare. On the North-West the Sanādh are met by the Gaur Brāhmins, whose boundary line is also sufficiently definite to admit of description. It runs through the Rāmpur territory as far as the Rāmginga, thence through Saranli, Seondara, Naranli, Balyoi, Rājputra, Dabhai, and the western border of Koil, Chandansi, Noh-Jhul, and Kosi."

2. There is much doubt as to the origin of the name. According to one authority¹ it is derived from sana, "austerity," and adhyā, "wealth," a conjunction which applied to a Brāhmin would imply "one possessed of the wealth of religious austerities." According to others, sana-adhyā means "absorbed in asceticism." Mr. Nesfield, without much apparent reason, would connect the name with that of the criminal Baudelkhandi tribe known as Sanaurhiya. They claim to be a sub-branch of the Kanaujiya, and the tribal legend as given by themselves tells how Rāma, on his return from Lanka, assembled a large number of Brāhmins at the great Rudāyan tank, near Shahpur Tahsil, in Pargana Azamgarh of the Etah District, to perform a sanāḥa yaga, or sacrifice. At the conclusion of the ceremony, he distributed among them grants of land and money, and hence the name Sanadh, either from the ceremony in which they participated, or from the Sanskrit root sana, "to obtain as a gratuity." There is a curious resemblance between this story and the account given of themselves by the Tagas of Meerut and the Nāgars of Bulandshahr. Most of the Sanādh of Etah represent themselves as the descendants of the Brāhmins of Rāma's days, a few belonging to the Dandotiya al say that they came from the Gwālor territory, where the Emperor Akbar had given them a group of eighty-four villages (chaurāsi) on the banks of the Chambal. These villages, known as the Dandotgar Chaurāsi, are said to be in the possession of the Sanādh to the present day. The Bhateli Brāhmins of Etah are an offshoot of the Sanādh. In Etāwah Sanādh Brāhmins of the Singhia and Mehta gotras, the former with the title Chāubē, are found in Pargana Auraiya. They trace Pandits in his Court. To the four sons of the chief Pandit, known as Misraji, he gave four villages for their support, viz., Sarāha, Rahariya, Tarapur, and Bhatta. These originated four sections, the Misras of Sarāha, Rahariya, and Tarapur, and the Pathaks of Bhatta. These four, being descended from the same ancestor, cannot intermarry. The second Pandit was named Sankhadhāra. He had also four sons, and to them the Rāja gave four villages. Anni, Dhamai, Reunai, and Parsara. Hence arose four sections, the members of which being of the same stock cannot intermarry. Anni kē Sankhdhār, Dhamai kē Sankhdhār, Reunai kē Sankhdhār, and Parsara kē Sankhdhār. The village of Anni is close to Budāun, and is still in the possession of these Brāhmins. The descendants of the third Pandit are called after him Parāsan, and from the villages held by his descendants spring four sections, viz., Para, Chandawali, Pipara, and Ubra. The section taking its name from Ubra is known as Trigorāyat, because their ancestor had mastered the three Vedas. The others are known as Parāsari. These four, being of the same stock, cannot intermarry. The fourth Pandit had only two sons to whom the Rāja gave two villages. Daangarpur and Katariya. These are known as the Misras of these two places. The fourteen families thus enumerated constitute the "three and-a-half houses."

6 There is also some connection between the Sanādh and the Kataha or Mahābrāhman. The story runs that this same Rāja Adisur was once going on a pilgrimage, when he became seriously ill. The Rāja of Nāgadesa, where he was at the time, sent him a skilful physician, who restored Adisur to health. His patient was so pleased that he gave him the name of Kashtaha, or "remover of trouble," of which Kataha is without much probability said to be a corruption. It is alleged that Rāja Adisur compelled the "three and a half houses" to intermarry with these Katahas, an assertion which clearly marks some fall in status of which the real explanation has been forgotten.

7 The domestic rites of the Sanādh are of the normal type. At marriage they have a ceremony which seems to be peculiar to them called ustasiti. The bridegroom is made to sit behind the bride, and behind him the eldest man of the family and the other relations sit in a line. The barber's wife moves a milk churner (rai) and a bundle of thread over the heads of all the men and women present. Then one or more vessels of sweetmeats are shown to the bride and she is asked if they are full or empty. If she says that they are full, it is a good omen ; if she says that they are empty, the marriage will not be prosperous. After this potter's wheel is worshipped. Some make an image of it on the wall of the house, others go to the potter's house and worship his wheel there.

8. The Sanādh Brāhmins have, on the whole, a doubtful reputation, and are not much respected among the other Brāhmanical tribes. Many, in addition to some priestly functions, hold land and cultivate, but they will not hold the plough themselves.

9. The Sanaurhiya, a thieving tribe of Bundelkhand, claim kindred with the Sanādh Brāhmins. According to one story they were excommunicated, because they attended the rite (jag) held by Rāmchandra when he was defiled by the blood of the Brāhman Ravana. Others say that they were degraded, because they did not attend the sacrifice performed by Brahma at Brāhmavartta or Bithūr.

Distribution of Sanādh Brāhmins according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Numbers.	DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Dehra Dūn . . .	148	Budāna . . .	41,817
Sahāranpur . . .	222	Morādābād . . .	8,023
Muzaffarnagar . . .	329	Sbāhjabāpur . . .	14,840
Meerut . . .	1,051	Pilibhit . . .	10,027
Dolandshahr . . .	8,477	Cawnpur . . .	759
Aligarh . . .	76,203	Fatehpur . . .	381
Methura . . .	63,345	Bānda . . .	1,211
Agra . . .	106,381	Hamirpur . . .	4,371
Farrukhābād . . .	6,087	Allahābād . . .	1,070
Mathura . . .	42,691	Jhānsi . . .	8,606
Etāwah . . .	36,659	Jālaun . . .	15,153
Etah . . .	41,079	Lalitpur . . .	3,498
Unāully . . .	31,630	Benares . . .	463
Bijnor . . .	393	Mirzapur . . .	701

Distribution of Sanādh Brāhmins according to the Census of 1891—continued

DISTRICTS	Numbers	DISTRICTS	Numbers
Jaunpur .	411	Sitapur .	1 036
Ghazipur	119	Hardoi .	904
Lallia .	69	Kheri .	1 811
Gorakhpur	2 110	Faizābād .	610
Basti .	1 479	Gonda . .	2 320
Azamgarh .	471	Balrāich	1 306
Kumaun	9	Baltānpur .	1 532
Tarāi	631	Partābgarh .	309
Lucknow .	618	Bārahanki .	2 867
Unāo .	113
Raibareilly	814	TOTAL	518 201

Sanaurhiya, Sanorhiya—A so-called caste of criminals in Bundelkhand. They seem to have escaped separate enumeration at the last Census by recording themselves as a tribe of Brāhmins, and, in fact, they claim to be akin to the Sanādh Brāhmins of the Ganges Jumna Duab¹. Attention was first distinctly called to their criminal propensities in 1851, when they were called Uthāgiras or Sanorhiyas, and were estimated to number 4,000 in Tehri State, 800 in Bānpur, and 300 in Datija. The Rājas of Tehri and Bānpur gave them protection receiving presents in return, and frankly admitted this when addressed by the Political Agent.

2 The Sanaurhiyas are not a caste but a confraternity recruited by the initiation of promising boys from all castes except sweepers and Chamars. A census taken of them in 1882 showed that they then included Brāhmins, Lochans, Telis, Thākurs, Kanjars, Alārs, Dhūmars, Sunars, Kurmis, Lodhas, Nāis and Dhobis. One account of their origin is that they are Sanādh Brāhmins who were excommunicated, because they attended the feast given by Rām Chandra when he was defiled with the blood of Ravana. Another story is that they were degraded for not attending the sacrifice performed by Brâhma at Brahmavartta or Bithûr. A third account is that they came from Delhi about two centuries ago. It is quite obvious that they have no claim to rank as Brâhmanas. They possess a slang vocabulary of their own, confine themselves to thefts by day, and are said entirely to abstain from nocturnal theft, house-breaking, and crimes of violence: so much so that members of the confraternity offending in this way are excommunicated. They never steal near home and begin their depredations at least a hundred miles away. But they visit all parts of India, including Calcutta, Bombay, and Madras. They assume the disguise of respectable merchants and travellers, and their favourite method of shop-lifting is by the agency of a boy, whilst one or two of the gang as customers engage the shop-keeper in conversation and lead him to display his goods. A gang will be absent on an expedition sometimes for a year at a time. The fascination of their profession is so great that they say, "Once n Sanaurhiya, always n Sannurhiya." In various distant cities one or more Sanaurhiyas used to reside, apparently carrying on an honest business, but really acting as receivers of stolen goods. The Criminal Tribes Act was extended to them in 1874, and Mr. Robert's note contains full details of the supervision exercised over them since that time. The result, as in so many cases, has been far from satisfactory.

¹ See Mr. D. T. Robert's note in connection with the Police Commission of 1890.

Sanjogi—(Sanskrit samyogi, "joined").—Classed at the last Census as an order of Hindu ascetics. The word, or its equivalent Grihasti, "householder," appears to be equally applied to those who have so far abandoned the practices of the ascetic orders as to marry and lead a family life.

Distribution of the Sanjogis according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Numbers.	DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Bulandshahr	31	Fatehpur	1
Agra	758	Bânda	22
Etah	6	Hamirpur	66
Budâun	12	Allahâbâd	1
Cawnpur	4	Jhânsi	142

Distribution of the Sannyāsīs according to the Census of 1891—concluded

DISTRICTS	Numbers	DISTRICTS	Numbers
Jālaun . . .	178	Pathi . . .	741
Lalitpur . .	138	Hardoi . . .	67
Ghāzipur . . .	539	Gonda . . .	36
Ballia . . .	832
Gorakhpur . .	926	TOTAL . .	4,538

Sannyāsi—(Sanskrit sannyāsi, “abandonment of the world,”)—a term which is often used in very vague and uncertain senses—It properly means the ascetic stage of life through which every Brāhman should pass. But the term is specially applied to the followers of the famous reformer Shankar Achārya. “The Saivas,” writes Mr MacLagan,¹ “have generally been defenders of the faith against innovation. The final struggles against Buddhism in the south and centre of the peninsula gave rise to one sect of Saivas, known henceforth as Sannyāsis, and the contest against the innovating Bhagats of Northern India in the fifteenth century gave rise to another sect now known as the Jogis.” Some account from local sources of Shankar Achārya and his disciples has been already given under the head of the Gurus. Mr MacLagan’s account from the Panjab tradition is somewhat different and may be given here. “Shankar Achārya, the well-known Sanskrit commentator, a very vigorous defender of orthodoxy, is supposed to have lived in the ninth or tenth, or, according to Professor Monier Williams, in the eighth century, and to have helped in the final extinction of Buddhism in India. Shankar Achārya is said to have had four pupils, from whom are derived the ten classes of Sannyāsis,—from Padman Achārya, the Tiratha and Āsrama classes, from Sarūpa Achārya, the Bana and Arana, from Tarnaka or Tank Achārya, the Giri, Sagara, and Parvata, and from Prithodar or Prithivi Achārya, the Puri, Bharthi, and Saraswati. According to others the order is divided into four Mathas,—the Joshi Math containing the Giri, Puri, and Bhārthi, the Sangri Math containing the Bana, Arana, and Tiratha, the Nararā-gini Math containing the Parvata and Asrama; the Brahmachāri Math containing the Sāraswati and Dandi. The fact that there are ten groups of Sannyāsis is well known, but different versions are given of the names. Of eight lists which I have before me from different parts of the Province the Giri, Puri, Arana, and Bhārthi appear in all, but one or other of the following names, Astāwar, Jati, Bodla, Dandi, Anandi, Datta, Achārya, Kar, Nirambhé, or Pari is often substituted for one or other of the remaining six class-names. According to some account only eight of the classes are really Sannyāsi, the Bhārthi being Jogis, and the Dandi, Vaisnavas. Three classes only—the Nirambh, Asrama, and Sāraswati—are allowed to wear or use arms. Five of the sub-divisions are said to be recruited from Brāhmins alone, viz., the Sāraswati, Achārya, Arana, Bana, and Ananda; the other five being open to the public.

¹ Panjab Census Report III 57

2. "A man of any caste may become a Sannyāsi, but in practice the order is made up of Brāhmins and Khatris mainly; and, according to some, the true Sannyāsi will partake of food only in the house of a Brāhmin and a Katri. The members of the sect are supposed to be strict celibates, but of late not a few of them have taken to marriage, and still continue to beg though married. They are, as a rule, of a higher class than the Jogis, and their morality is of a higher order, but scandals about their enticing away the wives of rich Hindus are said to be not infrequent, though generally hushed up. The whole order is in theory devoted to contemplation and abstracted from the cares of this world, and a large number of Sannyāsis are actually religious mendicants without wives and without money, who wear ochre-coloured clothes and distribute quack medicines, who refuse to touch a coin or to take in alms more food than will suffice for the day; but there are also many who work in business and are men of great wealth.

3. "In fact the order is sometimes divided into three groups called after the three philosophical qualities (gūṇa): the Rajoguni, who are the principals of religious houses (akhāra) and live in the world; the Tamoguni, who are ascetics who live on charity, begging for the wants of the day; and the Satoguni, who do not even beg but trust to support from Heaven and their neighbour.

4. "The Sannyāsis are professedly followers of the Vedānta system of philosophy which was promulgated by their leader Shankar Achārya, and the books based in that philosophy are held specially sacred by them. They are, as has already been noticed, a sect not indigenous in the Panjâb, and their chief places of pilgrimage, —Beaures, Amarnâth, Narsinhnâth, etc.—are outside the Province. They are especially remarkable for some customs which are foreign to the Hindus of this and most parts of India. In the first place, they do not generally wear the scalp-lock (choti), but either wear all their hair or shave it all. Further, the true Sannyâsi does not, it is said, wear the sacred thread (janu). And, again, their usual custom is not to burn their dead, but to bury them or throw them into rivers. When buried, the dead are placed in a sitting posture facing East or North-East, and the hands and arms are rested on crutch."

5. In these Provinces the rite of initiation takes, according to one account, three days. On the first day, his body is purified with milk, ghî, cow-dung, cow-urine, and curds, and all his hair, except the scalp lock is shaved off. On the third day, the hîma and śrâd̐l̐l̐ha are performed and his scalp-lock and Brahmanical cord are removed. Then the mantras of the order are recited into his ear by the Guru, and he receives a dand or bamboo stick with a piece of red cloth tied to one end of it. Then he is known as Dandi. Only Brâhmans can become proper Sannyâsis. There is no condition of age. Most become members of the order on account of trouble, as the verse runs—Narî mātî, ghar sampatti nâsi, Mûnî murâi, bhâṣē Sannyâsi. "When a man's wife dies and he loses his home and property, he shaves his head and becomes a Sannyâsi."

6. The sectarian mark is the tripund three horizontal lines drawn on the forehead. Their dress is the lopin or small loin cloth with a broader piece of cloth rolled round the hips. They carry a water pot known as kamandal and a rosary of the rudrâkṣa berry. They get their food either at alms-houses (lāketra) or from charitable Hindus. When they ask for alms they say Nârâjan, "Great God." The respectable title for them is Swami, "Lord." The proper Sannyâsi ought to eat a meal of only milk, fruits or vegetables once a day, and they are particular in abstaining from meat and other substances, such as garbe (lahsan), which are supposed to excite passion. They do not cook for themselves. They prefer to eat food cooked by a Brahman or Kshatriya, but if such a person is not present, they can eat from the hand of a Vaiśya or Sûdra. Their cooking vessels are of the usual Hindu pattern, and they are careful not to use the vessels belonging to a member of another religion. They do not enter Jaina temples, but visit all the ordinary Hindu shrines. But they practise no form of idol worship, as they themselves have attained the rank of deities. They salute each other in the words Namo Nārāyaṇa. They salute their religious guides and other eminent Sannyāsis by falling before them. They chiefly worship Nārāyaṇa, but until they obtain the rank of complete saintship, they also revere Ganesa, Rudra, Bhāgawati, and Sūraj Nārāyaṇ, the Sun godling.

7. Nizām-ud-dīn Ahmad in the Tabakāt-i-Akbari describes a terrible fight between a body of Jogis and Sannyāsis at Thānesar in the presence of the Emperor Akbar, when the Jogis were defeated.¹ General Goddard, in his march through Bundelkhand, was attacked by a body of two thousand Sannyāsis called Saiva Nāgas.²

Distribution of the Sannyāsis according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Numbers.	DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Dehra Dūn . . .	37	Pilibhit . . .	31
Sahārsapur . . .	137	Cawnpur . . .	6
Muzaffarnagar . . .	101	Fatehpur . . .	5
Meerut . . .	43	Bānda . . .	23
Bulandshahr . . .	119	Hamirpur . . .	40
Agra . . .	36	Allahābād . . .	19
Farrukhābād . . .	11	Jhānsi . . .	142
Mainpuri . . .	3	Jālaun . . .	17
Etāwah . . .	7	Lalitpur . . .	84
Etah . . .	25	Ghāziपुर . . .	113
Bareilly . . .	82	Baltia . . .	551
Bijnor . . .	30	Gorakhpur . . .	1,069
Budāun . . .	14	Basti . . .	3
Morādābād . . .	38	Garhwāl . . .	1,077
Shāhjahanpur . . .	19	Tarāi . . .	67

¹ Dowson's Elliot, History, V, 313.

² Pennant, Hindustān, II, 102.

Distribution of the Sannyāsīs according to the Census of 1891—concluded.

DISTRICTS		Numbers	DISTRICTS		Numbers.
Lucknow . . .		17	Faizābād . . .		218
Unāo . . .		1	Gonda . . .		13
Rāō Bareilly . . .		37	Bhāraich . . .		1
Sitapur . . .		10
Hardoi . . .		58	TOTAL . . .		4,406
Males			2,668
Females			1,738

Sānsiya.¹—A vagrant thieving tribe who were at the time of the last Census confined to the Western Districts of the Province. Of their name no satisfactory account has been given. Some derive it from the Sanskrit śrāśa, "breathing," or śrasa, "separated," others with śrag īnka, "one who has to do with dogs," or śvapāka, "dog-cooking," a person of a degraded and outcaste tribe, who, by the older law, was required to live outside towns, to eat his food in broken vessels, to wear the clothes of the dead, and to be excluded from all intercourse with other people, he could possess no other property than asses and dogs, and his office was to act as public executioner and to carry out the bodies of such as die without kinsred. It is true that these are now a-days the functions of the Dom, but the mode of life of the Sānsiya is sufficiently degraded to make it perhaps possible that he may have inherited the name. The Sānsiya is no doubt the near kinsman of the other degraded wandering races who occupy the same part of the country, such as the Kanjar, Beriya, Habūia, and Bhātu. Their tribal legends, so far as they have been recorded, do not throw much light on their history of origin. Some of them allege that they are a sub-caste of Nats, but the Nats do not acknowledge kinship with them. Another of their legends appears in various forms. By one account when the Agnikula or fire-born races were created, the Chauhān Rājputs created the Sānsiyas to act as their bards and sing their praises. Their first ancestor was, it is said, one Sâns Mal or Sahasman, who has given his name to the tribe. He is said to have had three sons: One was born early in the morning when these people take their morning draught of butter milk (chhânchh) and hence sprang the Chhânchhdih section. The second was born at midnight, which is said in their patois to be called karkhand, and hence the section known as Karkhand. The youngest was born at noon, and as this is the time they milk their buffaloes, he was called Bhains. Bhains, it may be noted, is a section of both the Beriyyas and Kanjars, which tends to establish the connection between the tribes, and Kâra also means a "young buffalo." So the designation of these sections may be perhaps either totemistic or occupational. Another story makes out their ancestor to have been Sâns or Sahâns Sinh, a Râthaur Râjput. His house once fell down in the rainy season, and he could not afford to rebuild it; so he and his descendants took to living in wigwams. He is said to have had three sons—Chandu Sinh, Gaddu Sinh, and Beri Sinh,—all their descendants took to a jungle life and lived by collecting khaskhas grass and catching vermin. The women of Beri Sinh's family took to prostitution, and they are the present Beriyyas; those of Chandu Sinh were called Chandnwâla; and those of Gaddu or Giddu Sinh, the present Gidiyas. These legends are of little value except to prove the identity of a number of castes of the same social standing and occupation, who are known in the Central Dnâb as Beriyyas, in the Upper Dnâb as Gidiya, Hâbnra or Bhâta; in Mathnra and Bhartpur as Radhiya or Radhua Kanjars; and in Rajputâna as Ghaikhulo or "those who live with their doors open." According to another legend there were two brothers—Sâns Mal and Malanâr—from the former are descended the Sânsiyas and Kanjars; from the latter the Beriyyas or Kolhâtis and the Doms and Mângs.¹

¹ Principally based on an excellent report by Mr F W Court District Superintendent Police Aligarh notes collected at Mirzapur and by the Deputy Inspector of Schools, Bijnor

2. As we have seen, the more degraded members of the tribe recognise three exogamous sections: Chhânchhdih, Karkhand, and Bhains. Those who are rather more advanced and lay stress on their alleged Râjput descent profess to have sections taken from the names of well-known Râjput clans, such as Chauhân, Khâgi, Pundîr, Gahlot, and Samhâr. There is again another endogamous division of them into kalka or those of pure Sansi blood and Malla, whose mothers were Sansiya women and their fathers men of other castes. That the tribe is much mixed is quite certain. It is well known that they habitually kidnapped girls of other castes. Of the seven gangs in the Aligarh District it was recently ascertained that the women leaders of four were women of other tribes, who had been either kidnapped or introduced into the tribe. Even now it is admitted that they will take into the tribe men of almost any tribe except the lowest menials. The only ceremony is that the convert is made to eat and drink with members of the tribe.

¹ Guntherpe, Notes on Criminal Tribes, 40.

3 Another very curious fact about them is that they act as a sort of Bhats or bard and genealogists to some tribes of Jats and to some Chauhan Rājputs.

The Sansi as bards
Many of the Sansiyas of these Provinces refer their origin to Bharatpur, where they allege they were bards to the original ruling family. So in the Panjab we find that in Hoshiarpur¹ they receive an allowance from the Jats known as birt. "Towards them they hold the same position as that of Mirasis or Doms among other tribes. Each Jat family has its Sansi, and among the Jats of the Malwa and Manjha the Sansi is supposed to be a better authority on genealogy than the Mirasi, for thus he takes a fee at marriages. If the fee is not paid, he retabates effectually by damaging crops or burning ricks." This fact is corroborated by Mr Ibbetson² in relation with various other Jat and Rājput tribes of the Panjab. How this connection can have arisen it is impossible to say, but the case of the Pataris, the degraded priests of the Manjhis, is a case in point, and the relation between these tribes furnishes a possible analogy which may account for the creation of the degraded Brāhman tribes, like the Mahābrāhman and Dalaut.

4 In addition to the prohibition of marriage within the section there is the additional prohibition against marrying in the families of first-consins, until at least three generations have passed since the last connection by marriage. They generally marry in the same neighbourhood, but the feeling seems to be in favour of selecting a bride from another camp, which is perhaps one of the most primitive forms of exogamy.¹ We have also probably a survival of the matriarchate in the rule by which the match is arranged by the phūpha or father's sister's husband of the bride or bridegroom. Besides this the marriage and funeral ceremonies are performed by the son-in-law (dhiyāna) or by a connection through a female (mān). As among all nomadic tribes, owing to the comparative weakness of female infants, girls are in a deficiency. At the last Census there were only 1,955 women to 2,332 men; hence brides are in demand, and a heavy bride-price is charged for a suitable girl. In Aligarh it is reported that a bride sometimes costs as much as four or five hundred rupees, all of which is spent in drinking and debauchery during the ceremony. The marriage ceremony is analogous to that of the Kanjars. The bridegroom, after the match is arranged, arrives with a body of his friends, and there is a pretence of seizing the bride by force if she be not peaceably surrendered. He then seizes her in the presence of the assembled elders, drags her seven times round the marriage shed, and marks her forehead with red lead, and this makes them man and wife. Widow marriage does not need even this amount of ceremonial. The man is generally expected to repay to the relations of the first husband what they have spent on the first marriage; in the case of the levirate this compensation is, of course, not paid.

¹ Settlement Report 106

² Panjab Ethnograph j para 577

5. The real vagrant Sânsiyas often merely expose their dead in the jungle. In Aligarh it is said that the Death ceremonies. Chanduwāla Sânsiyas cremate the corpse; with the others burial is the rule. Where they bury their dead they seem to have come under the influence of the example of their Muhammadan neighbours. Some members of the tribe, who were deported to Mirzapur after the proclamation, professed to adopt the following rules:—A pice is put in the mouth of the corpse immediately after death as a viaticum, when it is washed and wrapped in a piece of new cloth, which should be five yards long, and carried by four men to the burial ground on a cot. The corpse is buried with the head to the West and the feet to the East. After bathing the mourners return home. The chief mourner remains apart for four days and cooks for himself. At every meal he lays some food outside his hut for the spirit of the deceased. On the fourth day the brethren are fed on rice, pulse, sugar, and ghī, and on the twentieth and fortieth day, the four men who carried the corpse to the grave are fed in the same way

¹ Westermarck, History of Human Marriage, 320, sqq.

6 The religion of the Sansiyas is of a very elementary type

Religion

They have a vague idea of a great God, whom they call Bhagwan, or Parameswar, or Narayan, but of his character and function they can give no satisfactory account. Some of them worship Devi or Kali in the same vague way whenever they are sick or in trouble. They are, like all the allied races, continually in fear of the malignant ghosts of the dead, who, if not duly propitiated, turn into Bhūts or evil spirits and injure the survivors. They have nothing in the way of a śrīdhā, and one way of propitiating the Purkha log or "fainted dead" is by feeding some of the unmarried girls of the tribe in their honour. They also have a vague belief in a godling known as Mijan, who may be Ghazi Mijan or the saint of Amroha and Jalehar. He is, they say, the king of the serpents, and when they do honour to him thus, and their families are safe from snake bite. They believe, of course, in the demoniacal theory of disease, and when they fall sick call in a Syina or Ojha to mark down the ghost, which is causing the mischief, and suggest the appropriate sacrifice which should be made to him.

7 They do not pay much regard to an oath on the Ganges or on the heads of their sons or daughters.

Oaths and ordeals

They have three bodiless forms of oath. First, they kill a cock and pouring its blood on the ground swear over it, secondly, they throw some salt into a cup of spirits, and, throwing it on the ground, swear over it, thirdly they crush a leaf of the pīpal tree in their hands and swear. When a woman is suspected of infidelity and denies the charge, she is made to undergo the following ordeal. Five leaves of the pīpal tree are placed on the palm of her hand, one over the other. She has then to take in her hand a red hot gadaila or "spindle," which is the national implement of the tribe, and used by them in digging out vermin, etc. With this she has to walk five steps, and if her hand shows no sign of burning she is pronounced to be innocent. Similarly of the Kolhatas of the Dakhlun, Major Gunthorp writes — The ordeals men and women of this race have to pass through to prove their innocence, if they deny an accusation, are curious. For a woman seven leaves of the pīpal tree are placed, one over the other, in the open palms of both hands. A wet thread is wound seven times round both hands and leaves. An axe made red hot is then placed on the leaves, and she bears it seven paces forwards and throws it into a bundle of thorns. Should the metal have penetrated the leaves and burnt her hands, she is guilty; but if not, she is considered innocent.”¹

8. The organization of these separate gangs, to which reference has already been made, as practising a sort of Gang system. rule of exogamy among themselves, is curious, and may be illustrated by the condition of things which until recently prevailed in the Aligarh District. The Sânsiyas there used to be divided into seven gangs (gol), of which the leaders of five, viz., those led by Roshaniya, Harro, Pâncho, Giyâso, and Kallu, were women; and two were led by men, Hariya and Lachiya. The reason that women so often command Sânsiya gangs is because so many of the males are habitually in jail. Of these the gangs of Roshaniya, Harro, Pâncho, Giyâso, and Hariya used to be all one gang, which was known in the Mathura District as the gang of Sewa. His brother Mathura separated from him and formed a separate gang. On Sewa's death his gang broke up into two parts—one called after Teja, nephew of Sewa, and the other after Hulâsi, son of Sewa. When Hulâsi was imprisoned, the gang was called after his wife Bela; and when Teja was also sent to jail, his gang was named after Roshaniya, wife of Belha, son of Sewa; and when Mathura also got into trouble, his wife Pâncho took command of his gang. When the two sons of Harro, widow of Hulâsi, grew up, she started a separate gang of her own, and into this gang was absorbed the gang of Bela. Again, when Teja was released from jail, he formed a separate gang, which was known as that of his wife Giyâso. The gang known as that of Kallu sprang from a Nat woman who formed an amour with a Jât, and had a large family who followed the gypsy life of their mother and finally intermarried with Sânsiyas and became recognised members of the tribe. This gang is still known as Bânswâli, because its foundress used to dance on a bamboo (bâns). Finally, the gang known as Lachiya's, who were really Beriyyas from Nohkhera in the Etah District, came to Aligarh in recent years and became amalgamated with the regular Sânsiya gangs. All these facts are very significant in considering the question of the origin of the present Hindus. If, as we have good reason to suspect, the same process of amalgamation of castes owing to sexual intrigue and the formation of caves of Adullam, like these existing vagrant tribes, has been going on for ages, the anthropometrical evidence in favour of the practical unity of the existing races ceases to be surprising.

9 That the Sânsiyas are one of the most audacious criminal tribes in the Province is now admitted and formed the justification for the recent stringent proceedings which have been taken against them. In the year 1890, they were all simultaneously arrested, the younger members were removed to a reformatory, and the elders distributed throughout the Province in the hope that they would adopt an honest course of livelihood, an expectation which has certainly not been realised. In the Upper Dnab careful enquiry conclusively proved that they had no other means of livelihood except dakâiti, road robbery, thefts from vehicles, threshing floors and persons sleeping in the fields. In the course of their operations, unlike the Habûra or Beriya, they were always ready to commit violence, and have been known to cause serious bodily injury and even death with the heavy bludgeons, which in recent years they had substituted for short clubs which they carried when they first came in contact with our Police, and which soon became an inconvenient means of identifying them and were consequently abandoned. When bent on highway robbery, their usual modus operandi was to hide by the side of the road and suddenly attack passengers or the drivers of vehicles with showers of stones. If this failed to compel them to abandon their property, they fell on them with their bludgeons. Another device was to disguise themselves as constables, and in the course of a mock search to rob travellers. They do not usually take the plundered property to their camp for a considerable time, but bury it at a distance. They use the railway freely in going to and returning from the scene of crime. On their journey they do not stay at sarais or other recognised halting-places, but encamp outside a village or town, and, being well dressed, pretend to be Banjiras or merchants. Their operations extend to a very considerable distance, and some few years ago a series of dakaities in the Panjab was traced to one of the Aligarh gangs.

10 They dispose of stolen property through Kalwars and Snars, they will not take it with them to the shop, the intending purchaser has to accompany them to the jungle, and, strange to say, the Sânsiya is usually found very honest in such transactions. If they take stolen property into their camp, the jewelry is deposited in the hollow legs of their beds, and the clothes hidden as stuffing of quilts, etc. The women sometimes appropriate some of the stolen jewelry for their own use, and when a search is made hide it in a way which cannot be described. Other jewelry is generally at once broken up. On arrest both men and women habitually give false names in order to conceal their identity, and hence the men greatly dread the punishment of flogging, as it marks them; for this reason they generally behave themselves well in jail so as to avoid corporal punishment. They are very averse to incriminating each other; if any of them turn approver, he is tried by the tribal council. The usual penalty is a fine of one hundred rupees for every person he has incriminated, and if he cannot pay the fine they will realize it by seizing his property or even a marriageable daughter. They never dare in such cases to complain to a Magistrate. In fact all their disputes are settled by the council, and they are never seen in Court. When a member of a gang is arrested, his companions will provide for his wife and family, and when any stolen property has been acquired, the wife of a man arrested gets her husband's share.

11. Owing to the constant absences of the men on thieving excursions and in jail, the women have gained a position of unusual influence in the tribe.

The position of the women. Many of them, as we have seen, become leaders of gangs. They are, as a rule, affectionate, faithful wives, and the men are very much influenced by their advice. When a party of Police approaches a camp, the women all commence to call out at once bâitari ! bâitari ! "To your tents!" which is the signal for the men to escape. While search is being made, the women will resist to the utmost of their power, and they are in the habit of throwing all sorts of filth over the officers engaged, hence all Police dread the duty of searching a Sânsiya camp. Another plan is to take their babies in their arms and fling them round their heads in the hope that the search will be discontinued to save the lives of the children. They have a thieves' argot very like that of the Hilâras. Of the corresponding dialect in the Panjâb it has been shown by Dr. Leitner¹ that it is not a real patois, but merely a perversion of Panjâbî according to a regular system. This is also certainly the case with the argot of these Provincials.

¹ Analysis of Akal Gakia's Pathology, 17.

12. There seems little doubt that the real vagrant Sânsiya will eat all kinds of meat, vermin and the leavings of almost any tribe except perhaps sweepers.

Social Habits.

In Aligarh it is reported that they will eat with sweepers when engaged with them in the commission of crime. Those who are beginning to settle down claim, however, a much greater degree of purity and pretend not to eat lachehi except from high castes like Brâhmans, Râjputs and Banyas. The vagrant branch of the tribe live under portable reed mats (sirki). The men, as a rule, sleep till 9 A. M., sleep again during the day, eat again at 5, P. M. and then spend the night on the prowl. The women help by going about begging and pretending to sell roots and other jangle medicine; they thus obtain entrance into respectable houses and obtain information which is of use to their male relations. They are very fond of dogs and keep a number of them to guard the camp. The camp is usually pitched on one of the high sandy ridges which are such a prominent feature in the landscape of the Upper Duâb. They are no doubt guided in this by sanitary considerations and the sand is a convenient hiding place for property and the meat and hides of stolen animals. They themselves keep numerous bullocks and donkeys which they use for the carriage of their huts and goods, as well as cows and goats for milk; these they habitually let loose in the fields adjoining their camp. Hence the Sânsiya is not by any means a favourite visitor to a respectable village, and they could not wander about with impunity, as they were in the habit of doing, were it not that they were protected by landowners and merchants who shared in their plunder. Every true Sânsiya woman must have her ears bored, and some time ago this fact was used in Court to prove the identity of a kidnapped girl.¹

Distribution of the Sânsiyas according to the Census of 1891.²

DISTRICTS	Hindus	Muham- madans	TOTAL.
Sahâranpur	3,013	..	3,013
Muzaffarpagar	71	3	74

¹ Reports Nuzmat Adilat, Mussammat Darbo, 10th April 1892

² This, of course, does not represent the present distribution of the caste since they were brought under the operations of the Criminal Tribes Act appears to have been to the early Hindus what the Ganges, which is named only twice in the Veda, became to their descendants¹

2 The Saraswatis, who in these Provinces are found principally in Agra, Mathura, Aligarh and Moradābad, are ranked among the Pancha Gauda and are the chief Brāhmans of the Panjab proper Dr Wilson² gives a list of their sections which are said to number no less than four hundred and sixty nine Mr Sherring,³ on information received from Benares divides them into four great classes, the Panjāti, who should by their name have five clans, the Ashthans, with eight clans, the Barahi, with twelve clans, and the Bawanjāti, with fifty-two clans It has, however, been found quite impossible to secure a complete and consistent account of these gotras As Pandit Radha Krishna, Dr Wilson's authority, admitted, such a list could only be prepared by the collation of the registers kept by the Pandas of Haridwar, Thanesar and Mathura, who keep genealogies of every family of note, any member of which has visited the holy place within the last three or four centuries

3 After the bride has come to live with her husband the first period of menstruation which occurs is a Domestic rites Birth season of rejoicing The women of the household and their friends assemble and sing songs of joy, sweetmeats are sent to the houses of friends On the fourth day when the bride is pure, she is bathed and dressed in her best clothes and jewelry, and in the evening her husband's sister leads her and her husband into a room where they are shut up together for the night When pregnancy occurs, at the end of the third or fifth month, the tribal deities are worshipped and an offering of sweetmeats made of rice and sugar is made to them, which after dedication are distributed to the friends of the family At the completion of the seventh or ninth month the same rite is performed on a more extensive scale When the child is born the nandi mukh śraddha for the propitiation of the sainted dead of the household is done A Chamardin is called in who cuts the umbilical cord, which she buries under the bed on which the mother lies The mother and child are bathed and the eldest woman of the family plasters with cow-dung the place where the cord has been buried and scatters some washed rice over it. Then the friends assemble and each of them gives a pice or two to the Chamârin as a reward for cutting the cord (nârkalâi). Songs are sung on this occasion. The baby does not suck its mother's breast for three days after birth; in the interval it drinks cow's or goat's milk. On the fourth day one of the women friends washes the mother's breast and receives a present. Then the child begins to suck. The Chamâr midwife remains in attendance until the fifth day and is then succeeded by the barber's wife, who remains till the twelfth day. On the evening of the sixth day the women assemble and make images of men and women on the wall, which are worshipped by the mother. On that day, for the first time, she eats grain. Up to that time she is given fruit and milk. On the eleventh day she is bathed and puts on fresh clothes and then worships the tribal deities. This rite is done in the family kitchen. In the evening she cooks kachchi and distributes it to the relatives and friends. After this, under the guidance of the family priest, she worships Ganesa and the Navagraha or nine planets. She sits down with her husband and their garments are knotted together as at the time of marriage. The baby is also dressed in fresh clothes. The mother again bathes on the twentieth, thirtieth and fortieth days, and on these occasions Ganesa is worshipped again with an offering of the halwa sweetmeat. This is distributed among the friends of the family. After the fortieth day the birth impurity is finally removed.

¹ Wilson Fishnu Puṇna Preface LXVII Maṃs Ancient Sanskrit Texts V 333

² Ind on Caste II 121 sqq

³ Hindu Castes I 67 sqq

4. At the sixth month comes the "grain feeding" (anna, prâsana). This is done on the eighth or ninth day of the waxing moon. The eldest member of the family takes the child in his or her lap and makes the baby sip a little food, usually rice milk (khir) off a rupee, which becomes the perquisite of the person who feeds him. After a year the rite of "the year knot" (bars gânth) is performed. Some halwa sweetmeat is cooked in a pot, in which is then placed some red powder (rori) and washed rice. A little halwa is offered to Ganesa and the rest is distributed to friends. This rite is done on every subsequent birth-day until the fifth. In the third or fifth year the ceremonial shaving (mûaran) is done in the usual way. The women take the child to a shrine, worship the razor of the barber and the mother takes the child in her lap and gets him shaved. The kanṭhēdan, kanbedha or ear piercing is often done at the same time. The child makes an offering to the family god, sweets are distributed and songs are sung.

5 The marriage rites are of the usual form. As a rule the bride does not live with her husband until after the gauna rite which takes place after one, three, five, or seven years from the marriage. During the first year certain gifts are sent to her from her house on festivals. The technical phrase is teohār bhēna. Thus at the Kajari feast in the month of Sāwan, her husband's friends send her a coloured sheet (chunlari), some henna (mehandi), fine clothes, cards and backgammon (ganjīsa, chausar), sweetmeats and cakes, cowries and dice, red powder and coloured rice. The bride's family also send some clothes for the mother of the bridegroom. Similar gifts are sent at the Holi.

6 The gauna (Sanskrit gamana "going") generally takes place in Aghar or Phālgun. The husband and his friends go to the bride's house and are entertained on choice food in a place (janwāsa) arranged for their reception. When the auspicious moment arrives, the bridegroom in his best clothes and with a sword in his hand, possibly a survival of marriage by capture, goes to the house of the bride. In the courtyard a platform is made on which a water jar (kalas) and images of Gauri and Ganesa are placed. The garments of the pair are knotted together and in the knot some betel nut, turmeric, and money are placed. The bridegroom sits in a square (chaunk) with the bride behind him and Gauri and Ganesa are worshipped. The bride's hand is placed on that of her husband and the Pandit repeats texts. Her mother comes up with a dish containing red powder (rori), sweetmeats, and money, and marking his forehead with the powder, puts the sweets and money in the corner of his sheet. The Pandit sprinkles water over the pair with a wisp of Kusa grass and the bride and bridegroom go to the janwāsa. The barber's wife carries a tray full of large laddu sweetmeats. The girl's father stands before the father of the boy and says — "I place my daughter under your protection. I am to blame in everything. My daughter will serve you." The girl's mother says the same to the boy's mother and both of them accompany this appeal with a money present. Then the bride returns to her father's house and weeps and embraces each of her female relations. She is given a box containing the sahāg or paraphernalia of a married woman: sweets, bangles, red lead, etc., which are taken with her by a woman. Half the dowry is paid in cash by the father of the bride who after blessing the pair dismisses them.

7. When the pair get home they are met at the door by a female servant with a pitcher of water into which they drop some copper coins. The bride's mother-in-law then looks at the bride's face and gives her a present, known as mukhā dikhāi. The other female friends do the same. Two or three days after the pair worship the Ganges and the family deities and the rite is concluded.

8. The corpses of the boys who have not been invested with the Brâhmanical cord and those of unmarried girls are wrapped in a clean sheet and thrown into a river. No rites are performed for the propitiation of their ghosts. The adult dead are cremated in the usual way. The younger brother usually fires the pyre of his elder brother; or this duty is performed by the father, which is the greatest misfortune which can befall him. The only difference between the customs of the Sâraswata and Sarwariya Brâhmins in this respect is that the former feed Brâhmins (brahm bhof) on the seventeenth and the latter on the thirtieth day after death. It is also peculiar to them that when an old man dies they make rejoicings. The head of the corpse is smeared with red powder and sprinkled with red water. It is carried to the cremation ground to the sound of music, and from the date of death up to the tenth day the women sing, and sweetmeats and betel are distributed. For a year after on the day of death a Brâhman is fed.

9. In Bombay the Sâraswati Brâhmins are known as Shenavi, which seems to be a corruption of Chhîânâvê as they are supposed to have ninety-six sections. "In Gujarât, besides acting as family priests, they follow many callings, reading holy books, drawing horoscopes, teaching private schools, trading, and serving as accountants, soldiers and constables. Once the holders of high offices, they have long lost their special position, and are now degraded, eating with and serving as the family priests of Kshatriyas, Lohânas, and Bhansâlis, whom they say they saved from Parasurâma's persecutions. In religion Saivas and goddess worshippers, (their chief deities being Ambika, Asapurna, Bhawâni, Kumâri, and Mahâ-lakshmi) their family deity is Sâraswati, whose chief place of worship is on the river of the same name. Not careful to keep the ordinary Brâhman rules, they allow widow marriage, and freely

The Shenavis of Bombay.

travel across the seas to collect payments for their patrons, Cutch Vānya traders settled in Mozambique and Africa.¹

"Dr. Wilson says that they are Shukla Yajurvedis. In using animal food they abstain from that of the cow and tame fowls; but eat sheep, goats, deer, wild birds of most species, and fish killed for them by others. They also eat onions and other vegetables forbidden in the Smritis. They are generally inattentive to sectarian marks. They dress like the Hindu merchants and Amins of Sinth, though using white turbans. They shave the crowns of their heads, but have two tufts of hair above their ears. Their physiognomy is supposed by some to be not so distinctly of the Aryan type as that of other Brāhmanas. They are partial to the Gurmukhi written character used in the Panjāb."

10. In these Provinces they are the special family priests of the Khatrias. They have in recent times commenced to intermarry with the Gaur.

Distribution of Sāraswati Brāhmanas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Dehra Dūn . . .	8,261	Ujjoor . . .	711
Sahāranpur . . .	1,278	Badliun . . .	1,621
Muzaffarnagar . . .	609	Morādābād . . .	3,001
Meerut . . .	2,161	Shāhjahānpur . . .	271
Bulandshahr . . .	1,916	Pilibhit . . .	89
Aligarh . . .	8,136	Cawnpur . . .	615
Mathura . . .	7,519	Fatehpur . . .	53
Agra . . .	2,913	Bānda . . .	31
Farrukhābād . . .	396	Hamirpur . . .	20
Etāwah . . .	390	Allābād . . .	259
Etah . . .	330	Jhānsi . . .	337
Bareilly . . .	1,279	Jālaun . . .	22

Distribution of Saraswati Brāhmins according to the Census of 1901—concluded.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Jaipur . . .	10	Slitapur . . .	174
Benares . . .	2,586	Hardoi . . .	172
Jaunpur . . .	32	Kheri . . .	121
Ghāzipur . . .	49	Faizābād . . .	306
Gorakhpur . . .	33	Gonda . . .	23
Kumaun . . .	1	Bahrāich . . .	160
Garhwāl . . .	26	Sultānpur . . .	16
Tarāi . . .	102	Partābgarh . . .	6
Lucknow . . .	1,069	Bārabankī . . .	46
Unāo . . .	317
Rāi Bareilly . . .	65	TOTAL .	47,369

Sarbhangi.—An order of Hindu ascetics who are said to take their name from their complete isolation (sarva-bhanga) from all others. There seems to be little or nothing to distinguish them from the ordinary Bairāgi.

Distribution of the Sarbhāngis according to the Census of 1901.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Muzaffarnagar . . .	20	Lucknow . . .	6
Shābjahānpur . . .	1	Slitapur . . .	1
Phibbt . . .	1	Kheri . . .	3
Fatehpur . . .	1	Bahrāich . . .	2
Hamirpur . . .	4
Jhānsi . . .	9	TOTAL .	56

Males . 44

Females . 12

Sarpakariya.—A Rājput sept found in Azamgarh who say they are descended from a serpent (sarpa). Some of them are Chhatris and some Bhuinhāra. They are of low standing among Rājputs, but rank high among Bhuinhāra.¹

Sarwariya.—A division of the Kanaujiya Brahmins, who take their name from living beyond the river Sarju (Saryupār, Sarayu-pāra). They say themselves that they settled on the east of the river Sarju in the time of Raja Aja, grand-father of Rāma. Mr. Risley² gives from Bihār a legend of their origin which as he says "throws light upon the part which misunderstood tradition may play in the growth of popular tradition. Once upon a time there were two brothers, Kanha and Knbja, they lived in Kanauj, and their descendants were called Kanaujiya Brāhmans. Now Rām Chandra, King of Ajudhya, wished to perform the great sacrifice of a horse, and sent for the Kanaujiya Brāhmans to help him. When they were starting, their father made them promise not to take any present for what they were going to do. But it seems that the sacrifice was of no effect unless the Brāhmans were duly rewarded. The Raja knew this, and caused diamonds to be hidden in the packets of betel which he gave to the Brahmins. When they got home their father asked them if they had taken any presents, and they said they had not. But when the packets of betel were opened the diamonds were found, and these Brāhmans were at once turned out of their caste, so they went back to the king, ready to curse him for his treachery. But he appeased them with smooth words and with grants of land to dwell on, and the grants were made in this way. The king shot an arrow as far as he could, and the place where it fell was the boundary of the land. Now the name of an arrow is sar so these Brāhmans were called Sarwariya."

2 The Sarwariya Brāhmans have the usual Brāhmanic organisation of sections (gotra) and local groups (dhā), there are two superior sections in these Provinces —

1. Garga gotra, called Sukla with the following groups (dhā) Māmāhor, Mehra, Bhenri, Bakrua, Kanail, Majhgaawa

¹ Settlement Report 29

² Tribes and Castes I 157.

2. Gautama gotra ; title Tivâri ; sections Sarya, Soligaura, Dhatura, Deoriya, Sirjam, Chetiya. The last are properly speaking Tivâris of Burhiya Bâri, of Gorakhpur. Below these are thirteen inferior sections:—

1. Vatsya gotra ; title Misra ; diâ Payâsi.
2. Vatsya ; title Dûbê ; diâ Samadari, Sarari.
3. Kasyapa ; title Dûbê ; diâ Bihhatgiâma.
4. Kasyapa ; title Misra ; diâ Dharmapura.
5. Gautama ; title Gurdaban Dûbê ; diâ Kanchani.
6. Savarna ; title Pânre, Panreya ; diâ Itiya.
7. Savarna ; title Pânre, Panreya ; diâ Itâri.
8. Kasyapa ; title Pânre ; diâ Triphala.
9. Gard Mukha Sandilya ; title Tivâri ; diâ Pinri, Nadâwali, Târa, Majauna.
10. Vatsya ; title Pânre ; diâ Nâga Chauvi.
11. Vatsya ; title Misra ; diâ Ratanmâla.
12. Vatsya ; title Tivâri ; diâ Pâla.
13. Kasyapa ; title Misra ; diâ Rârhi.

In addition to the above there are some whose claim to rank among the higher Sarwariya Brâhmans is not fully accepted. Such are the Parwa Dûbê of Kantit, the Pâtlak of Sonaura, the Tivâri of Bhargo, the Ojha of Karaili, the Pânre of Thokawa, the Upâdhyâya of Khoriya, the Chaubê of Nepura, the Dûbê of Latihai. These Brâhmans, however, intermarry with the higher grade Sarwariya.

3. Sarwariya Brâhmans pay much regard to their pânti or rank which now hardly means anything more than a certain amount of prejudice in the matter of eating and drinking only with persons of equal or superior rank. The Pantihâ Brâhmans will not eat palâki cooked by Kshatriyas ; on the other hand those who are not Pantihâ will eat palâki cooked by Kshatriyas whose lineage is undoubted. Pantihâ Brâhmans will not allow their women to use the flour mill or rice pounder, and would rather die than get the work of preparing the grain done by their women. But the number of Pantihâs is said now to be so rapidly diminishing that they find it difficult to marry without violating the prohibited degrees. All have fallen into the lower grade known as Tutahâ or "broken," with a few exceptions. If a Pantihâ marries the daughter of a Tutahâ he falls into the status of the latter. Pantihâs at present belong only to the higher sections, those of Garga, Gautama and Sandilya. These three of the highest grade are exogamous and so are the thirteen lower divisions, but a kind of hypergamy prevails, and while the higher three divisions give daughters to the lower, they do not take brides from them. The Pantihias of the lower grades exchange brides indiscriminately. But there is a constant effort to rise in the social scale on the part of those of inferior grade by contracting marriage alliances with those of higher status. When a man emigrates he takes his dik with him and the area of the group is thus constantly extending.

1 When a woman is five months gone in pregnancy she invites her mother-in-law and entertains her on cakes, sweetmeats and milk. Five Brahmans are also fed at the same time. The woman gives her mother-in-law a present of a sheet (sāri), petticoat (lahnga) and bodice (choliya), accompanied with a present in cash varying with the wealth of the family. If her father-in-law be alive she gives the garments suitable to a married woman, if he be dead, only two white sheets are presented. Up to the eighth month of her pregnancy the expectant mother wears a blue sheet as a protective against the Evil Eye. At the end of the eighth month eight sweet cakes (pusa) are sent to the houses of each of the near relations. From that day the woman gives up wearing her blue garment, and the mother lays her head at the feet of her mother-in-law and makes her a present of two rupees, known as pānu lagas.

5 When the baby is born, if it be a boy, the nandi-mukhā arādhā is done as described in the case of other Brahmans. The father, after this ancestor worship is over, binds the umbilical cord with his Brahmanical thread and burns it in the confinement room. A fire is kept burning over it for six days, during this time whoever wishes to enter the confinement room washes his feet and then dries them by holding them over fire. This repels the evil spirits which may have accompanied him from outside. This also keeps off the dreaded demon Jambua, which represents the infantile lock-jaw resulting from the cutting of the cord with a blunt instrument and the neglect of sanitary precautions. On the sixth day the mother bathes at an auspicious moment selected by the Purohit. She bathes again on the tenth and twelfth day and then acquires a sufficient degree of purity to allow her to be touched by her relatives. But she cannot touch the drinking water of the family, or cook for them. On the day the child is born the mother-in-law puts in an earthen pot the seeds of the Embelia ribes (bāḍ birang) and water, and in another uṣm leaves and water. The former is drunk by the mother and she uses the second for bathing. On the third day the mother-in-law grinds some pepper (pīpar) and gets two rupees as a present. On the sixth day the mother dyes seven or nine sheets with turmeric; one is given to the Chamārin, Nāin, and Bārin, and the rest to the wives of Brāhmins. The Pandit who prepares the horoscope is also rewarded and a sheet is given to the Dhobin who washes the clothes used at the delivery. People of other castes will not drink water at the house of a man whose wife has been delivered for twelve days. On the twelfth day the house is cleaned, the old earthen vessels replaced and the birth impurity is removed.

6. When the baby is a month old it is bathed and a piece of red thread tied as an amulet round the wrists, feet, waist, and neck. Each thread has seven tassels, three yellow and four red. These threads are changed every month up to the sixth month when they are replaced by ornaments of gold or silver which are also regarded as protectives against demonical influence. The ornaments for a child consist of bangles (kara) on the wrist and feet, a waist chain (kardhani), and a necklace (kumel, kahula) to which are attached seven charms (yantra). Then the child is dressed in a coat and cap and the anna-prāśana rite or "feeding with grain" is performed as elsewhere described. At the first birthday what is known as the varsha karm is done. The child is made to drink a mixture of milk and sesamum which is first offered to the tribal goddess.

7. After the third year the ceremonial shaving (mūṣṛan) is done.

The shaving.

For three days before the rite the women sing, a small silver razor is made costing a rupee and a quarter. The child is rubbed with the condiment known as uḍṭan during this time. On the third day the barber touches the child's head with the silver razor and then shaves the head with his own razor. The mother holds the child in her lap and receives the hair as it falls on a broad wheaten cake. She preserves the hair till she has occasion to go to Prayāg when she lets it float away in the sacred junction (Triveni) of the rivers. With the hair ten copper coins are also thrown into the stream. At the fifth year the ear-piercing (tanekhedan) is done at some favourite shrine.

8 The marriage and death rites are of the usual type as elsewhere domestic rites where described.

9 Of the Sarwariya Brahmans of Gorakhpur Dr Buchanan¹ writes — "The Sarwariya Brahmans, and all Social customs the sacred order here imitate their example, do not eat rice cleaned by boiling, that is purchased in the market. What is cleaned without boiling may be anywhere purchased, yet the distinction is very slight, for the Brahman women never clean the rice themselves, and low women are employed to boil the rice before it is cleaned. The conscience is saved by this operation being performed in the Brahman's house, and by the water used being drawn and carried home in his vessels, for this is done by the low women employed to clean the grain. The Brahmans here in general decline to eat parched grain purchased from a shop, and sweetmeats consisting of grain and sugar fried in oil they altogether reject, but they use the confections made of sugar and curds, and they carry grain to the parchers' shop, who prepare it before them, and thus they eat without scruple. They never eat either of these refreshments without purifying the place on which they sit with cow dung and water, a ceremony which elsewhere is only considered necessary at regular meals. They eat goat's flesh both when sacrificed and when killed on purpose but will not purchase a joint from the shop of a professed butcher. They also eat deer porcupines and hares, partridges, quails, pigeons, turtle doves, and wild ducks of several kinds.

"It is admitted that according to the written law they might eat wild hog, lizards, turtles and wild pullets, but anyone who presumed to do so would infallibly lose caste. Two or three Pandits are shrewdly suspected of drinking in the worship of the goddess, but they keep it as secret as possible, and, if clearly proven, they would undoubtedly lose caste. The Brāhmans and all the women, except of the lowest dregs of impurity, never smoke tobacco except as a medicine, but for this restraint they make up by chewing. Brāhmans may without loss of caste intoxicate themselves with hemp, but it is only used to any considerable extent by those who have abandoned the pleasures of the world for a religious life."

Distribution of Sahwariya Brāhmins according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Dehra Dūn	219	Pilibhūt	355
Sahāranpur	273	Cawnpur	835
Muzaffarnagar	108	Fatehpur	6,136
Meerut	253	Bānda	57,392
Balānsobāh	38	Hamīrpur	237
Aligarh	616	Allahābād	177,975
Mathura	200	Jhānsi	251
Agra	111	Jālsun	29
Farrukhābād	807	Lalitpur	61
Mainpuri	239	Benares	77,196
Etāwah	101	Mirzapur	152,311
Etah	98	Jaunpur	116,315
Bareilly	335	Ghāziपुर	29,030
Bijnor	120	Ballia	12,630
Bādāun	73	Gorakhpur	211,791
Morādābād	79	Basti	183,060
Shāhjahānpur	219	Azamgarh	103,729

Distribution of Sarvārīya Brāhmins according to the Census of 1891—concluded

Districts.	Number	Districts.	Number
Taraī	17	Faizābād	191,937 .
Lucknow . .	1,932	Gonda	197,001
Unāo	303	Pahrāch	11,322
Pač Bareh . .	23,144	Sultānpur	155,534
Sitapur . . .	636	Partabgarh	123,039
Hardoi . . .	527	Bārabankī	18,565
Alen	474	TOTAL	1,000,277

Satnāmi.—A Hindu religious order who take their name from their invocation of Sṛtyanāma, "The God of truth." There are at least two classes of people called by the same name.

2. There is first, the sect founded by Jag-Jīwan Dās of Sardaha in the Bārabankī District, who was born in 1692 A.D. He was a Chandel Thākūr, and his chief disciples were Guṣāin Dās, an Upādhyā Brahman, Devī Dās, a Chamar Gaur Thākūr, Dulam Dās, a Sombansi Thākūr and Khenī Dās, a Tīwārī Brāhman. He established some connection with Islām, and two of his disciples were of that creed. They profess to adore the True Name alone, the one God, the Cause and Creator of all things, void of sensible qualities (nirguna), without beginning or end. They borrow, however, their notions of creation from the Vedānta philosophy, or rather from the modified form in which it is adapted to vulgar apprehension, worldly existence is illusion or the work of Maya, the primitive character of Bhawâni, the consort of Siva. They recognise, accordingly, the whole Hindu pantheon, and although they profess to worship but one God, pay reverence to what they consider manifestations of his nature visible in the Avatâras, particularly Râma and Krishna. Their moral code is much the same as that of all Hindu ascetics, and enjoins indifference to the world, its pleasures and its pains; devotion to the spiritual guide; clemency and gentleness; rigid adherence to truth; the discharge of all ordinary social or religious obligations, and the hope of final absorption into the One Spirit with all things. There is thus but little difference between them and some of the Vnishnava sectaries. The sacred book of the sect is the Aghavinsa or "Sin remover." The Bâba died at Kotwa, five miles from Saidaba in 1761 A.D. Meat, masûr pulse and intoxicating liquors are prohibited, as well as the egg-plant (baingan) at least locally. The story goes that Râja Devi Bakhsh, late Ta'alnqdâr of Gonda, married in the family of the high priest, and on the occasion of his marriage he was entertained as a guest with his whole suite. But he declined their hospitality unless served with flesh. The Satnâmis at last prepared a curry of baingan, pronounced a prayer upon it, and when served out, it was found to be flesh. From thenceforth the Satnâmis renounced the eating of baingan as a thing convertible into meat. Smoking seems to be allowed.

3. Caste distinctions are not lost by profession. On the contrary its professors seem to be careful not to interfere with caste prejudice and family customs. Fasts are kept, at least to a partial extent on Tuesday, the day of Hanumân, and on Sunday, the day of the Sun. A good deal of liberality is shown towards local superstitions. Incense is weekly burnt to Hanumân under the title of Mahâbîr, whilst Râma Chandra seems to come in for a share of adoration. The water in which the Guru's feet have been washed is drunk only when the Guru is of equal or higher caste than the disciple. Satnâmis seem regularly to observe the festivals of their Hindu brethren. Their distinctive mark is the andû, or black and white twisted thread worn on the right wrist. The full-blown Mahant wears an andû on each wrist and each ankle. Their caste mark (tilak) is a black, perpendicular streak. The bodies of the dead are buried, not cremated. Marriage customs are those of the family to which the Satnâmi belongs.

4. The other class, known by the name of Satnâmi, are the Râê Dâsi Chamârs of parts of the Central Provinces. The creed preached by Râc Dâs seems to have been very similar to that of Ghâsi Dâs, the celebrated Satnâmi teacher, who started the revival among the Chamârs some seventy years ago. This seems hardly to have reached these Provinces.

Distribution of the Satnâmis according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS	Number.
Muzaffarnagar . . .	100	Moradâbâd . . .	2
Meerut	2	Pilibhit	21
Bulandshahr . . .	61	Mirzapur	0
Farrukhâbâd . . .	1	Ghâzipur	25
Mainpuri	3	Faizabad	20
Etah	1
Dareilly	332	TOTAL	582

Saun—A tribe recorded at last Census to the number of 1 in Moradâbâd and 256 in the Tarâi. They represent in the hills the Kurmi of the plains and will do any kind of labourer's work except carrying palanquins. Their principal occupation is mining, and the reason they give for not carrying litters is that all castes will not drink water from their hands, though drinking it from the hand of the Kahâr¹. In the Tarâi they show 63 sections. They claim to be a branch of the Khasiya Râjputs. They do not appear to be regularly domiciled in the Tarâi, but come in the cold weather for work and return in the hot season.

Sayyid, Sayyad—(said to be derived from âid, "increase, gain") one of the four chief divisions of Muhammadans. They call themselves the descendants of the famous martyrs Hasan and Husain, the sons of Ali the fourth Khalîf, and Fâtima the daughter of the Prophet. How many of these are true Sayyids it is impossible to say. Many of them came with the early Muhammadan invaders and asserted some priestly pretensions which were in many cases rewarded by gifts of revenue-free land which their descendants still enjoy. Many of these now recorded as Sayyids have no real claim to the title. The common proverb quoted in the article on the Shaikhs says: "Last year I was a butcher, this year I am a Shaikh; next year if prices rise, I shall become a Sayyid." According to Mr. Ibbetson¹ the apostles who converted the Pathâns to Islâm were called Sayyids if they came from the West and Shaikhs if from the East. The characteristic qualities of a Sayyid as described by Farishta on the occasion of his dissipating the doubt whether Khizr Khân, the protégé of Taimûr, was really a Sayyid, were modesty, politeness, hospitality, compassion, charity, learning and bravery; but it is needless to say that few of the modern Sayyids reach this high ideal.

¹ Atkinson, Himalayan Gazetteer, III, 451

2. The tribal organisation of the Sayyids is confusing because some of the divisions take their name from an eponymous ancestor and some are merely territorial. At the last Census they were enumerated in a large number of divisions—Abbâsi, which is also one of the Shaikh subdivisions and takes its name from Abbâs, the paternal uncle of the Prophet; Abidi, "worshippers of God;" Bani Fâtima, the descendants of Fâtima, the daughter of the Prophet. She married Ali the cousin of Muhammad and was the mother of the martyrs Hasan and Husain from whom the Sayyids generally are said to be sprung; Baqri (baqar, "an ox") Bâghdâdi, "residents of Bâghdâd"; Bukhârî, "residents of Bukhâra"; Chishti, followers of the Saint Salim Chisti of Fatehpur Sikri; ¹*Hâshimi*, also a Shaikh division, named after Hâshim, the great grandfather of the Prophet; Hasani, from the martyr Hasan; Hasani-ul-Husaini, from the two martyr brethren; Husaini from Husain; Ja'fari, also a Shaikh division, who take their name from Ja'far, one of the Imâms; Jalâlî possibly from Al-Jalâl, a term used by the Sûfi mystics to express that state of the Almighty which places him beyond the understanding of His creatures; Qâdiriya, which is the name of a special sect who deny absolute predestination and believe in the power (qadr) of man's free-will; Kâzimi (Kâzim, "the restrainer of anger"); Naqwi; Pîrzâda, "descendants of some saint;" Riswi; Sabzawâri from Sabzwâr one of the chief cities of the Persian Province

¹ Panjab Ethnography, para 515.

Khurasân, between Mashad and the Caspian sea; Siddiqi, from As-Siddiq, "he who speaks the truth," a title given by the Prophet to the first Khalif Abu Bakr; Taqwi, "the abstinent." Tirmîzi, residents of a place called Tirmiz in Persia; Ulwi or Ālawiya, who believe the Khalif Ali to have been a prophet, Ushari and Zaidi.

3. Abul Fazl Sayyid, of Wâsit in Irâq, is the ancestor of most of the renowned Muhammadan families in Upper India—the Bârha and Bilgrâmi Sayyids, and in Khairâbad, Patelpur Haswa and many other places branches of the same stem are found. Sayyid Muhammad, the fourth in descent from him, was the ancestor of the Bilgrâm family.¹

4. The Sayyids of Jais in Râc Barch are another famous Oudh family who are said to have been settled since the thirteenth century. They are well known for learning and the Muftahids of Lucknow, literally "one who strives" to attain a high position of scholarship and learning, the highest degree among Muhammadan divines, belong to the family. The Bilgrâm Sayyids are also famous for having produced many poets and learned men. They claim to have invaded Oudh in the time of Shamsuddin and to have founded Bilgrâm on the site of a city named Srinagar.²

5. But perhaps more famous are the Sayyids of Bârha³, Sadat-i Bârha. They claim descent from Fâtima the daughter of the Prophet, and by one account came into these Provinces with Mahmûd of Ghazni. Their head-quarters are in the Muzaffarnagar District and a few colonies of them are found in Amroha of Morâdâbâd and Sikandra of the Allahâbâd District. There are various theories as to the origin of the name. Some say that, scandalised by the debaucheries of the Mina Bazâr of Delhi, which they considered unsuited to their sacred character, they obtained leave to reside outside (lâhar) of the town, others that it was the chief town of twelve (bârah) which belong to the clan. As Professor Blochmann remarks, whether the derivation from the Hindi numeral bârah be correct or not, there is no doubt that the etymology was believed to be correct in the time of Akbar and Jahângir, for both the Tabaqat and the Tuzuk derive the name from the twelve villages in the Duâb of Mazaffarnagar, which the Sayyids held. Like the Sayyids of Bilgrâm, the Bârha family trace their origin to Sayyid Abul Farah of Wâsit; "but their nasabnâma or genealogical tree was sacred at, and even Jahângir in the above-quoted passage from the Tuzuk, says that the personal courage of the Sayyids of Bârha, but nothing else, was the best proof that they were Sayyids. But they cling so firmly to this distinction, that some of them even placed the title of Sayyid before the titles which they received from the Mughul Emperors, as Sayyid Khân Jahân (Sayyid Abul Mazaffar) and others. But if their claim to be Sayyids was not firmly established, their bravery and valour has become a by-word. Their place in battle was the van (hirdwal), they claimed to be the leaders of the onset, and every Emperor from the time of Akbar gladly availed himself of the prestige of their name. They delighted in looking on themselves as Hindustânis. Their military fame completely threw to the background the renown of the Sayyids of Amroha, of Mânikipur, the Khânzâdas of Mewât, and even families of royal blood as the Safawais."

¹ Hardoi Settlement Report 63, Elliot, Chronicles of Undo 93

² Williams, Oudh Census Report, 74

³ Ell. of Supplemental Glossary S. V Blochmann, Ain-i-Akbari, I, 390 Census 1901 1905, N. H. P., I 6, Appendix, Hutton, Panjab Ethnography, para 515

6. They are divided into four branches—the Tihanpuri with Jânsath in the Muzaffarnagar District as their chief town; the Chatbanûri or Châtrauri of Sambalhara; the Kûndliwâl of Majhara and the Jagacri of Bidauli on the Jumna. Of these, the Muhammadan historians mention only the Kûndliwâl and the Tihanpuri. Besides these divisions they have private marks of recognition which they say have been very successful in excluding impostors from the tribe. Particular families have a sort of totemistic designations, such as "dog," "ass," "sweepers," etc., which are said to be derived from the menial offices which some of the Sayyids of this family are reported to have performed for the Emperor Humâyun when reduced to extremities in his flight from Shîr Shâh. As Sir H. M. Elliot remarks: "the improbability of men assuming such humiliating designations without a good cause, gives some colour to the story; particularly when we learn the devotion of the Emperor's attendants, which is so amusingly described by his right reverential Aftâlchi, Jauhar, in the Tazkirat-ul-Vikaya."

7. "The histories of India," writes Professor Blochmann, "do not appear to make mention of the Sayyids of Bârha before the times of Akbar; but they must have held posts of some importance under the Sûrs, because the arrival of Sayyid Mahmûd in Akbar's camp is recorded by all in forams as an event of importance. He and other Sayyids were, moreover, at once appointed to high mansabs. The family boasts also traditionally of services rendered to Humayun, but this is at variance with Abul Fazl's statement that Sayyid Mahmûd was the first who served under a Timuride. The political importance of the Sayyids declined from the time of Muhammad Shah (1131 to 1161) who deposed the brothers Sayyid Abdullah Khan, and Sayyid Husain Ali Khan, in whom the family reached the greatest height of their power. What a difference between the rustic and loyal Sayyid Mahmûd under Akbar, and the above two brothers, who made four Timurides Emperors dethroned and killed two and blinded and imprisoned three. They made Farrukh Siyar, Rasi'uddarajat, Rasi'uddanli, and Muhammad Shah Emperors, they dethroned and killed Jahandar Shâh and Farrukh Siyar whom they had moreover blinded, and they blinded and imprisoned Princes A'azzuddin Ali Tabâr, and Hamâyun Bahkt."

Distribution of the Sargids

DISTRICTS.	AMSL	AMSL	Sand Fatima.	Bapt.	Pignall	Bukhard.	Cahell.	Hachiml.	Jinseal.	Musam al-Hussain,	Hussainl.	Jaird.
Dehra Dun	20	47	177	...
Rohatnagar .	3	4	2	2	3	1,899	...	271	1,899	69
Muzaffarnagar .	6	19	9	41	...	67	7	17	...	1	2,619	110
Meerut .	6	17	6	6	12	603	...	8	...	22	1,883	200
Bulandshahr .	13	4	19	...	63	928	174	2	762	31
Aligarh	1	47	491	1	4	1,725	168
Mathura .	3	3	120	...	4	240	66
Agra .	61	126	19	6	4	111	16	40	1,056	273
Farrukhabad .	5	37	18	13	7	613	2	489	31
Mainpuri .	1	17	146	33	188	156
Etiawah .	14	19	6	3	7	19	21	109	38
Etah .	1	33	2	...	7	174	...	1	762	28
Bareilly .	203	14	63	...	236	1,392	105	63	...	6	6,273	113
Dijnor	715	2,173	100	1,648	32
Tudun	27	...	17	6	128	...	47	649	111
Moradabad	289	15	230	13	83	...	4	10,007	153
Shahjahanpur	1	11	601	23	16	...	656	710	36
Pilibhit .	12	86	11	...	17	215	39	6	278	2	...	13
Cawnpur .	40	205	1	4	2	313	...	36	..	14	827	420
Fatehpur .	22	104	33	5	6	39	73	613	163
Banda .	19	73	16	4	1	53	..	9	9	50
Hamirpur .	5	66	3	1	14	46	.	82	...	26	240	39
Allahabad .	42	289	7	1	13	137	9	161	...	26	1,491	362
Jhansi .	54	31	31	26	113	16
Jilau	3	6	75	20	51	13
Lalitpur	10	14	10
Bonares .	3	158	...	40	...	3	609	265
Mirzapur .	1	34	495	80
Jaunpur	14	...	112	1,048	281
Ghaziipur .	7	7	13	874	82
Balla .	29	17	...	153	151	...
Gorakhpur .	1	231	31	1	...	72	4	7	474	49
Basti	67	71	...	771	11	1,504	9
Asamgarh .	37	56	6	1	...	12	...	20	2,123	223
Kumoun
Garhwil

according to the Census of 1891.

Jahil	Qadiriya	Kutubm.	Naqul	Pirada	Qisul	Sabawil	Siddiq	Taqul	Timrid	UwL	Askari	Zahid	Others	Total
2		4		55	7	7	10						55	631
12	125	100	47	8	150	140	6		559	79	16	17	1 123	6 415
5	107	766	108	35	46	50	25		231	110	25	5,236	2 650	12 650
80	57	236			2 801	250		41	81	37		600	2 798	10 056
2	8	8	633		1 430	20	20	615	14	23		57	727	5 673
	99	4		103	204	79	16	35		68			1 407	4 578
4			138		213		20		19			18	1 341	2 720
173	20	33	7		800		71	61	19	62	2	12	3 307	5 744
69	2	51	4	55	253		43	493	692	411	67	100	2,744	5 100
61	1	75		23	310	10	165	75	1	67		25	2 517	2 912
2	11	26	107		771				3	43			1 805	2 623
3	4	4	21	14	55	18	23		6	17	8	50	1 383	2 022
557	5	10			173	70			2		40	1 037	2 181	8 002
19		1		11	344	238		345	470	1		3 312	2 162	17 007
173		1	118		117	62						25	1 677	3 601
201	11	61	2 313		909	10			20	40		823	2 377	17,783
106	43	15		9	131			20	163	16			1 371	8 790
137		17			2	9	3	29	41	1		73	167	1 015
	63	61	10	18	1 059		110	83	87	60	3	83	3 450	6 077
61	71	89	264		430	102		715	31	95	8	363	1,009	6 076
26	24	25	118		453	4	42		8	8		47	1 177	2 607
640	12	61	13		72		39			17		28	1 096	2,433
156		510		31	4 711	230	42	1 187	12	100	1	304	4 131	13 807
20	21	10			89		33	57	39	8		87	1 093	1 801
5	12	26			85	6	24	23	15	21		17	1,003	1,511
1	2				36	4	11	4	6	1			268	267
		56			429								1 314	2 975
		30			229					20			1 375	2,200
4		63			1 000	2	80			117	85	561	1 415	4,818
6		294			336	216	23	27	271	21		189	076	3 230
					122		1						279	751
13	4	73		1	131	1	1	15	6	21		17	2 178	3 323
	31				1 314			51		11			6 617	6 200
7		331		3	640	19			137	679	137	473	1 650	6,876
													36	36
													41	41

Distribution of the Sayyids according DISTRICTS.	Abdal.	Abdul.	Bani Fâtima.	Baqul.	Isghobul.	Bukhar.	Chahul.	Hasbmul.	Hussul.	Hussul- Hussul.	Rawul.	Jahul.

Tarkil	31	177	121	...
Lucknow . .	4	1,900	17	121	...	63	...	94	...	170	1,607	373
Unao	3	29	...	41	...	66	...	112	169	119
Ris Barell	73	83	6	1	9	...	132	261	223
Sitapur . .	1	149	1	3	...	89	119	39	...	13	68	67
Hardoi . .	5	31	160	3	610	70
Kheri	51	1	84	...	19	211	131
Faizabad . .	4	103	11	1	...	73	1,119	63
Gonda	70	29	160	69
Bahrâich . .	2	103	13	47	19	11	40	27	230	178
Sultānpur	141	77	...	56	25	...	9	603	47
Partābgarh . .	121	4	13	45	...	9	...	9	40	63
Dārabanki	19	29	77	71	633	...
TOTAL . .	725	4,613	691	716	1,457	9,705	3,003	1,655	278	1,792	14,001	6,111

to the Census of 1891—concluded

Jalil	Qadiriya	Kuraifal	Naqul	Urida	Qawl	Sabrawat	Siddiq	Tajul	Tirmiz	Uwl	Astard	Zalil	Others	Total
"	27	"	"	"	"	"	"	31	"	6	"	"	181	678
34	46	1,219	"	2	4,812	"	43	611	6	27	127	123	3,317	14,910
"	"	83	"	"	833	"	103	313	"	82	33	783	1,525	3,783
"	"	13*	1,195	42	370	27	10	"	43	7	"	112	933	3,650
11	"	47	"	2	707	"	"	82	"	32	"	473	1,763	3,710
43	12	31	461	"	1,253	"	"	"	173	14	"	796	1,098	5,573
117	"	72	27	20	964	"	"	"	177	6	"	609	1,353	3,101
"	"	181	750	"	2,116	"	"	"	"	35	"	935	2,359	8,104
"	"	"	"	"	4,614	"	"	13	"	87	"	993	873	6,953
6	16	191	181	"	213	49	3	"	"	67	176	301	1,357	3,279
"	"	83	"	33	450	40	"	9*	"	163	"	41*	1,040	3,297
15	13	11	257	"	236	33	19	"	"	18	"	49	1,108	2,081
"	"	131	60	34	2,602	"	"	"	1	501	60	610	2,417	7,517
2,671	740	5,403	6,813	51*	37,990	1,043	953	6,193	3,236	3,702	640	13,102	72,702	117,811

Sejwâri.¹—A small caste found only in the Lalitpur District. The story told of their origin is that when Maharâja Devi Sinh, of Chanderi, went to attack Maler Kotla, he brought from there four boys, one of whom he appointed to arrange his bed (sej), whence their name. They enumerate fourteen exogamous sections:—Gadoi or Garoi; Hâra; Nachniwâr; Bhâradwaj; Chobdâr; Sâni; Pachauri; Sikhaiya; Hardwâr; Gond; Kasâbka; Sawâr; Kachhwâr. They still regard Chanderi as their head quarters. They have a tribal council (panchâyat) of which the Panch or President is not hereditary, but is elected to act from time to time by the votes of the members.

2. A man may not marry in his own section nor the daughter of his maternal uncle or father's sister. He cannot marry or keep as a concubine a woman of another caste. He may marry two sisters. They generally marry their daughters in the sections from which they take their brides. Polygamy is allowed, and all the wives hold equal rank. Widows are allowed to marry. When a widow agrees to marry a man, she gives him her silver finger ring and he shows it to his brethren and informs them that he has arranged to marry such and such a widow. The giving of the ring is understood to mark the engagement and is known as ndaon. After he brings home the widow he feeds his brethren. Girls have no liberty before marriage, and infidelity is punished by a fine on both parties. Until her parents pay the fine, the girl cannot be married in the tribe. Girls are married at the age of nine and boys at ten. The marriage is arranged by the girl's father. A marriage is invalid without the consent of the girl and her parents. It is only widows who are allowed to select husbands for themselves. The girl's parents, if they can afford it, are expected to give her a dowry, the amount of which is fixed by the father. A marriage cannot be annulled on account of any physical defects appearing in either party after the ceremony has been performed. A man can divorce his wife in the presence and with the sanction of the tribal council for habitual infidelity. Divorced women can marry again by the inferior form, and the children of divorced women who marry again, widows and regularly married brides rank equally for the purpose of inheritance. The levirate is allowed under the usual restriction, but the widow may, if she please, marry an outsider. When she does so, her husband's brother has the right of custody of the children of her first marriage, and they succeed to their father's goods, while their mother gets nothing. But if she marries the younger brother of her husband, she has a right to maintenance out of the estate of her first husband. There is no fiction whereby the children of the levir are affiliated to his late brother.

3 While a woman is pregnant, they rub her head with powdered gram and water, but none of them can give an explanation of the custom. A woman of the Basor caste acts as midwife, and her place is then taken by the barber's wife. After the birth there are singing and dancing, and alms are distributed. When the child is a boy, the brethren are fed on the tenth day, if it be a girl, on the sixth day. There is no trace of the couvade. The mother remains secluded after her confinement for only three days. They have no rule of adoption. When boys arrive at puberty, the hair of their faces and heads is shaved with great solemnity.

4 The marriage arrangements are made by the family barber. When the matter is settled, the bridegroom gives the barber a rupee as his fee. Then the wedding day is fixed, and once that is done the match cannot be broken off. The various stages are—the abtaun, or anointing of the pair, the setting up of the marriage shed (mānro), the presentation of jewelry to the bride, the marking her forehead with red lead (ser dūrdān), the giving away of the bride (lanyādān) and the revolution round the central pole (bhānwar). The binding portions of the ceremony are the walking round the shed and the giving away of the bride.

5 They burn their dead and throw the ashes into the Ganges. At the time of cremation they are particular to perform the rite of ara or kapāḥkriya by breaking the skull to allow the spirit to reach the other world. They do not perform the regular sāddhā. But to remove his impurity, the officiating Brahman makes the man who fired the pyre offer a sacred ball (pinda) to the manes of the dead. The death impurity lasts ten days, and that of a woman after her confinement for three days.

6 The Sejwaris do not adopt the tenets of any particular sect. Their priests are Jhijhutiya Brāhmanas and like the Bundelas, whose servants they are, they are worshippers of Râma and Krishna. The women worship snakes at the Nâgpanchami and the banyan tree at the Barsait festival. But they are not allowed to enter the temples of the higher Hindu gods. They are very much afraid of demons which they propitiate with offerings of cocoanuts and athicâi or a mixture of eight ingredients, of which treacle, cardamoms, and turmeric are the chief part. They believe in the Evil Eye which can be obviated by moving some mustard and salt over the head of the child.

7. They will not touch Doms or Melitars. They eat pork, mutton, deer's flesh, and fish. They will eat only from the hands of Brâhmans and Râjputs and members of their own tribe. Their social rank is very low. They serve the Bundelas as menial servants, some serve as village watchmen and act as guards for bankers. A few cultivate lands as tenants without occupancy rights. At times of rejoicing, such as marriages and births, they get presents from their Bundela masters.

Social rules.

Distribution of the Sejwâri according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT	Number.
Lalitpur	380
TOTAL	386

Sengar.—A sept of Râjputs who, like the Gautam, claim descent from Singhi or Siringhi Rishi, whose daughter Basantiya is said to have been married to Somapâla, King of Kanauj. They say that their ancestor Pûran Deva emigrated to the Dakkhin and thence to Dhâr. From thence they were forced to go to Bandhugarh in Rîwa, and thence to Kanâr in Jalaun, near Jagmohanpur in Etâwah. Their Râja Bisukh Deva or Sukh Deva founded the modern house. His date lies between 1065 and 1165 A.D. He married Deva Kula, daughter of Jay Chaud Râthaur, of Kanauj, and after his defeat by Shahâb-ud-dîn Ghoi the power of the Sengars increased and the river Basiudh was renamed Sengar in their honour.¹

¹ Census Report, North-Western Provinces, I, Appendix 81, 599.

2 Their occupation of Ondh¹ dates from about 1527 A D, when Shaikh Bayazid, one of the Afghān generals of the Lodi Dynasty, submitted to Babur. This officer had in his service two Sengars from Jagmohanpur, across the Jumna by name Jagat Sāh and Gopāl Sinh. They raised and commanded a cavalry regiment, which was cantoned near the village of Simri, in Pargana Asolia of the Unāo District, and after his defeat they settled quietly down in the Pargana, making Kantha their head-quarters. "For eleven generations they remained peaceably there, keeping the Lodhas, who had been the original proprietors, in subjection. During this time they were joined by another family of the same clan, who followed them from Jagmohanpur and settled in Parsandan. In the eleventh generation, the Lodhas, who had never thoroughly acquiesced in their loss of position, suddenly rose against the Sengars, and killed the majority of them, but allowed the women and children to escape. The fugitives did not think it safe to go to their brotherhood in Parsandan, but fled to Jagmohanpur, and returning thence with an accession of strength, the sons of the murdered Sengar-, Asharn on Gopāl's side, and Garbu on Jagat Sinh's side, recovered their father's possessions in the country."

3 The Ghazipur² branch trace their origin to Phaphūnd in Etawah. They worship under the name of Nāth Bāhā, a deified member of the tribe named Amar Sinh. Before the establishment of British authority they managed to secure for themselves an unrivalled reputation for courage independence, and insubordination. They have now abandoned their old turbulent habits, they behaved well during the Mutiny, and are now loyal and peaceful citizens. In Jaloun³ they claim to have come from Lanka or Ceylon and to be descended from Singh Rishi. They seem to have been originally Brahmans who intermarried with Rajputs. According to General Sleeman,⁴ the Sengars are almost the only class of Rajputs in Bundelkhand, Baghelkhand, Riwa, and Sagar who used to put their female infants to death, in Oudh they are almost the only sept who do not.

1 There is a tribe in Gujarat called Sanghar who are on perhaps doubtful authority, connected with them. They are more pro-

¹ Fuller's Chronicles of Undo 45 sq

² Oldham Memo I 55 sq

³ Gazetteer North-Western Provinces I 909

⁴ Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal I, 312 note meaner Hindu tribes to Islām. This is marked in the common proverb—Peshayin Qassāb būdem, badazān gashtem Shaikh; ghalla chun arzān shawad, imād Sayyid meshawem—"The first year I was a butcher, the next a Shaikh; this year, if prices rise, I shall be a Sayyid."

2. At the last Census the Shaikhs of these Provinces were enumerated in the following tribes:—Abbāsi, who take their name from Abbās, the paternal uncle of Muḥammad; Ansāri from Al-'Ansār, "the helpers," a term used for the early converts of Al-Madīnah, but when all the citizens of Al-Madīnah were ostensibly converted to Islām, they were all named 'Ansār, while those Muslims who accompanied the Prophet from Makkah to Al-Madīnah were called Muhajirūn or "exiles"; Bahlīm; Banī Isrā'īl or "children of Israel"; Farīdī or followers of the famous Saint Bāla Farīd Shakkarganj of Pīk Pattan in the Montgomery District; Farūqī, who take their name from the Khalīf Umar, surnamed Farūq, "the discriminator between truth and falsehood"; Hāshimī, after Hāshim, the great-grandfather of Muḥammad, who according to the tradition, was surnamed Hāslum on account of his liberality in distributing bread (hāshim, "to break bread") to the pilgrims at Makkah; Ja'fari after Ja'far, a cousin of Muḥammad, who from his charity was called Abul Ma'ākīn, "the father of the poor"; or Ja'far, one of the twelve Imāms, Khurasāni, "residents of the land of Khurasān"; Kidwāi, Qureshī, after the Arabic tribe to which the Prophet belonged, it is hence the favourite tribe to which persons of doubtful origin claim affinity, and many of them are probably not of genuine Arab descent; Milkī, probably the same as the Malikhs, who were originally a Persian tribe, though more recently the word has been used as a title, like Khān or Beg; Pīrzāda or "offspring of the saint"; a term of very wide meaning which may mean the descendants or followers of any spiritual guide; Siddīqī, who take their name from the first Khalīf, Abu Bakr, who received from the Prophet the title of As Siddīq or "one who speaks the truth", Sulaimāni from Solomon; 'Ulwi or 'Alawīyah, who take their name from the Khalīf 'Alī Murtaza and 'Usmāni from 'Usmān, the fourth Khalīfa.

3. The Shaikhs, of course, follow, or pretend to follow, all the rules of Islām. Thus the real Shaikhs do; but those who are recent converts from Hinduism, maintain many of the practices of the castes from which they have been drawn.

Distribution of Shaikhs according to the Census of 1891.

District	Abassi.	Ansari.	Baham	Daul Farid	Fard.	Farid	Hashim.	Jafar.	Kharab.	Kidwai	Qureshi	Mulla	Parada.	Siddiqi.	Solih.	Uw.	Uwabi.	Others.	Total.
Indra Dui	189	347	35	1,635	163	..	3,211	100	1,232	6,840
Fahranpur	39	3,556	22	0	..	1,077	37	4,184	163	..	10,007	..	7	522	2,209	23,146
Musafarpur	77	1,086	24	2	..	606	85	..	35	1	4,063	..	35	10,078	1	230	413	1,935	19,794
Misri	23	662	311	1	1	531	0	..	11,778	12,231	68	5	98	5,491	31,164
Belandahar	304	3,126	29	156	..	123	33	..	93	..	7,609	..	7	9,701	2	0	97	2,323	22,914
Aligarh	30	923	..	410	25	971	134	..	8,069	..	17	3,203	290	8,029	17,121
Mathura	37	79	45	45	..	81	..	1	101	..	3,613	2,932	10	6,079	12,994
Agri	59	341	110	53	3	407	8	3	223	..	14,231	2	..	6,016	1	0	150	11,359	22,958
Farukhabad	336	232	151	20	27	229	4	33	10,143	10	3	10,307	23	42	222	4,820	26,834
Meerut	121	86	19	2	..	63	30	..	2,007	4	..	2,080	23	7,652	13,306
Etawah	127	143	..	1	..	73	11	2,076	3	..	3,563	..	35	23	4,654	10,713
Unnao	20	203	137	997	45	210	1	..	6	..	4,796	3	..	1,983	1	..	41	5,837	14,029
Bareilly	158	1,017	25	895	..	177	90	22,639	12,715	419	7	209	11,453	53,937
Meerut	..	4,841	306	27,479	19,143	..	4	160	5,865	57,456
Meerut	101	1,036	16	467	27	811	10,670	14,732	15	50	338	11,511	40,404
Meerut	607	1,899	31	473	109	2,761	139	3	57	..	26,703	33,075	..	61	678	21,612	101,513
Meerut	148	429	..	150	24	639	11	..	39	..	2,767	7,083	131	22	257	5,601	23,300

Distribution of Shaikhs according to the Census of 1891—concluded.

Districts.	Adalat.	Anakal.	Bahim.	Bani Tarsil.	Fardal.	Fardal.	Fardal.	Washim.	Jatil.	Kharasand.	Kidari.	Qureshi.	Munk.	Phanda.	Midgh.	Buland.	Uvel.	Yashal.	Others.	Total.
Hardol	9	674	..	3	4	..	5	2,653	18,157	3	30	508	8,000	27,438
Kheri	3	400	20	190	20	..	1,748	57	..	4,874	..	13	154	2,337	10,000
Faishad.	232	1,508	3	173	791	4,513	759	..	14,074	200	7,240	24,915
Gonda	67	744	803	1,613	459	7,853	37	..	20,771	..	11	2,019	1,000	43,993
Bharaloh.	6	2,077	11	1	16	6	413	16	..	23	625	3,760	174	6	10,040	46	..	89	2,257	18,424
Salkapur	176	407	6	360	9	37	4,377	106	..	4,007	..	41	81	1,244	10,987
Paribgarh	80	311	21	20	2,010	63	21	1	..	3,751	600	..	6,425	..	5	116	6,099	21,246
Birabanki	150	8,600	..	213	1	..	650	1	1,323	1,379	573	9	17,156	..	16	343	7,519	25,729
Total	7,817	65,193	8,678	7,232	605	20,825	1,327	657	1,453	2,671	28,409	1,410	193	610,806	1,007	1,707	16,750	302,171	2,302,826

Singraur.¹—A tribe found only in the Fatehpur District to the number of 9,388. They claim to be Rājputs and descendants of one Sringi Rishi, who migrated from Ajudhya to Benares. They marry in the orthodox way, and widow-marriage is forbidden. They will eat lachchi pakki only with their own Brāhman family priest or members of their own tribe. Their claim to be Rājputs does not appear to be universally admitted, and by one account they are really Lodhas. Under their leader Daryāo Sinh they gave much trouble in the Fatehpur District during the Mutiny, and it is only in the Khāga and Khakhror Tahsils that their pretensions to Rājput origin are to any extent recognised.

Sirnet.—A sept of Rājputs found principally in the Gorakhpur Division. There are various accounts of the origin of the name. According to one story they got the title from some Muhammadan king in whose service they were. Their chief was in the habit of wearing on his head a cloth of gold called net, and the king, not choosing to recollect the Hindu name, called him Sirnet or "the man with the golden cloth on his head" (sir). By another account they take their name from some place called Srinagar. A third legend is told in connection with the Nikumbh sept and tells how one of them allowed his head to be cut off on a sword placed across the door-way in preference to bowing his head before one of the Delhi Emperors. Dr Oldham suggests that the name is derived from sira "head" and nela (Sanskrit netri, "a leader"). All these are mere speculations and of little value.

2. The Oudh story² is that the Sirnet kingdom of Bānsi in the Basti District was founded by Banwārī, the third son of Jaswant Sinh, Dikshit, but the Sirnets of Bānsi claim a higher rank than this legend would give them, and do not acknowledge any connection with the Dikshits. The Unaula Rāja told Dr. Buchanan that they came from Assam.³ The Gorakhpur branch ascribed the origin of the Satāsī Raj to Chandra Sen, who was an emigrant from Lahore. He treacherously murdered the Domkatār or Donwār Rāja and seized his dominions. In Basti they are said to allow their daughters to grow up to womanhood, and do not allow them to marry.⁴ In

¹ Mainly based on a note by M. Hashmatulla, S. C. S.

² Ghazipur Memo., I, 53, sq.

³ Elliott, Chronicles of Oudh, 35.

⁴ Eastern India, II, 353.

⁵ Selections of Records, North-Western Provinces, I, 217.

Ghâzipur they call themselves Nikumbh and claim kinship with the Gorakhpur family, as represented by the Râjas of Unaula, Bânsi, and Rudrapur. "They are one of the most noble looking races in the District and are generally well disposed and on good terms with the District officials; but quite ready to join in a general rebellion to recover their estates."

Distribution of the Sirnet Râjputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Fatehpur . . .	18	Azamgarh . . .	474
Bânda . . .	1,190	Lucknow . . .	6
Hamirpur . . .	1	Râj Bareilly . . .	153
Allahâbâd . . .	86	Faizâbâd . . .	56
Benares . . .	5	Bahrâich . . .	57
Ghâzipur . . .	5	Sultânpur . . .	333
Ballia . . .	495	Partâbgarh . . .	102
Oorakhpur . . .	11,810
Basti . . .	459	TOTAL . . .	10,486

Soeri, Soiri, Suiiri.—A small tribe found in parts of the Allahâbâd and Benares Divisions, about whom there has been much not very fruitful speculation. According to Mr. Risley¹ they are known by the names of Savar, Sabar, Saur, Sar, Sayar, Suir, Siwiri, and are "a Dravidian cultivating and servile tribe of Orissa, Chota Nâgpur, Western Bengal, Madras, and the Central Provinces. Colonel Dalton regards them as Dravidian, while Fredrick Muller, General Cunningham, and Mr. R. Cust place them on linguistic grounds in the Kolarian group of tribes. The evidence from language, however, is meagre and inconclusive; while, on the other hand, it is tolerably certain that the Savars, scattered and partially Hinduised as they are, represent the main body of an ancient race, an isolated fragment of which survives in the Malê or Saur of the Râjmahâl hills."

2. General Cunningham² identifies them with the Sauras about

¹ Tribes and Castes, II, 211, sq.

² Archæological Reports, XVII, 112, sq.

Damoh and Sâgar. The origin of the name Suvara, he says, "must be sought for outside the language of the Aryans. In Sanskrit Savara simply means 'corpse.' From Herodotus, however, we learn the Scythian word for an axe was sagaris and as g and v are interchangeable letters, savar is the same word as sagar. It seems, therefore, not unreasonable to infer that the tribes who were so called took their name from their habit of carrying axes. Now it is one of the striking peculiarities of the Savaras that they are rarely seen without an axe in their hands. This peculiarity has been frequently noticed by all who have seen them." In opposition to this it may be urged that the word Savara, if it be, as some believe, derived from sava "a corpse," comes from the root sav, "to cause to decay," and need not necessarily be of non-Aryan origin, while, on the other hand, no distinct inference can be drawn from the use of the axe by the Savaras, when it is equally commonly used by various other Dravidian jungle tribes, such as Korwas, Bhuiyas and the like.

3. Of the Savaras, who are supposed to have been the ancestors of the existing race, not much is known. Of them Sir W. Hunter writes¹—"The Savaras appear in very early Sanskrit writings and are spoken of with more than usual detestation. As the Sûdras or aboriginal tribes, who had been subdug into the servile caste of the Aryan Commonwealth, sprung from the feet of Brahma, so the Savaras and other forest races, who successfully withstood the invaders, proceeded from 'the sweat of a cow.' They were goblins, they were devils, they were raw eaters, they were man-eaters, and the Vishnu Purâna has concentrated the national antipathy towards them in its picture of a dwarfish race, with flat noses and a skin the colour of a charred stake. Another sacred text assures us that they were as black as crows, with tawny hair, red eyes, a chin jutting out, short arms and legs, and the typical flat nose. A third Sanskrit sage adds a protuberant belly, drooping ears and an ogre mouth. They seem to have made their individuality very strongly felt in ancient India. The beginning of their territory long marked the last point of the Aryan advance. They are often spoken of as border tribes, who resisted the Sanskrit invaders, scattered armies, and earned for themselves the name of the 'terrible Savaras.' Their name even found its way into Greek geographies, and the ancient kingdom of Kalinga was known to the distant islands of the Indian Archipelago, while still a terra incognita to Northern India." On the whole it seems at least probable that the name Savara was a generic title for the aggregate of the Dravidian races who inhabited the line of hills which rise along the south of the valleys of the Jumna and the Ganges. It is thus that they appear in the Katha Sarit Sāgara of Somadeva and in one of these tales the Savara is described as running up "stained with dust, bow in hand, with his hair tied up in a knot behind with a creeper, black himself and wearing a loin-cincture of vilva leaves," in short very much like what the Juāngs and similar tribes were almost to the present day.¹

¹ Oriental Researches, I, 176, sq.

² Muir, Ancient Sanskrit Texts, I, 331.

4. Modern observers give much the same account of them. Dr. Ball² describes the Savaras of Ganjam as small but wiry, often very dark in colour, and sometimes quite black, which agrees with Mr. Sterling's³ account of the tribe in Orissa. "Their hair is generally tied in a top-knot, and sometimes it is cut short over the forehead, two long locks being permitted to hang over the ears. A few individuals have frizzled shocks, with which no such arrangement is attempted. Most of the men have small square beards. Of these races in Bengal, with whose appearance I am most familiar, they reminded me most strongly of the Bhumiij, who belong to the Munda family; but I could also perceive in them some points of resemblance to the Dravidian Pahāriyas of the Rāj-mahāl hills. They have not, however, the manly bearing and good physique of the latter. Their manner of dancing resembles that of the Rājmahāl Pahāriyas, as I have on one occasion witnessed it, rather than that of either the Santāls or Kols."

5. Writing of Ghāzipur Dr. Oldham⁴ says that the Soiri strongly resemble the gypsies of Europe; their women wear a tartan dress, and often have a kind of horn projecting from the forehead as an ornament. They live in light and easily moved booths, made of grass and reeds; are fond of intoxicating drinks, and eat the flesh of swine and oxen. They procure the wives for their young men by kidnapping female children, and live principally by jugglery, coin-

¹ Tawney, Translation, II, 281.

² Jungle Life, 267.

³ Orissa, 42, quoted by Risley, loc. cit.

⁴ Memo., I, 57.

ing false money, and theft. They bring the bones of deceased relatives from long distances to the Ganges, which seemed to Dr. Oldham to indicate that the Ganges valley was once the home of the tribe. Another name of them is, he says, Sânsi, but they will seldom admit the name of either Sânsi or Soiri, and commonly say that they are Banjâras, Kanjars or Nnts

6. At the last Census the Soiris are found to have disappeared from the Districts of the Benares Division, except Benares itself. The fact is that within one decennial period the process of converting them into Râjputs has so far advanced that they now call themselves Sûrajbansis, and repudiate the name of Soiri. This is a very remarkable example, like that of the Kharwârs who have become Benbans Râjputs, of a process which has no doubt gone on extensively in former times, and by means of which there is no doubt that more than one of the Râjput septs has been formed. But in their appearance the so called Sûrajbansi Râjputs of Mirzapur show unmistakeable signs of non-Aryan origin, and there cannot be any doubt that they belong to the Dravidian branch and are closely akin to the Kols and Cheros who live in their neighbourhood. They assert that they give daughters to respectable septs like the Raghubansi, Bais, and Chandel, and receive girls from the Bais. But there is good ground for believing this to be incorrect, and the real fact seems to be that, if they ever intermarry with Râjputs, it is only with bastard members of some sept which bars marriage with such people. There is in almost every Râjput sept a class of people who are in the Western Districts as Gaurua and to the East as Suratwâl who are the result of connections of Râjput youths who find a difficulty, owing to infanticide or poverty, in finding respectable wives, with Natuas, Kanjars or other prostitutes. Such children are, of course, excluded from full tribal privileges, and it is with them that tribes like the Soiri, who are on their promotion to become a regular Râjput sept, form marriage alliances.

7 These Mirzapur Soiri Sûrajbansis have no very distinct tradition of their origin. Some of them say that they were once rulers of the Majhwâr Pargana in the Benares District, whence they were expelled by the Barhauiya Râjputs. They allege that they still procure priests, who are Sarwariya Brahmans, from the village of Ke-hopur in that Pargana.

Others say that, like the legitimate Sûrajbansis, they came from Ajudhya. Another account is that their first ancestor was a person named Garg, a Gantam Rājput, who settled at Bardilā near Mānda, in the Allahābād District, and kept as his mistress a Bhar girl, whose father he had treacherously killed. He is said to have lived in the time of Jny Chand of Kanauj. His descendants are alleged to be the present Soiri-Sūtajbansis.

8. However this may be, there is ample evidence from the customs of the tribe that they are not genuine Rājputs. Thus, they manage their tribal affairs by means of a tribal council (pañchāyat) which no genuine Rājputs do. They permit widow marriage and the levirate, and they have, as might have been expected, to pay heavily for brides, and for this reason many of them are unable to contract a regular marriage. Only those who are married wear the Brāhmanical cord (janu), and they have no regular rite of investiture, but merely hang it over their shoulders as they are going through the marriage ceremony. Again, they drive the plough with their own hands, which no real Rājput will do; and contrary to standard custom, when they are cremating the dead, they throw a handful of mustard seed (jarson) on the pyre. In other respects they follow the usual standard form in their domestic ceremonies. In fact, in their desire to be regarded as genuine Rājputs they are particularly careful to maintain a pretence of extreme orthodoxy.

9. They worship Mahābīr, Mahādeva, Sītala Māi, and Aminā and Bandē, two of the deified quintette of the Pānchon Pīr. A special worship of these deities is performed at the Nauātra of Kuār. Mahābīr and Mahādeva receive an offering of sweetmeats, a Brāhmanical cord, a piece of cloth dyed in turmeric, a burnt offering (hom), and a lamp lighted with ghī. To Aminā and Bandē they offer a plate of sweet cakes (rot), rice cooked with milk (jaur), and an image of Aminā made of silver. To the Pānchon Pīr generally they present sweet cakes (malīda) and a sacrifice of a goat or fowl, which is done by a Dafāli. To Sītala Māi they present a goat, cakes, and some halwa sweetmeat in the months of Chait and Kuār. Mahābīr is usually worshipped on a Tuesday in the month of Sāwan. All these offerings are consumed by the worshippers themselves, except that to the Pānchon Pīr which is taken by the Dafāli officiant.

10. They do not eat beef or drink spirits. They eat goat's flesh, mutton, venison, and birds like pigeons. None of the higher castes will take food or water from their hands. They naturally hold a low social rank, and are not regarded with more respect than Koiris. They are, in the Mirzapur District, in poor circumstances. None of them are landlords; a few cultivate as tenants, but the most of them are landless day labourers and serve as messengers or as stone cutters in the quarries about Chunâr. In Mirzapur, at least, they appear to have abandoned their old criminal habits, and are now a quiet, depressed race of people who very seldom come under the notice of the Courts.

Distribution of the Soiris according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS	Number	DISTRICTS	Number
Allahâbâd . . .	163	Benares . . .	2,023
Jhânsi . . .	3,058
Lalitpur . . .	12,373	TOTAL . . .	17,822

Solankhi, Solanki.—A sept of Râjputs. One derivation of the name is from the Sanskrit sulakṣhaṇa, "having auspicious marks." They are supposed to have succeeded the Chavûdas at Anhalwâda about 931 A. D.¹ The Bhâl and, according to others, the Baghel sept are an offshoot from them. Another name for them, Chalukya, is said to be derived from the fact that when created out of the Agnikunda they were formed in the hollow of the hand (chullu, challu). Of them Colonel Tod writes "—"Though we cannot trace the history of this branch of the Agnikulas to such periods of antiquity as the Pramâra or Chauhân, it is from the deficiency of materials, rather than any want of celebrity, that we are unable to place it in this respect on a level with them. The tradition of the Bard makes the Solankis important as princes of Suru on the Ganges, ere the Râthaus obtained Kanauj. The genealogical tree claims Lokot, said to be the ancient Lahore, as a residence, which makes them of the same branch (sakk) Madwân as the Chauhâns. Certain it is that in the eighth century we find the Langahas and Togrâs inhabiting Multân and the surrounding country, and the chief opponents of the Bhattis on their establishment in the desert. They were princes of Kalyân on the Malabâr coast, which city still exhibits vestiges of ancient grandeur. It was from Kalyân that a scion of the Solanki tree was taken and engrafted on the royal stem of the Chawaras of Anhalwâra Patan."

¹ Dr J. Wilson, Indian Antiquary, III, 227.

² Annals, I, 102.

In the reign of Chaond Râc, the son of this prince Bhojrâj, the kingdom of Anhalwâra was devastated by Mahmûd of Ghazni. Colonel Tod divides the Solankhis of Rajputâna into sixteen branches: Baghel, Bîrpur, Behila, Bhurta, Kalâcha, Langaha, Togra, Briku, Surki, Sirwariya, Raoka, Ranikiya, Kharâra, Tantiya, Almecha, Kalamor.

2. The Solankhis in these Provinces hold a respectable rank and give their daughters to Chauhâns, Bhadauriyas, and Jâdons; they take brides from the Katiyâr, Tomar, Râthaur, Bâchhal, Bais, Gaur, Pundir, Bargûjar, and some Chauhân families.

Distribution of the Solankhi Râjputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Sahâranpur . . .	6	Jhânsi . . .	88
Meerut . . .	184	Jâlsoun . . .	104
Bulandshahr . . .	375	Lalitpur . . .	23
Aligarh . . .	864	Benares . . .	60
Mathura . . .	154	Mirzapur . . .	12
Agra . . .	456	Jaunpur . . .	39
Farrakhabâd . . .	864	Ballia . . .	426
Mainpuri . . .	773	Gorakhpur . . .	842
Etâwah . . .	67	Bastî . . .	237
Etah . . .	5,636	Azamgarh . . .	7
Barcilly . . .	264	Lucknow . . .	73
Budâun . . .	1,553	Unâo . . .	71
Morâdâbâd . . .	131	Râc Barâli . . .	10
Shâhjahânpur . . .	359	Sîtâpur . . .	65
Pilibhit . . .	75	Hardoi . . .	115
Cawnpur . . .	60	Kherî . . .	109
Dânda . . .	94	Sultânpur . . .	4
Hamirpur . . .	78
Allahâbâd . . .	27	TOTAL . . .	14,305

Sombansi —A sept of Rājputs who claim to be of the race of Soma or the moon. Of them Mr Bennet¹ writes —“This tribe are found at the beginning of connected history at the Fort of Jhūs near Allahabād. They have no further traces of an immigration, and their tradition connects them for an indefinite period with their present dominions. The family worship is paid to five saints, four of them princes of the Sombansi blood, and the fifth a Gaharwār Raja of Benares, who successfully abstracted themselves into nonentity during the Dwapara Yuga. The principal of these, Ala Rikh or Rishi, gave his name to the town and Pargana of Alarkhpur, contracted into Aror, and since named Partabgarh, and is perhaps identical with the Atap Rikh of Dalmau tradition, who resided in the Ganges forests, and whose teaching enabled Dal and Balto attain their wide dominion.” A reference to these worthies will be found in the article on the Bhars. “Two remarks may be made here first, that the worship of the manes of their ancestors is common to all the Sombansis and several low castes in their neighbourhood. Barê Purukh (“the great old man ”) is one of the favourite local penates, and kârê Deo, the snake, the chief object of home-devotion which he shares with Siâu, the jackal. Another is that the most ancient tradition discovers the Sombansis on the northern, and the dawn of history on the southern, bank of the Ganges. An intermediate tradition, attested by the numerous remains of their peculiar forts, points to the existence of a Bhar Raj in the territory before and after occupied by the Chhatris. The commencement of the pedigree is, as usual, marked by some historical convulsion. Sakrama Sinha had three sons—one of whom went to Nepal, the second to Hardoi, while the third remained at Jhūs. The son of the last was cursed by a Muhammadan Faqir, Shaikh Taqi, and lost his kingdom. The usual posthumous son was born in exile, and, with the name of Lakhana Sena, founded the kingdom of Aror. One of his sons was a convert to Islam and in the eighth generation some subordinate centres of power began to branch off from the main Raj. No prince of this race attained distinction before Partâb Sinb, who, in the last quarter of the seventeenth century, consolidated the power of his clan, built a huge new fort at Aror, which has since been known by his name, and assumed all characteristics of independent sovereignty between the territories of the Bach-gotis, the Râja of Mânikipur, and the Kânhpuriyas whom he subsequently defeated."

¹ Clims of Rds B vols 31 32

2. There is a section of the sept called Chauhâna,¹ said to be descended from Bhîm Sen, who fought the Râkshasa Handavi and married his daughter. In Farrukhâbâd² the Pargana of Khakatman was entirely overspread by the Sombansis of the Baiyâgar (Vyâgra) gotra. They trace descent from Randhir Sinh, who lived thirteen generations ago. They founded the Chând dynasty in Kumaun, and trace their descent, some to Jhûsi, and some to Nepâl. The Rautela of Kumaun are descendants of a junior branch.³

3. In Sultânpur they are reported to take brides from the Bilkhariya, Tasbaiya, Chandanriya, Kath Bais, Bhâlê Sultân, Raghubansi, Gargbansi, Râj Kumâr, Bachgoti, and Bandhalgoti; and to give bridea to the Tilokehandi Bais, Mainpuri Chauhâns, Mahâl Sûrajbansis, and Bisens of Majhauri. They claim to belong to the Sûrya gotra. In Farrukhâbâd they are said to give brides to the Sûrajbansi, Râthaur, Chanhân, and Bhadauriya, and to receive girls from the Bamtelê, Chamar Gaur, Panwâr, and Gaharwâr. In Bareilly they take girls from the Salwant Gaur, Bargûjar, Tomar, Tânk, Bais, and Pundîr; and give girls to the Katheriya, Chanhân, Bhadauriya. In Hardoi they say that they belong to the Vyâgra gotra; take girls from the Chandel, Gaur, Gaharwâr, Pramâr, Bais, Abhan, and Nikumbh; while they give brides to the Chauhân, Râthaur, and Bhadauriya.

Distribution of the Sombansi Râjputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Sahâranpur	1	...	1
Muzaffarnagar	2	...	2
Meerut	2	...	2
Bulandshahr	196	...	196
Mathura	16	...	16

¹ Partidgarh Settlement Report, 112.

² Settlement Report, 13.

³ Atkins on, Himalayan Gazetteer, II, 427, sq. 504, 772, III, 432.

Distribution of the Sombansi Rājputs according to the Census of 1891—continued.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Moham- madans.	TOTAL.
Agra	30	...	30
Farrukhābād	4,521	27	4,548
Mainpuri	366	...	366
Etāwah	126	...	126
Etah	83	7	90
Bareilly	2,188	197	2,685
Budāun	333	...	333
Morādābād	133	386	519
Shāhjshānpur	2,200	8	2,208
Pilibhit	268	...	268
Cawnpur	1,214	...	1,214
Fatehpur	83	...	83
Banda	31	...	31
Hamirpur	603	1	604
Allahābād	2,817	...	2,817
Jhānsi	115	...	115
Jālaun	115	...	115
Lalitpur	2	..	2
Benares	394	51	445
Mirzapur	46	...	46
Jaunpur	2,515	32	2,547
Ghāzipur	2,000	..	2,000
Balha	85	...	85
Gorakhpur	617	..	617
Basti	179	697	876
Azamgarh	8,891	153	9,044
Tardā	126	...	126

Distribution of the Sombansi Rājputs according to the Census of 1891—concluded.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Maham- mudans.	TOTAL.
Lucknow	935	12	947
Unao	501	...	501
Rāi Barli	2,770	89	2,859
Sitapur	1,036	13	1,049
Hardoi	11,703	180	11,883
Kheri	1,910	604	2,514
Faizābād	1,300	...	1,300
Gonda	3,167	...	3,167
Bahrāich	1,002	67	1,069
Sultānpar	1,929	507	2,436
Partābgarh	19,823	64	19,887
Bārābanki	377	259	636
TOTAL	80,987	3,364	84,351

Sorahiya, Surahiya, Surāya.—A tribe of boatmen, fishermen, and cultivators in the Eastern Districts. They are usually classed as a sub-caste of Mallāb. According to Mr. Risley "there is a shadowy connection between the Surahiya and the Chāin. The former use the water vessels and huggas of the latter, but the Chāin assuming a higher rank, will smoke, but will neither eat nor intermarry with the Surahiya. The Surahiyas have no tradition of their own except the common one that their ancestors came from the West."

"They profess to be orthodox Hindus, and employ Maithil Brāhmans for religious and ceremonial purposes.

"In practice, however, the greater gods of the Hindu pantheon receive only occasional worship, and the working religion of the caste is concerned with the mysterious group known as the Pānch Pir, Koil Bāba, the boatman's deity, and Amar Sinh, a canonised Surahiya, who seems to be their special patron. In his honour a part of the house is daubed with cowdung on stated days of every month in the year except Pûs (December-January) and Chait (March-April), and goats, rice, sweetmeats, ghis, etc., are offered, and incense burned, the worshippers afterwards partaking of the offerings themselves. In point of social standing the Surahíyas rank immediately below the group of castes from whose hands Bráhmans will take water. Thus Koiras, Baráras, Gangotras, who belong to that group, will accept sweetmeats from Surahíyas, but will not eat boiled rice in their houses. The characteristic occupation of the caste is boating and fishing.

"Dr. Wise describes them as enterprising and hardy sailors, often met with in Eastern Bengal during the cold season, in large trading vessels laden with grain, pulse and fuller's earth, which is sold to Mahájans, and a cargo of rice slugged for the return voyage. They are very muscular and large boned, and their physique offers a striking contrast to that of the average Bengali boatman. Some Surahíyas have taken to cultivation, and hold land as occupancy and non-occupancy tenants. Their number, however, is comparatively small, and there are at present no signs of their developing into a sub-caste. In fact, even cultivating Surahíyas are ready to engage themselves as boatmen."

Sud—A Panjabí tribe of whom only a very small number is found in these Provinces. Of them Mr. Ibbetson writes—"The Sûds are almost entirely confined to the lower hills and the districts that lie immediately under them as far west as Amritsar. Their head quarters are at Ludhiana and the neighbouring town of Machhiwara. They are almost wholly mercantile in their pursuits, though occasionally taking service as clerks, and occupy a social position markedly inferior to that of either the Banya or the Khatri. They wear a sacred thread (janeu) made of three instead of six strands and many of them practise widow marriage. With the exception of a few, who are Sikhs, they are almost all Hindus, but are, in comparison with the other mercantile classes, very lax in the observance of their religion. They indulge freely in meat and wine, and in habits, customs, and social position resemble very closely the Káiyasths. The tribe is apparently an ancient one but I can obtain no definite information as to its origin. I attempted to make enquiries from some leading Sûds, but the result was the assembling of a

¹ Tribe Tribes and Castes II, 243. ² Indian Ethnograph, section 337.

Panchâyat, the ransacking of the Sanskrit classics for proof of their Kshatriya origin, and a heated discussion in the Journal of the Anjuman.

2. They are divided into two main sections : the Uchandiya or Sūd of the Hills, and the Newandiya or Sūd of the Plains. I find, however, that some of the Sūds of Hoshyârpur trace their origin from Sirhind. They also distinguish the Sūds who do not practise widow marriage from those who do, calling the former Khara and their offspring Gola, Doghla (hybrid) or Chikân. These two sections, of which the latter corresponds exactly with the Das and Gola Banyas already described, do not intermarry. The Sūds forbid marriage in all four gotras, and here again show how much less their tribal customs have been affected by their religion than have those of the Banyas and Khatriis. They are of good physique, and are an intelligent and enterprising caste, with great power of combination and self-restraint; and they have lately made what appears to be really successful effort to reduce their marriage expenses by general agreement. The extensive sugar trade of Ludbiâna and generally the agricultural money-lending of the richest part of that district are almost entirely in their hands. They are proverbially acute and prosperous men of business, and there is a saying:—‘ If a Sūd is across the river, leave your bundle on this side.’ The husbandman of the villages is a mere child in their hands.”

Distribution of the Sūd according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Sahâranpur . . .	12	Jhânsi . . .	23
Muzaffarnagar . .	1	Gonda . . .	20
Mathura . . .	80
Allahâbâd . . .	2	TOTAL . . .	147

Sunâr, Sonâr;¹ in the Hills Sona (Sanskrit Sucarana-kâra, “a worker in gold”); in Persian Zargar—the gold and silver-smith, who also engages in money-lending, pawnbroking, and general trade. The internal organization and tradition of the tribe seem to indicate that it is probably originally occupational and may have been recruited from various sources

¹ Based on enquiries at Mirzapur and notes by the Deputy Inspectors of Schools, Dehra Dûn, Pilibhit, Shâhjahanpur.

2 The tradition of their origin is thus told by the Sunārs

Tradition of origin of the Eastern Districts There was in ancient times a Niyārya, or purifier of gold, who lived near a jungle where Devī lived with the

Rākshasa Sonwa Daitya, whose body was of pure gold The goddess became tired of her demon lover and ordered the Niyārya whose name was Mair, to destroy him Mair approached the demon and offered to clean his body which had become very dirty The demon allowed him to experiment on his little finger and was satisfied with the result Then Mair told him that he could clean his whole body if he would agree to mount the fire The Rākshasa consented, and Mair arranged a pyre, on which he placed the demon, and then laid pieces of lead on his head and breast, so the demon was consumed, and Devī blessed Mair with the promise that he and his descendants should always possess gold and silver and work in the precious metals

3 The Bengal story adds that Mair was covetous and stole part of the demon's head, and, being detected with it by Devī, she cursed him and his descendants with poverty¹

4 According to the Bombay account In the beginning of the world a pair were produced out of the fire the male with a blow pipe, and the female with a burning hearth holding molten gold²

5 By another legend current in Northern India, Devī created Mair out of the dirt (masi) of her body, and induced him to destroy her demon lover In another form of the same story, Mair was created from the dirt scraped from the body of a Mai or holy woman, and in return he rescued her from a golden demon by throwing him into the fire In this version a Sarraf seizes the golden ingot, and the Mair who contented himself with the stray pieces of gold, received the Mair's blessing, so that he does prosper to this day Others again say that the gold demon was named Marka Asura, and that from him was derived the name of Mair

6 At the last Census the Sunārs were recorded under eight main

Tribal organization sub-castes Ajudhyabāsi, "residents of Ajudhya," Bāgri, which is also the name of a well-known Rājput sept; Ghatri nr Kshatriya, which are probably the same as the Tānk Sunârs of the Panjâb, who profess to be degenerate Kshatris nr Aroras; Deswâli nr "indigenous;" Kanaujiya or "residents of Kanauj;" Khatri, who are perhaps connected with the Chhatri sub-caste already referred to; Mair, who are apparently the original Sunârs of Upper India; and the Rastaogi, which is also the name of one of the Banya sub-tribes.

¹ Esley Tribes and Castes II 906

² Bombay Gazetteer XVII 123

7. To the east of the Province the internal structure of the caste is very elaborate. There are three groups or sub-tribes, which, according to Mr. Sherring's¹ account from Benares, should contain respectively twelve (bārah māl), fifty-two (bāwan māl) and twenty-two (bāis māl) sections. It has been found practically impossible to procure a complete list of these sections. The following is the enumeration in Mirzapur. The names given by Mr. Sherring have been given in parenthesis where they apparently correspond—Tāntê (Tātê), Phankê (Phaphê), Thākur (Thākur), Rajghatiya (Rajghatiya), Anguriya (Anguriya), Sugawa Bair, Sinh Tarora (Tandora), Andhâri kâ khatanga, Rāmtul (Rāmtali), Banwadhiya, Niyâriya, and Nawagiriha (Nangrahiya). Mr. Sherring adds three more—Phûl, Aldemaui, Nautakiya. He gives for the Sinh Tarora or Tandora sub-division thirteen minor clans: Sinh Tandora, Amlohiya, Jhaujhiya, Sugvalhair, Naktunâik, Alona, Nujariya, Tabakhiya, Ghosiwâl, Khâspuri, Parhiya, Ghatkiya, and Pûrabi. Of these the Sugvalhair is perhaps the same as the Sugawa Bair of the Mirzapur enumeration. Mr. Sherring does not give the sections of the other sub-tribes. The second group should, it is said, include ten sections, of which only nine are known in Mirzapur: Lâl, Mânîk, Husainâbâdi, Tankiya, Teliya, Sergharlotiya, Agariya, Bilaiya, and Kuthawa. The third group, according to Mirzapur enumeration contains thirty sections: Dewaiya, Kataiya, Chûrihâra, Bahariyâbâdi, Naubariya, Narbanîba, Teraba, Mardaniya, Qâzipuriya, Badipuriya, Mânîkपुरीहा, Bilâlapuriha, Hâjipuriha, Bigwa, Saharbâdiya, Kntmntiya, Sutaba, Thâna, Chikaniya, Charokota, Mathaiwân, Kith, Panadaha, Bâbhan, Sunâra, Amawatiya, Bilâra, Khatanga, Sarawaniya, and Lawaniya. Many of these sections appear to be of local origin; others, as the Chûrihâra and Bâbhan Sunâra, may indicate real or pretended connection with other castes. It is a good example of the extreme fertility with which castes like these produce their sections that there is no likeness between these lists and those given from Bengal and Bihâr by Mr. Risley.¹

¹ Hindu Tribes and Castes, I, 314, 27.

8 There is, again, another classification in parts of Mirzapur of Uttaraha, "Northern," Dakkhinaha, "Southern," Purahiya, "Eastern," and Pachhainwa, or "Western." In Bhadohi, north of the Ganges, there is a section known as Bhatkhauwa, so called, it is said, because a Sunar cohabited by force with a Kayasth woman, and her descendants were afterwards admitted to the tribe after eating rice (bhāt khāna). Another section is known as Kular Khanwa or "dog-eaters," because once, when a house was burnt down, a dog was burnt, and they ate its flesh, believing it to be that of a goat.

9 In Rohilkhand the Chhatrî sub caste is said to be so called because, when Parasurama was annihilating the Kshatriyas, one of them took refuge with some Sunârs and adopted their trade to save his life. They are said to have no less than four hundred and eighty four sections, some of whom, according to a list from Pibhhit, are Amethi, Gonthi, Mangayân, Musarma, Harashila, Karashila, Tatula Ugar, Bhuningariya, Bhujwâr, Bachhrajpurîya, Sûrajpurîya, Chandwariya, Namhan, and Medhya,—all of which are said to be the names of their head quarters. The complete census returns show 1,627 sub divisions of Sunârs, of which those of most local importance are the Desi of Saharanpur, the Pachhâdê of Meerut and Moradâbad, the Mahar of Agra, the Sundha of Fatehpur, Allahabad, and Banda, the Deogayan of Benares, the Audhya of Lalitpur, the Badhsahiya and Ganga of Mirzapur, the Indauriya and Jalesariya of Jaunpur, the Bholiya of Ghazipur, the Jaiswar and Kanak of Ballia, the Fatehpuri and Sakarwar of Gorakhpur, the Magahiya Sarwariya, and S. landarpuriya of Basti, the Deogayan of Azamgarh, the Syamkrishna of Gonda.

10 Besides these there are other numerous sections, which are said to be merely occupational or recruited from menial tribes, and are not accepted by the genuine Sunârs for purposes of marriage. All Sunârs appear to practise hypergamy and marry, when possible, their daughters in a section of rank superior to their own. The sub-castes are endogamous, and the sections exogamous. The strict rule is that a man cannot marry in his own, his mother's, his paternal grandmother's, his maternal grandmother's, his father's, paternal or maternal grandmother's section, or in that in which a brother or sister has been already married. In working out the connection the sections of both bride and bridegroom should be considered. They also do not marry within seven generations in the descending line. But it would seem that this rule is falling into disuse, and the tendency appears, at least in the eastern part of these Provinces, for the sections to coalesce into larger groups, such as the Uttarâha, Dakkinâha, etc., which are becoming endogamous, and isolate themselves by some special observances, such as the maintenance or abolition of widow marriage, and then fall back on the ordinary exogamous formula, which bars intermarriage between the first cousins on both sides.

11. The Sunârs have a tribal council (pañchâyat) presided over by a permanent chairman (mukhiya, chaudhari).

Tribal council.

Offences against morality or caste usage are usually punished by two compulsory feasts,—one patki and the other kachaki, at the expense of the offender. More serious offences are punished by compulsory pilgrimages, and by feeding and giving alms to Brâhmins, particularly to the tribal priests.

12. The Mair Sunârs admit widow marriage, which most of the others profess to prohibit; but the rule is not sufficiently precise to be defined. Polygamy is so far admitted that a man can marry again in the lifetime of his first wife with the approval of the council. As has been already noticed, there is so far a tendency towards hypergamy that parents desire to marry their daughters into a family of a higher rank than their own, while sons are married into families of the same or lower social rank. Concubinage is forbidden, and if a man keeps a strange woman he is put out of caste. Girls before marriage have a certain amount of freedom, but a girl detected in pre-nuptial infidelity is expelled from the family, and if her friends hesitate to take this step, they are put out of caste and not re-admitted until they pay a fine. Marriages are usually arranged by a Bhât. Girls are usually married at the age of ten or twelve; but the practice varies, the richer Sunârs having a preference for infant marriage. Those of higher rank give a dowry with their daughters; while those of a lower grade take money for their girls and often marry them to the highest bidder. It seems to be understood, however, that the bride price should be spent on the marriage ceremony and the feast which accompanies it. A man may, with the previous sanction of the council, repudiate an unfaithful wife, and a woman can, similarly, with the permission of the council, leave her husband if he be impotent, but, of course, she cannot be re married by the regular form.

Marriage rules.

- 13 There is nothing peculiar in the birth ceremonies. There are the usual observances on the sixth (cāhālāhī) and twelfth (barahī) day after confinement.

Birth ceremonies

The menstrual impurity lasts for three days, on the fourth the woman is purified by bathing. The time for the final ablution of the mother is fixed by the Pandit, who even decides what is the lucky direction in which she ought to sit while undergoing the final bath of purification. The Chamâr midwife receives as her fee, in addition to a money present a sieve full of barley or rice which is known as akṣat (Sanskrit akṣhata). On each of the two ceremonial bathings the barber's wife distributes, at the houses of the brethren, a preparation of ginger, molasses, and butter, known as basna, for which at each house she receives a present. They have the usual initiation into caste by means of the ear boring (hanchhedan, lanbedha). They also wear the sacred cord (janu), but this is not assumed with any special ceremony, and the investiture is done at marriage.

- 14 The marriage ritual, on the whole, corresponds with that of the higher caste Hindus. Rich people marry their daughters by the respectable (charhauwī) form, poorer people use the dola rite, where the ceremony is performed at the house of the bridegroom.

Marriage ceremonies

- 15 The dead are cremated according to the standard form. They perform the annual śrā dāha, and some of the wealthier class go even to Gaya for this purpose.

Disposal of the dead.

- 16 In Oudh a Sunâr, named Munna Dâs, who died nearly a century ago, established a sect the members of which have an annual fair at the tomb of their spiritual leader at Mandwa in the Kheri district¹. Some of their special customs are to salaam with both hands, to abstain from flesh meat, and to worship an unlighted lamp. To the east of the Province, if they are regularly initiated into any sect, it is the Râmanandî or Nânakpanthi. Their tribal deities are Mahâdeva, the Panchon Pir, Hardiha or Harda Lâla, Ambika and Phûlmatî Devi. These deities are worshipped in the months of Jeth and Sâwan. The Panchon Pir receive an offering of cakes (malîda), sharbat, and garlands of flowers. The priests of the Panchon Pir are drawn from the Dafâlî caste and receive a share of the offerings. They have also a special tribal Pir, known as Mîran Sâhib, who is worshipped on Thursdays with an offering of sweets. Kâlîka and the other deities receive cakes (pûrî), pottage (lapsî), sacrifices of sheep and goats, and pieces of coloured cloth (chûnari). Their priests are of the ordinary respectable Brâhman class. The meat offerings made by the worshippers are consumed by them after dedication. The family gods are worshipped in a special room in the house, where a platform (chabûtra) is erected in their honour.

Religion

¹ Oudh Gazetteer II 201

17. They observe the ordinary Hindu holidays. On the full moon of Asârh, they mix various grains together, parch them, scatter them in the corners of the house, and make a sacred circle all round outside to guard the family from evil. Snakes are worshipped at the Nâg-panchami, trees on Saturday, the Sun on Sunday, and the Moon at full moon. The special women's holiday is the Tîj or third day of the light half of Bhâdon. Women fast the whole night and day and with singing go and bathe in a stream or tank. But on the previous evening they keep silence as they go to bathe. They worship Bâwan or Bâmana, the dwarf incarnation of Vishnu, on the twelfth of the light half of Bhâdon. They also fast at the Anant, and, on breaking their fast, they eat only wheat bread and milk. The special girl's holiday is the Dasahra or the tenth of the bright half of Jeth, when they throw dolls into the water. They respect the nîm tree as the abode of Sîtala and the pîpal as the home of the other gods. Dead people often become troublesome ghosts and are worshipped by their relations.

18. Women are tattooed on the wrists. If this be not done, they will be unable to find their mothers in the next world. They swear on Ganges water, on their own heads, on the heads of their sons, standing in water, or by putting pîpal leaves on their heads. They believe in magic and witchcraft, to relieve the effects of which they employ Ojhas or Syânas drawn from the lower castes. To obviate the effects of the Evil Eye, a child is usually taken to a mosque and the Maulavi is asked to breathe over him when the service is over. They worship and protect the cow.

19. They will not touch a Chamâr, Dom or similar degraded castes. Some of them drink, but the habit is reprobated. As an intoxicant and tonic they use bhang. They eat the flesh of goats, sheep, and deer, but not beef or pork. Like all respectable Hindus, they will not eat onions, but use garlic instead, and they will not eat turnips or the kaddu pumpkin. They will eat the leavings of no one except those of their Guru. They salute their brethren in the forms hâm ! Râm ! or Jay Râm ! Sitarâm ! They are said to respect women more than other castes of the same social level. They eat pakki cooked by Bâhmans and Râjputs, and kachchi cooked by clansmen or by their Guru.

20 The best account of the business of the goldsmith is that given by Mr Maclean for the Panjâb. Their Occupation. business is making jewelry and money-lending and pawn-broking. They are very often "fences" and receive and dispose of stolen jewelry. They have a slang vocabulary of which a long list has been given by Sir H M Elliot.¹ There are, according to Mr. Hoey,² four classes of work in Lucknow: plain work (sâda) in which there is no ornamentation, such as ordinary gold and silver bangles, châsi or mat-work, which includes all work in which there are cut or engraved designs of flowers, letters, inscriptions, etc., jarâo or murassa, which includes all work involving the setting of stones and raised and joined work, jaldâr, which is of various classes, European goods, filigree, etc. Besides this there is a large business done by Sunârs in the manufacture of silver and silver-gilt vessels for the Indian market, and teapots, sugar-bowls, tumblers, etc., for English people. When manufacture of ornaments or vessels involves enamelling and gilding, these processes are not performed by the gold or silversmith, but by other artisans, known as the Minasîz or Minlammasîz.

21 The occupation of the Sunâr is certainly very ancient, as the deities in the Rigveda are constantly represented as wearing gold jewelry. Gold was undoubtedly very extensively found and used in the earliest times in India.³

¹ Supplemental Glossary, 215.

² Monograph, 184.

³ Rajen Ira Lala Mitra Indo-Aryans I, 277. Schrader, Prehistoric Antiquities, 172-175.

22. The Sunâr has a very indifferent reputation for honesty. "The ornament is the wearer's, but the gold remains with the goldsmith" (Sona Sunâr kâ, abharañ sansâr kâ) is a common proverb. To the west of the Province they tell how a Sunâr made the gold of his own Guru disappear before his very eyes, and then complimented the Guru on his miraculous powers. Another tale describes how a Sunâr wasted away with regret because he made a nosering for his mother without alloying it, and a variant of the tale goes on to tell that he never stopped till he cut off his mother's nose to get the jewel back. So they say Sunâr apni mû ki nakh men sô bhî churâta hai—"A goldsmith will steal a piece of his own mother's nosering." Another Sunâr went to the temple of Badari Nârâyan in Garhwâl and finding that his iron ring on touching the statue became gold, cut off one of the god's fingers for his private use. But the stamp began to ooze with unmistakable blood and from that day to this no Sunâr dares to come near the idol for fear of being struck blind.

Distribution of the Sunârs according to the Census of 1891.

Districts	Ajmalhys- bades	Bâgr	Chhatâr	Deswâh	Kannu pura	Khatâr	Mair	Rastâgi	Others	Muham- madans	Total
Dehra Dûn .		20	.	22					401		542
Shahjahanpur		451	73	765			761		2882		1935
Muzaffarnagar		501		3317			108		612	35	4606
Meerût		22		1,632			1313		2461		8,427
Bulandshahr				479			1033		2,679	113	4,304
Aligarh	1466		3130		4,605
Mathura .						1	3751		573	1	4326
Ajma .	137	.	598			167	181	1	4094	5	6073
Farrukhabad .	43		2918		25		53	19	2,623		5691
Morpari .	.	.	2315	.				.	1,900	..	4215
Etawah .	551	33	1426		199	210	219	53	2031	.	4,782
Etah .	.	.	1,608		8	..	72	7	1,773	..	3,468
Jareilly .	21		1857		.	.	122	3996	1320		7,316

Distribution of the Sunârs according to the Census of 1891—continued.

DistricTS.	Ajndhya- bâs.	Bagri.	Chhatrî.	Desâth.	Kann- iya.	Khatrî.	Mahr.	East Ind.	Others.	Muham- madans.	Total.
Bijnor	390	3,802	...	109	...	4,360
Budhan	1,886	707	606	1,305	...	4,501
Moradâbad	3,195	919	1,733	121	6,001
Shâhjâbâd	3,128	19	210	1,078	1,911	...	5,676
Pilibhît	...	21	1,186	682	942	159	...	2,990
Cawnpur	1,785	...	2,600	...	107	600	9	158	2,213	...	7,762
Fatehpur	805	...	750	...	29	121	8	...	3,109	...	1,921
Bâda	3,612	56	42	...	8	1,691	912	...	6,211
Hamirpur	6,201	1,065	743	...	6,409
Allahâbâd	511	...	61	...	61	12	9	19	7,427	...	8,106
Jhânsi	841	1,705	814	...	3,363
Jâloun	1,358	...	23	1,470	928	1	3,779
Lalitpur	6	...	42	95	1,774	...	1,917
Benares	121	2,031	303	...	4,795	...	7,313

Mirzapur	804							4 800	5 794
Jaunpur	258							5 959	6 217
Ghazipur	474			19	-82			7 800	8 670
Ballia	225			206				8 969	9 460
Gorakhpur	4 641	66	25	49	708		3	11 430	17 252
Bara	2 021							7 300	9 459
Azamgarh	2 250	93		128	444			5 414	8 369
Kumaun								681	691
Gairwal								4	4
Farid								302	983
Lucknow	7			69	18		491	2 802	5 181
Unao	923		1 107	4			9	2 833	4 023
Rae Bareilly	120		821	11	42		16	3 930	4 863
Shahpur	2		497	22			1	1 937	3 973
Mardan			1 378					204	3 817
Kheri			2 411					1 142	3 270
Laahore			1 328				406	334	4 891
	332		73		311		151	3 986	3

Distribution of the Sunârs according to the Census of 1891--concluded.

Divisions.	Ajudyas- hâsi.	Bagri.	Chhatrî.	Dowâli.	Kannu- jya.	Khatrî.	Mair.	Kastâdgi.	Others.	Maham- madans.	TOTAL.
Gonda	...	175	40	...	28	1,374	3,532	...	5,149
Tahadich	7	...	789	14	1,483	301	1,400	2	3,996
Enlâupar	7	30	3,950	21	4,023
Parthgarh	6	...	17	2,603	2	2,688
Larabanki	...	810	53	5	17	1,175	3,340	...	5,456
Total	20,091	2,956	22,121	9,993	1,106	11,358	20,653	16,127	137,703	320	255,328

Sunkar!—A small caste of labourers entirely confined to Bundelkhand. They appear to have no traditions of origin. They have a number of exogamous gotras, some of which are Margiya, Gotiya and Jaraliya. A man cannot marry in his own gotra or in a family with which another marriage connection has been formed within the memory of man. Both infant and adult marriage is allowed. Neither polyandry nor polygamy is allowed. The marriage ceremony is by the usual form of thanicar or revolutions round the marriage shed. Widows are allowed to marry and the levirate is preferred, but is not compulsory on the woman. In widow marriage the only observance is the feast to the brethren when the bride is brought home with her husband. A woman can be divorced for adultery with the consent of the tribal elders (mukhiya). A divorced wife may remarry in the caste according to the form allowed in the case of widow marriage.

2. They are Hindus and generally worship Devi. Their chief local god is Hardaul Lāla, who is worshipped at marriages. They burn their dead, and if a river be near the ashes are consigned to it; if not they are left on the burning ground. They offer the usual libations of water to the manes of the dead and feast the brethren.

3. Their chief occupation is dyeing cloth with the dl dye and making what is known as khārna cloth. Some of them burn lime and collect road metal (kankar) on the roads. They are allowed to eat goat's flesh and fish and drink spirits. They will not eat or drink with any of the medial castes, and no higher caste will take food or water from their hands.

Distribution of the Sunkar according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Bānda . . .	1	Jālaun . . .	497
Hamirpur . . .	352
Jhānsi . . .	546	TOTAL . .	1,396

Sūrajhans, Sūrajbansi (Sanskrit Sūrya-vansa, "the race of the sun").—A modern sept of Rājputs who claim to be the representatives of the famous solar race of Ajudhya. The Malla Râjas of Nepâl assert that they are sprung from Ansuvarma, who, according to the Chinese pilgrim Hwen Thsang, belonged to the Sûrajbansi family of the Lichchhavis of Vaisali near Patna.¹ The famous tradition, accepted by Colonel Tod, represents that in 224 A. D., Kanak Sen left Ajudhya with a large following and migrated westward to Gujarât. "This tradition, however, is opposed to the widely received story that Vikramaditya, of Ujjain, visited Ajudhya about 50 B. C., and found it totally desolate and covered with forest, and, after discovering the sites of the ancient temples and palaces, rebuilt them in their original splendour. Granting, however, that this discrepancy is one of dates and not of facts, this migration of the Sûrajbansis from Ajudhya to Gujarât, and finally to Chithor, is the only tangible fact we have to lay hold on the early history of Oudh."² The Pahâri Chhatri Râje, who now holds the Pargana of Khairgarh, in the Kheri district, asserts³ that his family governed at Sâraswati till the time of Râja Suthurot, whose son Marchhan Deva moved with his subjects to Ajudhya, where they reigned for one hundred and two generations till the time of Pitra Sen, who became King of Bhârat Khand or Northern India. There they reigned for eighteen generations, and then they moved to Kaphâr, in Kumaun, where forty-two more of them successively sat on the throne. The forty-second, Sârang Deva, emigrated to Kâthaur. The twentieth generation brings them down to Arjuva Pâla, who was a contemporary of the Emperor Akbar. "They claim then to have governed in different parts of India for more than two hundred and twenty generations prior to the sixteenth century. In spite of this long descent, it may be remarked that the family is hardly considered Chhatri at all; and even when they managed to marry their daughters to the Ahbans, Jânwârs, and Raikwârs, they had to pay large sums as bribes. Further, none of these places or parganas appear on the map of Kumaun, and the whole story is probably one of those fictions in which the bards of India are so fertile."

¹ Principally based on a note by M. Rādhā Raman, Deputy Collector, Jhānsi.

2. According to the legend current in Faizâbâd,⁴ their ancestor

¹ Atkinson, Himalayan Gazetteer, II, 514.

² Elliott, Chronicles of Uda, 21.

³ Oudh Gazetteer, II, 130.

⁴ Settlement Report, 212.

came from Kumaun three hundred and fifty years ago and settled at Sultānpur, a suburb of Fuzābād. He and his sons served a merchant named Dandās Sahu, who had excavated a large tank in the neighbourhood, to which he gave his name. There dwelt hard by, in the village of Belāhri Shāh Bhilha, a hermit of great repute. On one occasion the merchant found the hermit washing his teeth at the edge of the tank, and admonished him for so doing. This so enraged the hermit that he vowed that in future not even donkeys should drink at the tank, and in consequence water is rarely found in it. The merchant died childless, and his property fell into the hands of his Sūrajans servant, and thus the present family came to be founded. In Raē Bareh¹ their sons marry Chauhān and Bisen girls, and they give brides to the Amethya and Bais. There is a flourishing branch in Ghāzipur, who claim to have expelled the Bhaiss.²

3 There is another sept of illegitimate Sūrajbansis who are probably included in the enumeration of the last census. They are described under the head of Sonis.

4 According to one account the Sūrajbansis take wives from the Bachgoti, Rajkumar, Bandhalgoti, Sombansi, and Kalhans septs, and give girls to the Sirnet, Gautam, and Baghel. The poorer members of the sept are said to sell their daughters to rich Rājputs of any clan irrespective of social rank.

Distribution of the Surajbans Rājputs according to the Census of 1891

DISTRICTS	Number	DISTRICTS	Number
Sahāranpur . .	110	Agra . .	211
Muzaffarnagar	13	Farrukhābād .	30
Meerut . .	155	Mainpuri . .	2
Bulandshahr .	2291	Etāwah . .	4
Algarh . .	11	Kāsh	134
Mathura	45	Eareilly . .	93

¹ Settlement Report Appendix C

² Oldham Memoir I 63

Distribution of the Sūrajāns Rājputs according to the Census of 1891—concluded.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Bijnor	185	Gorakhpur	1,581
Budāun	12	Basti	14,670
Morādābād	223	Azamgarh	551
Shāhjahānpur	111	Kumaun	181
Pilibhīt	56	Tarāi	40
Cawnpur	166	Lucknow	211
Fatehpur	5	Unāo	9
Pānda	187	Rāj Bareilly	55
Hamirpur	40	Sitapur	191
Allahābād	429	Hardoi	185
Jhānsi	12	Kheri	458
Jālaun	13	Faizābād	4,124
Lalitpur	3	Gonda	826
Benares	1,295	Bahraich	415
Mirzapur	6,786	Saltānpur	315
Jaunpur	285	Partābgarh	172
Ghāziपुर	3,769	Pārabanki	2,777
Ballia	865	TOTAL	44,382

Suthrashāhi.¹—An order of Hindu mendicants who are found in very small numbers in these Provinces.

Of them Mr. MacLagan writes :—"The origin of this order is a little doubtful. According to one account, Suthra Shāh was a Budwāl Khatri of Bahraṁpur, in the Gurdāspur district, who became a disciple of Guru Arjan, and was called Suthra, "pure," from his truthfulness. Another story is that he was a follower of Guru Har Govind, and various tales are told of the quarrelsomeness and somewhat coarse humour which he displayed in the days of that Guru. Professor Wilson, again, says that the Suthra-shāhis look to Guru Tegh Bahādūr as their founder. Dr. Trumpp, on the other hand, states that the founder of this sect was a Brāhman named Sucha, and that they took their origin under Guru Har Rāē. His view is supported by a story, which says that when Guru Har Rāē was summoned by Aurangzeb to Delhi, Sathra Shāh took his place and so pleased the Moghal by his wit and wisdom that he was given special permission to levy a paisa from every shop in the realm. On the strength of this his spiritual descendants are most importunate beggars and will seldom leave a shop till they get alms. They proceed along the bāzārs with black caste marks on their foreheads and black woollen ropes (seli) twisted round their heads and necks, clashing together a couple of short staves (danda) and shouting mystic Panjābi songs indifferently in honour of Guru Nānak and the goddess Devi. They perform the funeral ceremonies of the Hindūs, burn their dead, and throw the bones into the Ganges; but they neither wear the Brāhmanical thread nor keep the scalp-lock. They indulge freely in intoxicants and seldom cease from smoking. Their profligacy is notorious and they are said to be composed mainly of spendthrifts who have lost their wealth in gambling. They are recruited from all castes, and they always add the title Shāh to their names. "They have," says Trumpp, "a Guruship of their own, and receive novices (chela); but there is no order or regular discipline among them." They live chiefly in large towns, and their principal Gurudwār is at Lahore. They are also said to have shrines at Nāgar Sain, near Benares, and at Patāla, but as a rule they have no sacred places and spend their time in roving mendicancy."

¹ Panjāb Census Report, 154; Wilson, Essays, I, 272, sq.; Tobolsen, Panjāb Ethnography, paragraph 522; Cunningham, History of the Sikhs, 65.

2 Whenever they visit these Provinces they are regarded with extreme abhorrence, partly on account of the coarse way in which they demand alms and abuse and lampoon those who do not give in to their demands, and partly because they have the reputation of enticing away the sons of respectable people to join the order. Some of them say that they are the followers of one Jhankar Shāh. Their distinctive mark is a straight line across the forehead made in black, and the ebony (abnūs) wood sticks which they beat together as they beg. A proverb current in the Eastern Districts says, in allusion to their rapacity,—Kehu mūc, kehu jiyē, Suthra ghor balāsa pyē "Any one may live or die, but the Suthrashāhi must have his drink of sugar and water."

T

Taga¹.—An important cultivating and land-owning tribe confined almost altogether to the Upper Ganges Jumna Doab and Rohilkhand. They are divided into a Hindu and Muhammadan branch.

2 The Tagas claim to be of Brahmanical origin, as Sir H. M. Elliot writes²—"They state that they were invited from Bengal to these parts by Raja

Traditional origin

Janamejaya for the purpose of exterminating snakes, which fable, though sufficiently ridiculous in itself, no doubt veils under an allegorical type a most important historical fact. The circumstances attending the sacrifice of the snakes by Janamejaya are preserved by local tradition in almost the same form as they are given in the Adi Parva of the Mahābhārata. A garrulous old Taga, who has perhaps never read or even heard a line of that poem, will tell you how Raja Parichat (Parikṣita) was bitten to death by a snake, notwithstanding all the precautions he took to avoid it by sitting himself on a platform in the middle of the Ganges, how that Utang (Utanaka), a Muni, persuaded Janamejaya, who had lately returned victorious from Takshasila, to avenge his father's death, how that they were all exterminated, except Takchak (Takshaka), brother of the Adityas, and Basuk (Vasuki), sovereign of the Nāgas of Patala, when, towards the end of the sacrifice, Astik, a holy man (of whose birth some marvellous particulars are given), came forward and obtained the promise of Janamejaya to spare their lives, which promise he dare not break, as it was exacted by a Brahman, and how that he was thus foiled in his object of sacrificing the chief offenders whom he had reserved for the close of the ceremony in order that none of their followers might come to their assistance.

"It was for the purpose of officiating at this serpent sacrifice that Janamejaya is said to have invited Brahmans from Gaur. After they had performed all that he requested of them, he offered them remuneration, which some rejected, and others received in the shape of land, on which account they were called Tagas from having consented to a relinquishment (tyāg) of their creed as Brāhmans, by pursuing agriculture, which they are forbidden by the Shāstras to practise.

¹ Based on notes by M. Muhammad Ali, Head Master Zillah School Dijnor, H. Fraser Esq. C.S. B. Joor.

² S. P. P. Glossary, S. V. Gaur Taga.

3. "Those who continued to retain their titles and privileges as Brāhmans took up their abode chiefly in Hariyāna, while the Tagas remained in the neighbourhood of Hastinapur, within a circle of about one hundred miles round the ancient capital, where they are found to this day. This is the usual account.

"It is remarkable, however, that almost all the clans of Tagas state that they came from Hariyāna, not from Gaur, and even derive their names from places in that country, as, for instance, the Chūlat who say that their name is derived from Chūla in Bikanir; and the Bikwāns, of Par Chāpar, who came from Bikanir. It is, therefore, far more probable that the Brāhmans were already tenants of Hariyāna, that they must have settled there before Janamejaya's reign, and that the Tagas only, and not the Brāhmans, owe their residence to that powerful Rāja; otherwise it is difficult to reconcile the apparent contradiction that he called Gaur Brāhmans from Bagal, and Gaur Tagas from Hariyāna; or it may be that the Brāhmans were invited from Gaur by Janamejaya, and afterwards settled in Hariyāna, and that the Tagas were invited by some succeeding Prince or Princes, after the Brāhmans had fully established themselves in Hariyāna; so that the occupation of the country round Hastinapur by the Tagas may be later than the occupation of Hariyāna by the Brāhmans. But what militates against this, and confirms the other hypothesis, is that it is expressly stated in the concluding section of the Mahābhārata that Janamejaya, 'having concluded the ceremonies of the sacrifice on which he had been engaged, dismissed the multitude of Brāhmans and other pious mendicants who had thronged to the place, loaded with presents, to their several abodes.'" believed to have been a Scythian race, with the snake as their totem or not, there seems reason to believe that the Tagas are probably the earliest inhabitants of the Upper Jumna lowlands (Kidder), holding villages that have been untouched by the course of the stream for a longer period than most of their neighbours.

5 Lower down the Ganges-Jumna Duâb, the Tagas, Gaur Brâhmans, and Nagars of Bulandshahr firmly believe that Ahîr in that district (said to be derived from ahishâra, "serpents destroyed") was the spot where their ancestors assisted Râja Janamejâyn in the snake sacrifice and got largesses and assignments in return. Another legend gives a less respectable account of their origin. It is said that having been tempted by the munificent gifts offered by a certain Râja to married Brâhmans, a Gaur bachelor took in his company a common prostitute to the Râja's Court to pass as a married man and obtain the gift. The device succeeded, but was soon after discovered, and then to escape the Râja's displeasure the Brâhman kept the prostitute for good as his wife. The progeny of this pair imitated the pure Brâhmans by wearing the Brâhmanical cord (tâga), and hence they are called Tagas, or Brâhmans, in no other respect than that of wearing the cord. As an argument in support of the story, it is said that Taga women are still uncommonly fond of ornamenting their persons, a peculiarity supposed to be derived from their original ancestress.¹

6 On the whole it seems not unreasonable to believe that, like the Bhuinhar Brâhmans of the eastern part of the Province, the Tagas may have been originally Gaur Brahmins, who lost status by abandoning priestly functions and taking to agriculture. At the same time their appearance, and the recognition of the Dasa or inferior grade, who allow widow marriage and are admittedly not of blue blood, leads to the inference that there has been at one time some admixture with other races. How far they really intermarry with other Brahmins is not quite certain. In Gurgâon² it is said, that some thirty years ago one Gordhan, a Taga, was about to marry his daughter to a Gaur Brâhman, but a council of Gaur forbade it. Sir H. M. Elliot says that in the Dehli territory the Gaur Brâhmans and the Tagas frequently intermarry, but that the practice is not observed by the Gaur of the Duâb and Rohilkhand.

¹ Râja Lachhman Singh Bulandshahr Memo 134 150 sq.

² Settlement Report 37

7. The records of the last Census show no less than one hundred and fifty-five sections of the Hindu and fifty-five of the Muhammadan branch. Many of these are well known Rājput or Brāhman tribes, such as Bāchhal, Bais, Bargala, Chauhān, Chandel, Dīkhīt, Gaur, Sanādh, Vasishtha. These appear to be exogamous groups framed on the Brāhman or Kshatriya model. But the really important division is into Dasa or Daswān, Bīsa or Biswān, the "tens" and the "twenties," the former of whom allow widow marriage, which the latter prohibit. If a Bīsa allows this objectionable practice, he falls at once into the Dasa grade.

8. The Dasa and Bīsa form two endogamous groups, and within these groups they follow the usual rules of Brāhmanical exogamy. Polyandry and sexual license before marriage are strictly prohibited. Polygamy is allowed only when the first wife is barren. The age for marriage is from eight to fifteen. There is no legalised divorce; a faithless wife is simply expelled from the house. There is no bride-price; but it is usual to give a dowry with the bride. The domestic ceremonies are of the standard orthodox type.

9. The Hindu branch appear chiefly to worship Mahādeva. They are very careful to propitiate the sainted dead of the household. One way of appeasing the spirit of the dead man is to make an unmarried boy drink milk under a pīpal tree on the death day in every fortnight for a year, and then on each succeeding anniversary. Their priests are generally Gaur Brāhman of an inferior grade.

10. The Tagas are a fine sturdy set of yeomen, all or nearly all occupied in agriculture. They are not as good farmers as the Jāts in their neighbourhood, but much more industrious and respectable than the Gūjars.

Distribution of the Tagas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Hindus.	Mohammadans.	TOTAL.
Debra Dūa	12	...	12
Sahāranpur	16,961	2,855	18,816
Muzaffarnagar	12,792	6,637	19,429

Distribution of the Tagar according to the Census of 1891—concl'd

DISTRICT.	Hindus	Muhammadans	TOTAL.
Meerut	43,290	12,019	55,309
Bulandshahr . . .	6,608	10	6,618
Bijnor	10,952		10,952
Etahnaun . . .	21	.	21
Moradabad . . .	9,822	6,537	16,359
Shahjahanpur . .	1	..	1
Tarai	49		49
Hardoi	1		1
Total	99,109	28,118	127,227

Tambâkugar, Tamkhera.—A dealer in tobacco (tambâku) This is hardly a caste, but was recorded as such in some of the Census schedules. One of the earliest references to tobacco in India is in the memoirs of the Emperor Jahângîr¹ where he writes,—“As the smoking of tobacco (tambâku) had taken very bad effect upon the health and mind of many persons, I ordered that no one should practise the habit. My brother Shâh Afbâs, also being aware of its evil effects, had issued a command against the use of it in Irân. But Khâm Alam was so much addicted to smoking that he could not abstain from it and often smoked.”

Tamboli, Tamoli²—(Sanskrit tambûla, the pungent and aromatic leaf of the piper betel)—The caste which is devoted to the cultivation and sale of pân (Sanskrit parna, “the leaf,” par excellence) The man who cultivates the plant is properly called Barai (q v.), but the respective functions of the Tamboli and Barai are not clearly defined. In Benares, according Mr Sherring,³ there is no real distinction between them. There the Tamboli sells betel-nut as well as pân, and appears to be more of a wholesale trader than the Barai. The sub-castes of both Tambolis and Barais are very similar, and if there is any real distinction it is very ordinarily overlooked.

¹ Dowson & Elliot, VI, 251, Indian Antiquary, I 164

² Based on enquiries at Muzapur and notes by N Chhoté Lal, Archaeological Survey Lucknow, Mr A B Bruce, C S, Ghazipur

³ Hindu Tribes and Castes I 330

2. At the last Census they were enumerated under the sub-castes of Chaurasiya, who seem to take their Internal structure.

name from Pargana Chaurāsi in the Mirzapur District; Barai, Jaiswār, from the town of Jais in the Rāi Baraili District; and Kathyār. In Agra we find the Barai, Chaurasiya, and Kathwār, who are probably the Kathyār of the Census enumeration and do not allow widow marriage. In Gorakhpur are the Tenduhāra, who are named from the tendu (Sanskrit tim-daka) the tree diospyros enteroptera, the fruit of which is occasionally eaten, and the Jaiswār. In Lucknow we find the Chaurasiya, Jaiswār, Sribāstāv, who are named from the town of Srāvasti, the present Sahet-Mahet of Gonda, and the Jaunpuriya. In Ghāzipur we have the Nāsarkhāni, Chaurasiya, Bhalesiya, and Mathesiya or Modhesiya, who are residents of Madhyadesa, "the middle land." Another enumeration from Ghāzipur gives the sub-castes as Nāsarkhāni, Kharwāro, and Turk or Muhammadan Tambolis. In Allahābād are the Chaurasiya, Jaiswār, and Sribāstāv. The complete Census lists show 241 sub-divisions of the usual type, many taken from well known castes and septs, such as Aheriya, Bagheli, Baiswāla, Chhattri, Gaur, Gaharwār, Jādon, Janwār, Kabār, Kāyasth-wār, Kalwār, Luniya, Nāgbansi, Nandbansi, Raghubansi, Rājput, Rāthaur, Rāwat, Thākur, with local sub-divisions, like Aharwār, Ajudhyabāsi, Bindralani, Chaurasiya, Gangapāri, Jaiswār, Jamunapāri, Jaunpuriya, Kanaujiya, Mathuriya, and Sribāstavi. All these are endogamous, and the only regular rule of exogamy is that a man cannot intermarry with a family with which, during human memory, his family has been connected by marriage.

3. Among the better classes marriage usually takes place in infancy, and the bride does not come to live with her husband until she is nubile, when there is a second ceremony (gauna.) All the Tambolis, except the Kathyār sub-caste, appear to allow widow marriage and the levirate, but the latter is not compulsory on the widow. Polygamy is allowed, and a man can put away his wife by leave of the tribal council if she is guilty of adultery or of some other act which involves excommunication from the caste. In their domestic ceremonies the Tambolis follow the orthodox rules current among the trading castes of the same social grade. They cremate their adult dead and perform the usual śrāddha. At marriage the Tambolis of the east of the Province have a rite, which seems special to them, called Ahorbakor, the bride and bridegroom jointly pay five visits to the family of the other before they finally live together.

Domestic ceremonies.

4 By preference they seem to be usually Vaishnavas. But they have no special connection with any particular sect. In Lucknow some are said to be Saivas, Śāktas, Nanakshāhis or Kabīrpanthis. There some worship Brahm Gusān and Narsinha, and some affect the Vama-chāri worship of Bhīṭari Devī. Early in the morning, when they open their shops, they burn some incense before the little wooden box in which they keep their pān, with a view to propitiate Lakshmi, the goddess of wealth. In November the Tambolis of Ghāzi-pur go to a place called Magha, in the Patna District, where a particularly fine kind of pān, called Magahi pān, is grown. There is here a temple known as that of Sokha Baba, containing a lingam of Mahadeva, which they all worship and invoke prosperity in their trade. Some of the offerings are brought home and distributed among friends and relations. On their return, an offering of a bundle and a quarter of the leaves is made to Mahabir on a Tuesday, which is his day.

5 The special occupation of the caste is the cultivation and sale of pān. The leaves are made up and sold in bundles of two hundred each, known as a dholi of pān. There are numerous varieties.

Mr Hoey¹ enumerates in Lucknow the Kapūri, Kaker, Bangla or Bengali, Begami, Desiwar or "foreign," and Kalkatiya or Calcutta pān. Abūl Fazl names six varieties:² "The leaf called Bilāli is white and shining, and does not make the tongue harsh and hard. It tastes best of all kinds. After it has been taken away from the creeper, it turns white with some care after a month, or even after twenty days, when greater efforts are made. The Kaker leaf is white, with spots, and full, and has hard veins. When much of it is eaten the tongue gets hard. The Jaiswar leaf does not get white, and is profitably sold, mixed with other kinds. The Kapūri leaf is yellowish, hard, and full of veins, but has a good taste and smell. The Kapūrkant leaf is yellowish-green, and jungent like pepper; it smells like camphor. You could not eat more than ten leaves. It is to be had at Benares, but even there it does not thrive in every soil. The Banglah leaf is broad, full, hard, plushy, hot and pungent." The leaf is made up for sale with catechu (katha), lime (chūna), betel-nut (safuri), and cardamoms (ildchi), and is then known as Usra or gilauri.

¹ Monograph 189

² Blochmann Ann. Alur. I 72

6 The Tamboli, from his connection with the production and sale of what is almost a necessity in Indian life, holds a fairly respectable position. They observe a high degree of personal purity, and will eat laçchi only if cooked by a member of their own caste, and pakki cooked by a Brāhman or Halwāi. They will eat goat's flesh and fish, but not, of course, beef or pork. Many of them are Bhagats, and avoid the use of meat and spirituous liquor, the latter of which is permitted to those under no special vow. They have a special reverence for the conservatory (bāli) in which the creeper is raised, which is carefully protected from any kind of ceremonial pollution, and for the scissors (sarautā) used in preparing the leaf. Pān of course finds a place in the popular wisdom of the countryside:—

Sukhat achchhi baithe khāigē Nāgar pān. Duri sukhat baithe kalaiye nāh aur kōn—"Sit in good company and eat Nāgar betel: sit in bad company and you get your nose and ears cut off."

Bina vasilē chākari, bina dhāl kē jūrān, ye tīnon phāke lagēa, bina tamāku pān—"Service without a patron, a young man without a shield, and betel without tobacco are all four tasteless."

Distribution of the Tambolis according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	HINDUS.					Moham- madans	TOTAL.
	Barāi.	Chau- rasiya.	Jais- wār.	Kath- yār.	Others
✓ Dehra Dūn . . .	24	63	12	...	37	...	135
Sabāranpur	7	97	...	104
NozāBarnagar	11	61	...	72
Meerut	320	3	323
Bulandshahr	94	77	171
Aligarh	5	429	8	442

Distribution of the Tambolis according to the Census of 1891—continued.

DISTRICTS.	HINDUS.					MULAM MALANS	TOTAL.
	Barai.	Chau- rasiya.	Jais- war.	Kath- war.	Others.
Nathura	24	1	...	510	13	548
Agra	164	...	44	448	44	700
Farrukhabad	1,276	...	837	81	...	2,194
Mainpuri	178	12	404	241	...	835
Etawah . . .	25	721	...	34	162	...	942
Etah	2	...	218	106	29	355
Dareilly . . .	18	303	...	579	20	...	922
Dijnor	20	73	...	93
Budoun	252	95	...	347
Moradabad	222	40	262
Shahjahanpur . . .	36	107	...	1,533	160	...	1,926
Pilibhit	51	6	...	491	...	548
Cawnpur . . .	50	5,261	52	6	363	...	5,738
Fatehpur	2,658	269	...	2,927
Banda . . .	22	912	0	9	337	...	1,286
Hamirpur . . .	17	702	172	...	891
Allahabad	183	183
Jhansi	25	2	454	33	...	514
Jalaun	410	509	...	949
Benares	1,146	172	...	1,117	...	2,435
Mirzapur	429	31	...	460
Jaunpur	11	11
Ghazipur	2	30	41
Gorakhpur . . .	41	146	559	...	325	...	1,071
Basti	217	11	228
Azamgarh	60	...	60

Distribution of the Tambolis according to the Census of 1881—continued.

DISTRICTS.	Rajputs					Khatm mulas	TOTAL
	Dist.	Cham- pura	Jam- pur	Khat- pur	Others
Etawah . . .	—	—	—	—	35	—	35
Gazipur . . .	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Tanki . . .	—	1	—	15	127	—	143
Lucknow . . .	—	5,297	422	50	729	—	6,528
Unao . . .	106	8,500	2	1,720	340	—	9,978
Etah Bara . . .	—	6,505	746	906	602	—	8,863
Shajapur . . .	730	990	1,901	1,970	797	—	6,553
Hardoi . . .	—	453	—	—	14	—	467
Etah . . .	153	—	1,153	—	24	—	1,370
Faizabad . . .	—	2	545	—	45	—	592
Gonda . . .	—	—	347	—	13	—	360
Khatkhat . . .	—	39	3,933	—	1,625	6	5,603
Sikandar . . .	—	1	136	—	273	—	410
Barabanki . . .	—	2,517	1,993	—	684	—	5,294
TOTAL . . .	1,237	30,223	12,120	8,365	12,671	270	73,911

Tánk.—A sept of Rájputs in the Western Districts. Regarding the Tak or Takshak Colonel Tod has various curious speculations.¹ General Cunningham² says that the Takkas of the hills are Turanians, "because they are certainly not Aryas." M. St. Martin identifies the Ganganoi or Tanganai of Ptolemy with the Tangana of the Mahábhárat and the Tánk Rájputs.³

2. The Tánk Rájputs in Mainpuri⁴ say that they are Yaduvansis, and claim kinship with the Yádava princes of Jaysalmer and Kuráli. They originally settled in a cluster of twelve-and-a-half villages round Kosma, in the Ghior Pargana, which still

¹ Annals, I, 111; Dowson's Elliot, History, I, 504, Appendix.

² Archæological Report, II, 6, 829.

³ Indian Antiquary, XIII, 376.

⁴ Settlement Report, 21.

remains the seat of the clan. In former times they were noted for their predatory habits, and even now the character of the heads of the clan is not above suspicion. During the reign of Akbar, the Kosma men, headed by the two sons of their late chief, attacked and plundered some imperial stores passing through the District, and as a punishment for this daring robbery, one of the brothers was carried off to the capital and there compelled to embrace the Muhammadan faith.

3. This accounts for the singular division even now existing of the Kosma family into two sections: Kosma Musalmán and Kosma Hindu. It is a curious fact that Ja'afar Khán, the head of the Muhammadan section, is, equally with Guláb Singh, the head of the Hindu branch, looked up to by the whole Tánk community, and his joint headship is fully recognised by every member in matters affecting the internal economy of the clan. The customs of the Muhammadan brotherhood still partake greatly of a Hindu character. At the ceremonies attendant on births, marriages, deaths, and at meetings of the tribal council amongst the Hindu brotherhood, Ja'afar Khán is always summoned and takes a prominent part.

Distribution of the Tánk Rájputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT	Numbers	DISTRICT	Numbers.
Sahāranpur . . .	13	Bodāun . . .	5
Meerūt . . .	58	Morādābād . . .	43
Lalandsbahr . . .	21	Shāhjahanpur . . .	220
Mathura . . .	62	Prithvī . . .	101
Agra . . .	147	Cawnpur . . .	150
Farrukhābād . . .	128	Banda . . .	1
Mainpuri . . .	1,104	Jhānsi . . .	617
Etāwah . . .	110	Jālaun . . .	87
Etah . . .	62	Ghāzipur . . .	1
Dareilly . . .	4	Tarāi . . .	17
		TOTAL	2,082

Tarkihâr [tarki, "a woman's earring," so called because originally made of the palm (lâr) leaf; lâra maker].—The caste who make women's ear ornaments out of the palm leaf. They are a purely occupational caste. They call themselves in Mirzapur Bais Râjputs. In Gorakhpur they apparently pretend to be Brâhmanas, as, according to Dr. Buchanan¹ "twenty-six houses of Brâhmanas, but of what kind is not known, have suffered disgrace by making earrings of palm leaves, and are excluded from intermarriage with others; still, however, they are entitled to receive the whole Gâyatri, and should be exempt from capital punishment." The Census returns show 37 endogamous sections of the Hindu and two of the Musalmân branch, which are all of the type already familiar among these minor castes. They practise the ordinary rule of exogamy, which forbids marriage in the family, of the paternal and maternal uncle and the paternal and maternal aunt for three generations. Girls are married between the ages of five and eleven. A man can marry a second time while his first wife is alive, only with the sanction of the tribal council (panchâyat), but this permission is given only on the condition that the applicant gives two feasts to the clansmen.

2. To the east of the Province marriage is conducted in the four standard forms: charhawwa for respectable people, dola for poor people, sagâi for widows, and adala badala or exchange when two families agree to exchange daughters, which Dr. Westermarck calls the simplest way of purchasing a wife.² In the regular forms of marriage the binding portion of the ceremony is the solemn giving away of the bride (kanyâdân) to the bridegroom by her father and the rubbing by the bridegroom of red lead on the parting of the bride's hair (sandûrdân). Widows can remarry by Sagâi, which they assert to be a practice of comparatively recent origin among them. The levirate is permitted under the usual conditions, but is not obligatory. The only ceremony in widow marriage is the bridegroom eating with the friends of his future wife, dressing her in a suit of clothes and ornaments provided by her future husband; and giving a feast to his clansmen when he introduces her into his family.

Marriage.

¹ Eastern India, II, 451.

² History of Human Marriage, 330.

3 They are orthodox Hindus and to the east of the Province employ Tiwari Brahmans of the Sarwariya tribe as their family priests. They usually worship Devi in her form as Bhāgawati, the Pauchon Pir, and especially Ghazi Miyan to the south of Mirzapur, Hardika Deva or Hardaur Lala. These deities receive an offering of sweetmeats, cakes (malīla) betel leaves, garlands of flowers, and occasionally a cock is sacrificed. This is not consumed by the worshippers but presented to a Muhammadan faqir. Bhāgawati is sometimes worshipped by pouring a mixture of pepper, sugar, and water (marchan) at her shrine.

4 Their primary occupation is making the tarki, a cylinder of folded palm leaves nearly an inch in diameter and with an outer boss decorated with beads, etc., which is worn by low caste Hindu women stuck through a hole in the lobe of the ear. They also go about to fairs and sell red lead (sindur), and forehead spangles (tskuli), which are worn by married women. They also sell various kinds of spices. They use liquor and eat the flesh of sheep, goats, deer, and fish. Brahmans will drink water from their hands. Only Chamars and menial tribes will eat kachhi or pakki cooked by them. They eat pakki cooked by all the Vaisya tribes, except Kalwars, Tehs, and Bharbhūnjas.

Distribution of the Tarkis according to the Census of 1891

DISTRICT	Hindus	Muham- madans	TOTAL
Cawnpur	59		59
Fatehpur	100		100
Banda	309	8	317
Allahabad	317	6	323
Mirzapur	7		7
Jaunpur	48		48
Gorakhpur	13		13
Azamgarh	3		3

Distribution of the Tarkihârs according to the Census of 1891—concluded.

DISTRICT.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Lucknow	811	...	811
Unão	123	...	123
Râs Bareli	361	...	361
Faizâbâd	33	...	33
Gonda	9	...	9
Bahrâich	96	...	96
Sultânpur	117	...	147
Partâbgarh	200	...	200
Bâralanki	62	...	62
TOTAL	2,733	14	2,747

Tarmâli.—A sub-caste of Pâsis who have been separately enumerated at the last Census. They take their name from târ-mâlva "to press the toddy palm tree." They are recorded to the number of 27 only in Faizâbâd.

Tawâif (plural of taifa, "a troop or company of dancing-girls"¹).—The caste of dancing-girls and prostitutes. The term is a general one, but is more generally applied to those who are of the Muhammadan faith. The Hindu branch is often called by the title Pâtar, Patoriva, Pâtur, Patariya from the Sanskrit pâtra, "an actor." Kanchan, which is usually derived from the Sanskrit kanchana, "gold" (but this is far from certain), is usually regarded as the equivalent of Tawâif and denotes the Muhammadan branch. The ordinary prostitute, of whatever religion she may be, is often known as Randi (rânr), Sanskrit randa, "mutilated," "a widow," from which class, where widow marriage is prohibited, the class is commonly recruited, or Kasbi (Arabic Kasb, harlotry). The large class who prostitute sub rosa or live as kept mistresses are generally known as Khanagi, "domestic" (kāṇa, "a house") or Harjāi, "a gadabout." The last Census classes most of the Hindu dancing-girls and prostitutes as Paturiya, and the Muhammadans as Tawâif. The lists of the so-called sub-castes of the Paturiya contain a number of names, no less than forty-nine in all, which it is impossible to class by any definite principle. Of these the best known are the Bhārui (Sanskrit bhāta, "wages"), who is a pimp or pander, Gandharap, who represent, in name at least, the Gandharva of the old mythology, who lived in the sky, prepared the soma juice for the gods, were partial to women, over whom they exercised a mystic influence, Kanchan, Kashi, Kashmiri, who are usually classed with Nats, the Rāmjanī (Sanskrit rāma-janī "charming woman,") whose name the English sailor and soldier corrupts into Rummy Johnny, and the Rāsdhārī, a name which means "singer," and is specially applied at Mathura to a set of Brahmins who perform a sort of miracle play describing the loves of Krishna and his consort Rādhā.¹

¹ Mainly based on enquiries at Mirzapur and notes by Chaudhri Dhyân Singh, Moradâbâd; M. Chhotê Lal, Lucknow; M. Sayyid Ali Bahâdur, Partâbgarh.

2. Similarly the term Tawâif includes a number of distinct classes. Among these are the Gandharap, Kanchan, Kashmiri, Paturiya, and Rāmjanī, already mentioned, among the Hindu class, and the Baksariya or "those who come from Baksar" in Bengal, the Hurukhiya, who take their name from the huruk (Sanskrit hṛd-duka), the small drum, shaped like an hour glass, to which they dance, the Kabūtari, who is usually classed with the Nats, and is so called because she has the fluting ways of a pigeon (labūlar), the Mangta or "beggars," the Musasi, who is a Dom singer, the Miskar or Mirshukār, "the chief huntsman," who is a Bahelhiya, and the Nāik or Naika (Sanskrit nayaka, "leader"), a term specially applied to the mistress of a brothel. In addition to these is the Gaunharin or "attendant" (Sanskrit gamanadhāra), who attends at festivals and occasions of rejoicing, and sings and dances to the music of the violin (sarangi) and the drum (tabla), the Brajbāsi or "resident of the land of Braj" who, like the Rāsdhārī, is associated with the dances in honour of Krishna and Rādhā, and the Negpitar, who receives dues (neg) for performances.

3. Of such a miscellaneous class as this it is impossible to give more than some notes of the more interesting sub divisions

4. Of the Kumaun Nāiks Mr. Atkinson writes :—“The Nāiks, whose pretty village in the Rāmgarh valley and settlements at Haldwāni are so striking, owe their origin to the wars of Bharati Chand with Doti, when the first standing armies in Kumaun took the field, and the soldiers contracted temporary alliances with the women of the place, whose descendants became known as Khatak-wāla, and eventually, Nāik. The offspring of these professional prostitutes, if a male, is called Nāyak or Nāik; and if a female, Pāta. They soon became celebrated all over India, and in 1554 A.D. Shīr Shāh undertook the siege of Kalājar to secure possession of a Pāta kept by Kirat Sinh. Notwithstanding their origin the Nāyaks contrive to belong to that well-abused gotra, the Bhāradvaja, and to the great mid-Hind Sākha. They even wear the sacred thread, though with only three strands, like the common Khasiya. They marry their sons into Rājput families on paying a considerable sum, but devote all their daughters to prostitution. Nāyaks live by cultivation and trade, and their villages in the Bhābar are about the best. The son can succeed to the property of his uncle, and the daughters can leave their property to any relative. If a daughter has a son, he performs her funeral ceremonies; if not, her brother performs them. They are attached to the left hand Sākta ceremonial, and eat animal food, and are, strange to say, reported to be careful in ceremonial observances. They have a story of their own; of a brother and sister going on pilgrimage to Badarināth, and the latter falling into evil ways; but the account first given is more probable, and has better evidence to support it.”

5. According to another story one of the Kings of Kumaun had two slave girls: one of whom married a Rājput, and her descendants are known as Rāj-kanya; and the other, who married a Hill Chhatri; was the ancestress of the Pātars. The Pātars are Hindus and worship Devi, Bbolanāth, Kallu Pīr, and Bhairon. Their girls are trained in singing and dancing and prostitute themselves. They are not married in their own tribe, which procures wives by purchase from other castes. When they are unable the Pātar girls marry a pīpal tree, and then commence their career of prostitution. The Rāj-kanyas dance in the temples of the Hindu gods, and among them prostitution is said to be rare.

6. Of ten classes of prostitutes found ordinarily in the plains, two, the Rāmjanī and Gandharap, are practically all Hindus : the Magahijā, Chhāta, Janghariyā Naurangi, Mirāsi, Gaunkhārin, Domin and Akāshkāmīni are nearly all Muhammadans. None of these marry their daughters. When their sons reach marriageable age they purchase a girl of some low Hindu or Muhammadan tribe and marry her to him. These married women are not allowed to prostitute. The sons, as they grow up, are supported by the earnings of the girls, and act as their pimps and attendant musicians (bhanrua). They wander about from one inn (sarāī) and town to another in search of business, and attend marriages and festivals, where they sing and dance. Hindus have, generally, as their personal god (Ishtadevata) Krishna, and as their guardian deity Mahādeva. They employ the very lowest class of Brāhmins in their domestic ceremonies, and cremate their dead.

7. Muhammadans admit any Musalmān girl to their society, and Hindus, after they have embraced Islām. They are continually recruited from Hindu widows, and discarded or deserted wives. When a girl is seven or eight years old, she is put under the instruction of a Dhārhi or Kathak, who teaches her to dance and sing. At the commencement of her education, some sweetmeats are offered at a mosque, and then distributed among Muhammadan saqīs. At the first lesson the master is given a present in money and some sweetmeats, and their fees are about four or five rupees per mensem. When the girl reaches puberty and the breast begins to develop the rite of angiya or the "assumption of the boddice" is performed. On this occasion some of the brethren are feasted. After this the girl is sold to some rich paramour. This is known as Sir dhanlūi or "the covering of the head." When she returns after her first visit to her paramour, the brethren are feasted on sweetmeats. After this follows the rite of missi, which takes its name from the black powder used in colouring the teeth.

She is dressed like a bride and is taken in procession through the streets and afterwards takes her seat at a party (mahfil), where the brethren assemble and sing and dance. Her teachers (ustād) are remunerated, and the brethren are fed on lachchi and pakki according to the means of the family. This feast may be postponed; but in that case she cannot stain her teeth until it is duly performed, and some sort of entertainment of the brotherhood is obligatory. This rule is said now at Lucknow to be gradually relaxed. The missi represents the final initiation into a life of harlotry. After the rite of missi the girl ceases to wear the nose-ring, and hence the ceremony is sometimes known as nathni utarna, the taking off of nose-ring.

8. Some of these girls contract what are known as temporary or usufructuary marriages (mut'ah). In the Temporary marriage.

Ain-i-Akbari there is a curious account of a discussion in the presence of the Emperor Akbar as to the legality of such unions. The case was finally thus summed up by Badâoni. Imâm Malik, and the Shiâhs are unanimous in looking upon Mut'ah marriages as legal; Imâm Ash-Shâfi' and the great Imâm Ali Hanifâh look on mut'ah marriages as illegal. But should at any time a Qâzi of the Mûlâki sect decide that mut'ah is legal, it is legal, according to the common belief, even for Shâfi's and Hanifâhs. Every other opinion on this subject is idle talk. This pleased the Emperor, and he at once appointed a Qâzi, who gave a decree which made mut'ah marriages legal.¹

9. One curious point as regards Indian prostitutes is the toler-

Social tolerance of prostitutes.

ance with which they are received into even respectable houses, and the absence of that strong social disfavour in which this class is held in European countries. This feeling has prevailed for a lengthened period. We read in the Buddhist histories of Amhapâta, the famous courtesan of Visala, and of the Princess Salawati, who was appointed courtesan, and the price of her favours fixed at two thousand masurans.² The same feeling appears in the folk-tales and early records of Indian castes.³ It has been supposed that this idea is based on the prevalence of communistic marriage.⁴

10. Tansen, the celebrated musician, is a sort of patron saint of dancing-girls. He was a native of Patna and a disciple of the famous Hari Dâs Gusâin, of Bindrahan. He went to the court of Akbar, became a Muhammadan, ¹ Blochmann, Ain-i-Akbari, I, 173.

The Saint Tansen.

² Hardy, Manual of Buddhism, 241.

³ Tawney, Katha Sarit Sâgara, I, 354; II, 621. Dhossidâ, II, 151.

⁴ Darwin, Descent of Man, II, 361. Lubbock, Origin of Civilization, 95; Wake's Serpent Worship, 119; Robertson Smith, Kynship, 143; Westermarck, History of Human Marriage, 80.

and is buried at Gwâlior. It is said that he used to listen to the men singing at the well and appropriate their melodies. His contemporary and rival Brij Baula was able, it is said, to split a rock with a single note. The story goes that he learnt his bass from the creaking of the flour-mill. It is believed that chewing the leaves of the tree over the grave of Tânsen gives an astonishing melody to the voice, and singing girls make pilgrimages there for this purpose.¹

Distribution of castes of Prostitutes and Dancing-girls according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	HINDY.	MUSALMÂN.			TOTAL.
	Paturiya	Tawâif.		Others.
		Bakariya.	Harkaya.
Dehra Dûn	11	11
Sahârunpur . . .	43	707	750
Muzaffarnagar . . .	2	1	1	537	541
Meerut	571	571
Bulandshahr . . .	1	474	475
Aligarh . . .	4	..	4	250	258
Mathura	3	...	87	90
Agra . . .	2	...	103	272	370
Farrukhâbâd . . .	182	336	...	1,036	1,454
Mainpuri	26	500	526
Etâwah	513	581	1,094
Etah	1,080	1,080
Bareilly	74	74
Bijnor	260	260
Budhôn . . .	98	591	689
Morâdâbâd . . .	,	211	219

¹ Dholaâth Chandra, Travels, II, 83, 87. - Sleeman, Rambles, II, 333, 87. - Cunningham, Archæological Reports, II, 370, XXI, 110.

Distribution of castes of Prostitutes and Dancing-girls according to the Census of 1891—continued.

DISTRICT.	HINDU.	MUSALMĀN.			TOTAL.
	Patwariya.	Tawāif.		Others.
		Bakariya.	Harkaya.
Shāhjahānpur . . .	59	593	652
Pīlībhit	90	90
Cawnpur . . .	106	...	7	943	1,056
Fatehpur . . .	18	13	...	470	515
Bānda . . .	73	89	164
Hamirpur . . .	7	72	79
Alahābād . . .	159	360	519
Jhānsi	61	61
Jāloun . . .	11	...	6	103	120
Lalitpur	0	0
Benares . . .	301	125	426
Mirzapur . . .	74	81	159
Jaunpur . . .	763	170	933
Glāsiyur . . .	607	634	1,641
Bālūa . . .	117	213	330
Gorakhpur . . .	297	1,190	1,697
Easti . . .	69	27	96
Azamgarh . . .	1,160	426	1,586
Kumaon . . .	63	63
Terāi	21	21
Lucknow . . .	21	22	...	567	610
Unāo . . .	21	9	...	333	363
Rawānsi . . .	5	...	42	245	292
Shājpur . . .	16	4	4	1,271	1,295

Distribution of castes of Prostitutes and Dancing girls according to the Census of 1891—concluded

DISTRICT	HINDU	MUSALMAN			TOTAL
	Patariya	Tawāif		Others
		Bakariya	Harkaya
Hardoi	7			1 801	1 808
Bhera				800	800
Faizabād	2			87	89
Gonda	180			324	504
Bahrāch	36		10	930	982
Saltānpur	80			612	698
Partābgarh				390	390
Bāralauhi				684	684
TOTAL	4 710	293	718	21 008	27 600

Teli¹—(Sanskrit tailāla, taila, “oil expressed from sesamum, mustard, etc.”) —A large caste of pressers of oil and traders in various commodities. The caste is probably a functional group which Mr. Huxley² thinks must have been recruited from the respectable class of Hindu society, because “oil is used by all Hindus for domestic and ceremonial purposes, and its manufacture could only be carried on by men whose social purity was beyond dispute.” Whatever the case may be in Bengal in Northern India there is no special idea of purity attached to the Teli, in fact it is probably not too much to say that the reverse is the fact. Mr. Ibbetson³ says of the Panjab — ‘The Teli is of low social standing perhaps about the same as that of the Julaha, with whom he is often associated and he is hardly less turbulent and troublesome than the latter.’

2 The tribe seems to be singularly destitute of traditions of origin. In most of our Districts all they can say is that they are indigenous. The sub-divisions with local names derive, of course, their origin from the places which supply their title. In Mirzapur they tell a story that there was once a man who had three sons and owned fifty-two mañna trees (bassia latifolia). When he became aged and infirm, he took his sons to the grave and told them to divide them among themselves. After some discussion they decided not to divide the trees, but the produce of them. One of them fell to collecting the leaves and he became a Bhaibhūnja or grain-parcher, who still uses leaves in his oven; the second collected the flowers and corollas and, having distilled them, became a Kalwār; the third collected the kernels (kuina), crushed them and became a Teli.

¹ Based on enquiries at Mirzapur and notes by the Deputy Inspectors of Schools Farrukhabad, Agra, Azamgarh, Basti.

² Tribes and Castes II 30.

³ Panjab Ethnography paragraph 64.

3. At the last census the Telis were classed in a number of endogamous sub-castes: Byāhut, who are so called because they do not allow widow marriage and marry virgin brides by the standard form (byāh); Jaiswār, named from the old town of Jais in the Rāē Bareilly district; Jaunpuri, who trace their origin to Jaunpur; Kanaujiya to Kanauj; Mathuriya to Mathura; Rāthaur, which is the name of a famous Rājput sept; Sribhātā from the ancient city of Srāvastī, now represented by the ruins of Sahet-Mahet in pargana Balrāmpur of the Gonda district; and Umarē, which is the name of one of the Banya sub-castes. It will be observed how largely local designations appear in this list. Besides these among the Muhammadan branch, we find the Bahlim, Desi, Dāsna and Ekāsna. In Mirzapur we find the Kanaujiya, Sribhātava, Pachhiwāha or "Western;" Byāhuta, Bhainsaha, who carry goods on the male buffalo (bhainsa), Chachara, who are said to take their name from their fondness for the chachar (Sanskrit, cārcāra), the special song sung at the Holi festival; and the Turkiya or Muhammadan Teli. In Benares, according to Mr. Sherring,¹ the divisions are the Byāhuthans, the same as the Byāhuta mentioned above; the Kanaujiya; Jaunpuriya; Sribhātav; Banarasiya, or those of Benares, Jaiswār; Lāhauri, from Lahore; and the Gulharia and Gulhāni; of all of whom the Gulhāni are the lowest. The Jaunpuriya are said not to deal in oil but in pulse (dal). In Farrukhābad we have the Rāthaur, Panāmi, Rethi, Jaiswār, Siwār, Mathuriya, and Bhūn. In Basti we find the Byāhut, Jaunpuri, Kanaujiya, Turkiya, and Sāthwār, which last is a Kurmi sub-caste. In Pilibhit are the Parāiya or "Eastern," Bhadauriya, which is a well known Rājput sept, the Rāthaur, Tilbhuriya or parchers of se-amun. In Azamgarh the sub-castes are Jaunpuri, Byāhut, Kalauriya, which is possibly a corruption of Kanauriya, Barbhuriya or "the greater brethren," Madhesiya or "dwellers in the middle land," Madhyadesi, which is, according to tradition, the country lying between the Himāchya on the north, the Vindhya range on the south, Vinasamra or Kurukshetra on the west, Prayāga or Allahābād on the east, and Turk or the Musalmān Branch. In Agra we have the Rāthaur, Chāmār Tel and Musalmān Tel. To the east of the Province again they are divided into the Pachpuriya or worshippers of the Panchon Pir, and the Mahabiriya or devotees of Mahābir. All these sub-castes are endogamous. In Azamgarh it is said that this is certainly the case with the Jaunpuri, Byāhut, and Barbhuriya, but that the Kalauriya and the Madhesiya sometimes intermarry. The census returns show 742 sections in the Hindu and 239 in the Muhammadan branch. Of these those of the greatest local importance are the Kaithiya of Mainpuri, the Parnami of Cawnpur, the Surahiya of Allahābād, the Bātra of Jhānsi and Lalitpur, the Mahut of Mirzapur, the Baraniya, Kaithiya, Maheri and Parnami of Jaunpur, the Dakkhināha and Jhijhautiya of Gorakhpur and Basti, the Bahraichiya of Bahraich, and the Makanpuri of Partabgarh. To the east of the Province the rule of exogamy seems to be that a man cannot marry in his own family (kul) or in that of the maternal uncle or father's sister until at least three generations have passed. In Farrukhābād a man cannot marry a near relation or the descendant of a common ancestor or of a blood relation on the father's or mother's side as long as any relationship is remembered, he cannot marry two sisters at the same time, but he may marry the sister of his deceased wife.

4 Marriage customs of the Telis are of the usual respectable kind Marriage customs All except the Byāhut, allow widow marriage.

There are usually three forms of marriage

Byāh, Shādī, Charhaua or Charhéké, when the marriage takes place according to the orthodox ritual at the house of the bride, dol, when the ceremonies are done at the house of the bridegroom, and dharanna or sagū for widows. Among the more respectable families the preference is for the marriage of a girl in infancy (Junwāri), and it is considered disreputable to keep a girl who has menstruated (rajasthala, rajasula) unmarried. To cite the rules in Azamgarh as an example, in dharanna or widow marriage, the binding portion of the rite is "foot worship" (pāḍ-pūj), when the father of the woman puts her hand in that of the bridegroom. In ordinary marriages the rite of tilak is performed twice, and if after the first the boy dies, the girl will not be regarded as a widow and can be married by the rite of pāḍ-pūj. The two occasions on which the tilak rite is performed are at betrothal (mangani) and at marriage. At betrothal the form is that the bride's father comes to the house of the bridegroom; at the appointed time he washes, first the right, and then the left foot of his future son-in-law, and throws some rice at his feet. Next, with the point of his thumb directed towards the boy's nose, he makes four lines, with curds, on his forehead; on the curl mark he sticks seven grains of rice, and touches the boy's forehead with the sacred kusa grass, water, curds, rice, and red sandalwood. During the tilak rite at marriage, if the bride be less than eleven years old, she is seated in the lap of her father; if above that age, on a leaf mat (pattal). After the tilak rite the girl's father puts her hand in that of her husband and lets some kusa grass, water, rice and money fall into his hand. A widow generally marries the younger brother of her late husband; but the levirate is not enforced, and the woman's right of choice is recognised. A wife can be divorced for adultery and a man for adultery with a woman of another caste. In both cases the sanction of the tribal council is essential.

5. The Turkiya, Bahlim, Desi, Doāsna and Ekāsna Telis are Muhammadans; the others are Hindus, but they seldom procure initiation into one of the standard sects. Their clan deities to the east of the Province are Ghāzi Miyān and other members of the quintette of the Pāñchon Pir, Hardiya or Hardaur Lāla, the godling of cholera, Mahābir and Mahādeva. Ghāzi Miyān is worshipped with an offering of goats, fowls, rice, boiled with pulse (khichari), bread, garlands of flowers, a head-dress (munraitā), and a small loin cloth (langot). The other members of the Pāñchon Pir receive similar offerings. Bread, a Brāhmaical cord, and rose perfume (itr) are offered to Mahābir and Mahādeva. Hardiya receives, during cholera epidemics, a sacrifice of goats, fowls, and young pigs. In the Central Duāb a sacrifice of a goat or ram is made to Devi and to Shaikh Saidu, who is the women's godling. Any one can do the Devi sacrifice, but Shaikh Saidu is served by a Mujāwar. Among god-hings of the aboriginal races they acknowledge Jakhi Deota, whose priest is a Dhānuh. They are served by Brāhmans of the usual officiant classes. They cremate their dead and perform the funeral rites according to the orthodox ritual.

6 Their special business is the manufacture of oil and in almost every bazar the Teli may be seen driving his little blind folded ox round his oil mill. But the recent extension of the use of foreign mineral oils must be seriously interfering with his business. Medicinal oils are made by the Gandhi. The Teli usually makes at least three kinds of oil.¹ The first class includes linseed (alsi, tisi), mustard (zarson), poppy-seed (dānaposta, khashkhash), black mustard (lūya mahua, cocoanut (gola uāryal), sesamum (til), eruca sativa, (dāhi), safflower (lusum), gehūn, a wheat grass yielding grain, and the berries of the nīm tree (nīnkauri). These are all crushed and oil expressed from them in the ordinary mill (lolhu). Castor oil (rendi ka tel) forms a class in itself. The third class consists of some oils of a medicinal nature, such as that from the almond (bādām). Those who work the oil mill treat it as a sort of fetish and a representative of Mahādeva, and worship it at the Dasahra festival. Many of them have taken to shopkeeping of various kinds, money-lending, dealing in grain and agriculture. As a rule Telis will eat goat's flesh, mutton, fowls, and fish. Those of the Śrībāstav sub-caste are said to eat pork. They will drink spirituous liquor. In Azamgarh the Barhiya sub-caste are said to be peculiar in refusing to wear any torn clothes, and if they cannot afford new clothes prefer to go partly unclothed. They are said to worship like Brahmans. As has been already said, the social position of the Teli is not a high one. Kahan Raja Bhoj, kahan Lakhu Teli?—"What comparison is there between a real gentleman and a Teli upstart even if he be made of money?" Teli kya jānē mushk ki sūr?—"What can a Teli know of the smell of musk?" The women say Teli khatam kiya rukha khāwē—"Marry a Teli and live on dry crusts." The Teli's ox is, of course, proverbial, Teli ke bail ko ghar hi kor pachās—"Though he stays at home the Teli's ox does his hundred miles," and Teli ka bail is the common term for the man who slaves for nothing.

¹ See Hooy, Monograph 191 sq.

as an example, in dharauna or widow marriage, the binding portion of the rite is "foot worship" (padē-pūj), when the father of the woman puts her hand in that of the bridegroom. In ordinary marriages the rite of tilak is performed twice, and if after the first the boy dies, the girl will not be regarded as a widow and can be married by the rite of padē-pūj. The two occasions on which the tilak rite is performed are at betrothal (mangani) and at marriage. At betrothal the form is that the bride's father comes to the house of the bridegroom; at the appointed time he washes, first the right, and then the left foot of his future son-in-law, and throws some rice at his feet. Next, with the point of his thumb directed towards the boy's nose, he makes four lines, with curds, on his forehead; on the curd mark he sticks seven grains of rice, and touches the boy's forehead with the sacred kusa grass, water, curds, rice, and red sandalwood. During the tilak rite at marriage, if the bride be less than eleven years old, she is seated in the lap of her father; if above that age, on a leaf mat (patlai). After the tilak rite the girl's father puts her hand in that of her husband and lets some kusa grass, water, rice and money fall into his hand. A widow generally marries the younger brother of her late husband; but the levirate is not enforced, and the woman's right of choice is recognised. A wife can be divorced for adultery and a man for adultery with a woman of another caste. In both cases the sanction of the tribal council is essential.

5. The Turkiya, Bahlm, Desi, Doasna and Ekasna Telis are Muhammadans; the others are Hindus, but they seldom procure initiation into one of the standard sects. Their clan deities to the east of the Province are Ghāzi Miyān and other members of the quintette of the Pānchon Pīr, Hardiya or Hardaur Lāla, the godling of cholera, Mahābir and Mahādeva. Ghāzi Miyān is worshipped with an offering of goats, fowls, rice, boiled with pulse (kichari), bread, garlands of flowers, a head-dress (muraiā), and a small loin cloth (langol). The other members of the Pānchon Pīr receive similar offerings. Bread, a Brāhmanical cord, and rose perfume (itr) are offered to Mahābir and Mahādeva. Hardiya receives, during cholera epidemics, a sacrifice of goats, fowls, and young pigs. In the Central Duāb a sacrifice of a goat or ram is made to Devi and to Shaikh Saddu, who is the women's godling. Any one can do the Devi sacrifice, but Shaikh Saddu is served by a Mujāwar. Among godlings of the aboriginal races they acknowledge Jakhai Deota, whose priest is a Dhānuk. They are served by Brāhmans of the usual officiant classes. They cremate their dead and perform the funeral rites according to the orthodox ritual.

6. Their special business is the manufacture of oil, and in almost every bāzār the Teli may be seen driving his little blind-folded ox round his oil mill. But the recent extension of the use of foreign mineral oils must be seriously interfering with his business. Medicinal oils are made by the Gandhi. The Teli usually makes at least three kinds of oil.¹ The first class includes linseed (alsi, tisi), mustard (sarson), poppy-seed (dānaposta, khashikkash), black mustard (lūga) mahua, cocoanut (gola nāryal), sesamum (til), eruca sativa, (idhi), safflower (lusum), gchuān, a wheat grass yielding grain, and the berries of the nīm tree (nīnkauri). These are all crushed and oil expressed from them in the ordinary mill (kolhū). Castor oil (rendi lā tel) forms a class in itself. The third class consists of some oils of a medicinal nature, such as that from the almond (bādām). Those who work the oil mill treat it as a sort of fetish and a representative of Mahādeva, and worship it at the Dasahra festival. Many of them have taken to shopkeeping of various kinds, money-lending, dealing in grain, and agriculture. As a rule Telis will eat goat's flesh, mutton, fowls, and fish. Those of the Sribāstav sub-caste are said to eat pork. They will drink spirituous liquor. In Azamgarh the Barbhāiya sub-caste are said to be peculiar in refusing to wear any torn clothes, and if they cannot afford new clothes prefer to go partly unclothed. They are said to worship like Brāhmans. As has been already said, the social position of the Teli is not a high one. Kahān Rājā Bhōj, kahān Lākhū Teli?—"What comparison is there between a real gentleman and a Teli upstart even if he be rich of money?" Teli kya jānē musk kī sār?—"What can a Teli know of the smell of musk?" The women say Teli khāyā khā—"Marry a Teli and live on dry crusts." The Teli's ox is, of course, proverbial, Teli ke bāil ko ghār—"The Teli's ox is, he stays at home the Teli's ox does not go." Paichās—"Though a hundred miles," and Teli—"man who slaves for nothing."

¹ See Hooz Monograph, 191, 27.

as an example, in dharauṇa or widow marriage, the binding portion of the rite is "foot worship" (pāḍ-pūjā), when the father of the woman puts her hand in that of the bridegroom. In ordinary marriages the rite of tilak is performed twice, and if after the first the boy dies, the girl will not be regarded as a widow and can be married by the rite of pāḍ-pūjā. The two occasions on which the tilak rite is performed are at betrothal (mangani) and at marriage. At betrothal the form is that the bride's father comes to the house of the bridegroom; at the appointed time he washes, first the right, and then the left foot of his future son-in-law, and throws some rice at his feet. Next, with the point of his thumb directed towards the boy's nose, he makes four lines, with curds, on his forehead; on the curd mark he sticks seven grains of rice, and touches the boy's forehead with the sacred kusa grass, water, curds, rice, and red sandalwood. During the tilak rite at marriage, if the bride be less than eleven years old, she is seated in the lap of her father; if above that age, on a leaf mat (pattal). After the tilak rite the girl's father puts her hand in that of her husband and lets some kusa grass, water, rice, and money fall into his hand. A widow generally marries the younger brother of her late husband; but the levirate is not enforced, and the woman's right of choice is recognised. A wife can be divorced for adultery and a man for adultery with a woman of another caste. In both cases the sanction of the tribal council is essential.

5. The Turkiya, Bahlim, Desi, Doḍana and Ekāṇa Telis are Muhammadans; the others are Hindus, but they seldom procure initiation into one of the standard sects. Their clan deities to the east of the Province are Ghāzi Miyān and other members of the quintette of the Pānchon Pir, Hardiya or Hardaur Lāla, the godling of cholera, Mahābīr and Mahādeva. Ghāzi Miyān is worshipped with an offering of goats, fowls, rice, boiled with pulse (ḥichari), bread, garlands of flowers, a head-dress (auraiḥā), and a small loin cloth (langel). The other members of the Pānchon Pir receive similar offerings. Bread, a Brāhmanical cord, and rose perfume ('itr) are offered to Mahābīr and Mahādeva. Hardiya receives, during cholera epidemics, a sacrifice of goats, fowls, and young pigs. In the Central Dusha a sacrifice of a goat or ram is made to Desi and to Shaikh Saidu, who is the women's godling. Any one can do the Devi sacrifice, but Shaikh Saidu is served by a Majāwar. Among godlings of the aboriginal races they acknowledge Jakhai Deota, whose priest is a Dhāmuk. They are served by Brāhmans of the usual officiant classes. They cremate their dead and perform the funeral rites according to the orthodox ritual.

6 Their special business is the manufacture of oil, and in almost every bazar the Teli may be seen driving his little blind folded ox round his oil mill. But the recent extension of the use of foreign mineral oils must be seriously interfering with his business. Medicinal oils are made by the Gandhi. The Teli usually makes at least three kinds of oil.¹ The first class includes linseed (alsi, līsi), mustard (sarson), poppy-seed (dānaposla, khashkhash), black mustard (lūya) mahua, coconut (gola nāryal), sesamum (til), eruca sativa, (lāhi), safflower (lūsum), gehūn, a wheat grass yielding grain and the berries of the nīm tree (nīnkauri). These are all crushed and oil expressed from them in the ordinary mill (lolhu). Castor oil (rendi kā tel) forms a class in itself. The third class consists of some oils of a medicinal nature, such as that from the almond (bādām). Those who work the oil mill treat it as a sort of fetish and a representative of Mahādevn, and worship it at the Dasahra festival. Many of them have taken to shopkeeping of various kinds, money-lending, dealing in grain, and agriculture. As a rule Telis will eat goat's flesh, mutton, fowls, and fish. Those of the Sribāstav sub-caste are said to eat pork. They will drink spirituous liquor. In Azamgarh the Barbaisya sub-caste are said to be peculiar in refusing to wear any torn clothes, and if they cannot afford new clothes prefer to go partly unclothed. They are said to worship like Brāhmans. As has been already said, the social position of the Teli is not a high one. Kahān Rājya Bhōj, kahān Lakhu Teli?—"What comparison is there between a real gentleman and a Teli upstart even if he be made of money?" Teli kya jānē musk kī sār?—"What can a Teli know of the smell of musk?" The women say Teli khavay kīya tukha khāwē—"Marry a Teli and live on dry crusts." The Teli's ox is, of course, proverbial, Teli ke bail ko ghar hātīs pachāt—"Though he stays at home the Teli's ox does his hundred miles," and Teli ka bail is the common term for the man who slaves for nothing.

¹ See Hooy, Monograph 191, 22.

Distribution of Telis according to the Census of 1891.

Districts.	HINDUS.								MUHAMMADANS.
	Dyeshol.	Jalawar.	Jaunpur.	Kanaujya.	Malharjya.	Balhar.	Enkatab.	Umrat.	Others.	Balim.	Deer.	Dokana.	Ekkana.	Others.	TOTAL.
Dehra Dun	437	219	96	157	2,668	3,664
Saharanpur	1	91	218	573	4,018	4,976	1,431	37,438	48,100
Muzaffarnagar	8	50	926	8,550	..	3,358	12,292
Meerut	120	803	1,995	3,057	11,673	17,717
Bulandshahr	783	498	7,369	8,650
Aligarh	1,197	1,218	1,432	6,881	10,791
Mathura	659	1,274	4,427	6,360
Agra	7,201	1	..	1,417	4,613	13,189
Farukhabad	16	89	32	14,743	63	..	260	15,221
Malpuri	8	..	9,503	2,295	..	883	57	12,746
Kidwah	32	205	12,737	1,256	14,290

Distribution of Telis according to the Census of 1891—concluded.

District.	HINDUS.										MUHAMMADANS.					Total.
	Byahut.	Jaiswar.	Jaunpur.	Kannaujya.	Mathurjya.	Bahhar.	Srithalab.	Umar.	Others.	Bahlm.	Deol.	Dakana.	Ekana.	Others.
Jaunpur	3,708	19,391	201	23,990
Obasipur	478	19	3,925	15,991	3,880	23,590
Balla	45	...	269	23,997	251	24,515
Gorakhpur	1,072	440	24,010	51,462	47	...	6,036	215	1,137	87,799
Muti	22,293	438	0,469	1,125	2,931	1,817	4,930	10,325
Aurangarh	119	99	14,939	11,013	45	...	2,819	1,803	30,837
Tardi	493	893	16	2,652	4,051
Lucknow	79	11,665	...	101	...	617	...	35	1,661	1,519	710	10,420
Undo	1	10,520	1	26	41	9,005	812	20,418
Rise Barell.	...	13,133	17	201	8,317	27	174	21,772
Sitapur	4	8,412	6	4,038	...	6,809	211	105	803	4,510	631	25,627

Hardoi	..	760	..	1	..	28,996	295	107	29,150
Kheri	..	5,004	..	2,524	..	9,837	1	..	73	733	187	18,979
Faizābād	..	4,432	1,523	236	191	..	478	1,393	925	17,923
Gonda	..	19,850	627	11	..	51	2,776	3,691	29,200
Farrāich	..	4,931	5,433	10	..	229	..	1	2,177	3,079	5,096	21,063
Sultānpur	..	6,361	3,753	260	2,572	666	19,061
Parliāgarh	..	11,203	31	65	3,855	6	15,591
Eṣarabanki	9,939	4	758	4,601	6,665	21,970
TOTAL	132,989	71,120	67,455	119,433	11,750	194,071	41,187	4,630	95,590	21,626	4,397	11,821	4,746	143,954	931,691

Thâru.¹—A tribe which has its head-quarters in the Himâlayan Tarâi and colonies in the Gorakhpur Division and Northern Oudh. Mr. Nesfield, who has given an elaborate account of these people, says:—"To the east they extend about as far as the river Kusi, where they come in contact with the Mechas, a tribe similar to themselves in habits and features, and inhabiting that portion of the Tarâi which separates the plains of Bengal from the hills of Sikkim. To the west they extend as far as the river Sârda, which flows between Kinnaman and Nepâl. At this point they dovetail with another forest tribe similar to themselves in appearance and culture, the Bhuksas. The strictly Bhuksa country commences from the Gola or Kicha river, about thirty miles to the west of the Sârda, and extends westward as far as the Ganges, while a few straggling villages are to be found still further west as far as the Jumna. Between the Sârda and the Gola rivers there is a debatable tract, about thirty miles wide, in which both tribes occasionally reside. In one village at least, and probably in more, the inhabitants are the progeny of mixed parentage, although intermarriage between the tribes is not openly allowed by either."

2. Many attempts have been made to explain the origin of the Thâru.² Some of these are sufficiently Origin of the name. absurd. Thus some derive it from tahré, "they halted," after their alleged flight into the forest; others from tarkua, "wet," in allusion to the swampy nature of the tract in which they live. A Pandit told Mr. Carnegie that it was derived from thal (Sanskrit sthala, "firm ground"). They say themselves that they are Râjputs who ran away after the great fight at Hastinapur, and that their name means "Quaker," from latharâna, "to tremble." Others say that the name simply means "residents of the Tarâi." Another suggestion is that it is derived from the Hindi athârâru, "an eighth-day serf," a man who is bound to give his lord one day's labour in the week. "But," as Mr. Nesfield says, "this implies what is not true. The Thârus are remarkable for their indolence, aversion to service, and incapacity for sustained field labour, and they have never been in the position of serf to any landlord. Had this been the case, they would have sunk long ago into the ranks of Arakhs, Pasis, Chamârs, Koris, and other Hindu castes of the lowest rank, who serve as field labourers or bond-slaves to landlords in the open plain and have lost the free life of the forest which Thârus still enjoy."

¹Largely based on Mr. J. C. Nesfield's valuable article in the Calcutta Review (XXX-1) and the Gospel in Gonda by Rev. S. Knowles, with notes from M. Chhelli Lal, Deputy Inspector, Schools, Gorakhpur; M. Mumtaz Ali Khan, Assistant Manager, Balrampur Estate, Gonda, and Dâs Badari Nâth, Deputy Collector, Kheri.

²*Oudh Gazetteer*, II, 126; North-West Provinces Census Report, 1867: I, 61; North-West Provinces Gazetteer, VI, 323; Journal, Asiatic Society of Bengal 1917, page 420; Carnegie. Notes, S. Knowles, loc. cit., 217.

3 A more probable attempt has been made to connect it with some local root. Mr Knowles says that it comes from a verb used by the hillmen, thârna, "to paddle about," and hence Thâru means "a paddler." By another account thâr means "wine" and the name Thâru, or "wine bibber," was given them by one of the Kshatriya Râjas of the plains, who, when he invaded the hill country, was amazed at their drunken habits. "Another etymology," says Mr Nesfield, "suggested is from thâr, which, in the colloquial language of the lowest classes, but not in the language of books, signifies, "forest," and thus Thâru would mean 'man of the forest,' a name which correctly describes the status of the tribe. On the whole, however, it is safer not to search for any Hindi etymology, but to consider the name as sprung from the language of the tribe itself, which is now for the most part obsolete. An aboriginal name undervived from any Sanskrit or neo Sanskrit source is the fit appellative of an aboriginal, casteless and un-Brahmanized tribe whose customs have been only slightly modified by contact with those of the Aryan invader."

1 The origin of the Thârus has formed the subject of much controversy. On a account is thus given by Traditions of origin Dr Buchanan 1—"The Gurkhas seem to have been soon expelled from Magadha by a people called Tharu, who are said to have descended from the hills and extended themselves over every part north of the Ghâghra at least. Of this people very numerous monuments are shown, and from these they would appear to have been an industrious, powerful race, as the number of great buildings in brick which they have left is very considerable. The Thârus, in fact, pretend to be the proper descendants of the Sun, and their having expelled the Gurkhas from their usurped estates, and their having descended for that pur pose from the hills, are not incompatible with that pretension. Their claims to rank are, however, treated with the utmost contempt, because they are an abomination to the Brāhmins, and indulge in all the impurities of eating and drinking." He goes on to say that they retain in their features strong marks of a Chinese or Tartar origin, although it must be confessed that these marks are somewhat softened, and that the faces of the men especially do not differ so much from those of the Hindus as those of a pure Chinese do. Still, however, a difference is observable even in the men, and in the women and children is very closely marked.

5. The tradition in East Oudh is that after the fall of the Buddhist dynasty of Kanauj, the Thārus descended from the hills and occupied Ajudhya. They dispossessed the Buddhists, called in Rāja Sri Chandra, of Srinagar, in the hills about Badari Nāth, who drove back the Thārus, and, marching north, founded Chandravatipur, now known as Sahet-Mahet, or, as Mr. Hoey would call it, Set-Met or Srāvasti. Lassen, in his account of the later dynasty of Kanauj, describes an inscription which records that Sri Chandra Deva, the first of the great Rāthaur Princes who came to the throne in 1072 A.D., was protector of the sacred places of Ajudhya and Kosala or Srāvasti.¹

6. On the other hand they asserted to Mr. Knowles² that they were immigrants from the Dakkhin or the south country. In Bijnor they claim Chithor as their place of origin and refer to Jaymal and Patta. They say that they were driven out, apparently in the third siege of Chithor, by Akbar in 1567 A.D., and that they were originally Rājputs, who lost caste by using intoxicating liquor and rearing fowls. They never claim a Gurkha or hill origin. Interspersed with them are other tribes, generally called Thāru, but quite distinct, such as Gaharwār, who also claim to be Rājputs. They never intermarry or eat with the Thārus, abstain from liquor, and never eat fowls. Others, again, as the Dangras, are looked down on as a lower caste by the Thārus¹ Regarding the Cluthor story, Mr. Nesfield says—

¹ Mr. W. C. Bennett, Indian Antiquary, II, 13, quoting Lassen: Alterthumsk., III, 751; Colebrooke, Essays, II, 286; Asiatic Researches, XV, 417, 457; Journal Asiatic Society, Bengal, X, 101.

² Loc. cit., 209.

 “Some Tharus know nothing about this tradition, and those who do are not able to tell you whether it was the sack by Alauddin (A D 1303), or that by Bahādur Shah (A D 1533), or that by Akbar (A D 1567) The story is absurd on the face of it, not the slightest allusion to Tharus in connection with any of these events is made by the Muhammadan historians The fiction of having come from Rajputāna was invented by some of the clans merely to raise themselves in their own and their neighbour's estimation There is scarcely a hunting tribe or caste in Upper India which has not set up a similar claim ”²

G He quotes another legend which centres round Raksha or Rikheswar, their patron saint or founder “Both names are evidently corruptions of some obsolete Tharu word which has been toned down to suit the Hindi accent According to the legend in vogue among the Tharus of Kheri, this deified founder was a son of the renowned aboriginal King, Raja Ben or Vena, whose name is still rife in many of the oldest cities of Upper India and Bihar, as one who held the rank and title of Chakravartti or universal Emperor in the olden time In Mann's Institutes³ he is stigmatised as the first king who allowed a man to marry the wife of his deceased brother According to Mann he died from the effects of his unbridled lusts According to the Vishnu Purana, he was beaten to death by a gang of saintly men armed with blades of holy grass, all of which had been consecrated with magic words Benbens is still a title of several Dravidian tribes on the Vindhyan range Rikheswar or Raksha was banished, it is said, from his father's court and ordered, with his band of male followers to seek for a new home in the north, from which they were never to return Setting out on their wanderings, they took as their wives any women whom they could steal or capture on the road, and in this way the Tharu tribe was founded It was not till they had reached the Sub-Himalayan forest, in which they still dwell, that they decided to rest and settle The soul of Raksha is still believed to hover among the people of his tribe, just as in ancient days he led them safely through the wide

¹ Mr E. Colvin Census Report North-West Provinces 1865 I Appendix 60

² 77

³ Loc cit 33

⁴ IX 66

pose from the hills, are not incompatible with that pretension. Their claims to rank are, however, treated with the utmost contempt, because they are an abomination to the Brāhmans, and indulge in all the impurities of eating and drinking." He goes on to say that they retain in their features strong marks of a Chinese or Tartar origin, although it must be confessed that these marks are somewhat softened, and that the faces of the men especially do not differ so much from those of the Hindus as those of a pure Chinese do. Still, however, a difference is observable even in the men, and in the women and children is very closely marked.

5. The tradition in East Oudh is that after the fall of the Buddhist dynasty of Kanauj, the Thārus descended from the hills and occupied Ajudhya. They dispossessed the Buddhists, called in Rāja Sri Chandra, of Srinagar, in the hills about Badari Nāth, who drove back the Thārus, and, marching north, founded Chandravatipur, now known as Sahet-Mahet, or, as Mr. Hoey would call it, Set-Met or Srāvasti. Lassen, in his account of the later dynasty of Kanauj, describes an inscription which records that Sri Chandra Deva, the first of the great Rāthaur Princes who came to the throne in 1072 A.D., was protector of the sacred places of Ajudhya and Kosala or Srāvasti.¹

6. On the other hand they asserted to Mr. Knowles² that they were immigrants from the Dakkhin or the south country. In Bijnor they claim Chithor as their place of origin and refer to Jaymal and Patta. They say that they were driven out, apparently in the third siege of Chithor, by Akbar in 1567 A.D., and that they were originally Rājputs, who lost caste by using intoxicating liquor and rearing fowls. They never claim a Gurkha or hill origin. Interspersed with them are other tribes, generally called Thāru, but quite distinct, such as Gaharwār, who also claim to be Rājputs. They never intermarry or eat with the Thārus, abstain from liquor, and never eat fowls. Others, again, as the Dangras, are looked down on as a lower caste by daughters of Eve by their love of finery. They love to adorn themselves with heavy silver armlets, bracelets, anklets, nose-rings and necklaces of beads and many coloured shells. They wear their long black hair, not tied up in a knot, but rolled into a long horn behind. A more frequent application of water would make their bright yellow skins look more fair and healthy. Their toe and finger nails are nearly all destroyed from being so constantly soaked in water during the rice-sowing season."

¹ Mr. W. C. Bonett, Indian Antiquary, II, 13, quoting Lassen: Alterthumsk., III, 751; Colebrooke, Essays, II, 286; Asiatic Researches, XV, 417, 457; Journal Asiatic Society, Benjāl, X, 101.

² Loc. cit., 299.

9 The most probable explanation based on the available evidence seems to be that the Thârus are originally a Dravidian race who, by alliances with Nepâlese and other hill races, have acquired some degree of Mongolian physiognomy.

10 As might have been expected from the wandering habits of the Thârus and the varying influences to which they have been exposed, they tend to break up into a number of sub-tribes which are very intricate and not easily analysed. Those in Muhamdi of Kheri are said to be divided into three endogamous groups Bâna, Batûr, and Malwariya, the last of whom take their name from Malwâra, a province of the Tatâi, lying east of Kanchanpur. In Gonda, according to Mr. Carnegie,¹ they have six endogamous groups (1) Gurbans Katheriya, who are said to take their name from being of the race of Guru Rikheswar. They used to wear the Brâhmanical thread, but do not do so now. They drink spirits, eat flesh and fish, but not pork, and they employ washermen, barbers, and oil-pressers. They marry by the rites of tîlâk and phaldân, (2) Dingoriya or Dingariya, who rear pigs and poultry, shave themselves and wash their own clothes, using for this purpose the ashes of the âsan tree (Terminalia alata tomentosa). They remove dead cattle with their own hands, and are their own oil-pressers. They disregard all marriage ceremonies, and all that is necessary is for the friends to assemble, kill and eat a pig, and make the girl over to her husband. They will smoke, but will not eat with the Mânjhi Musahras, (3) Tharkomahrs, who perform the same mean occupations and ceremonies as the Dingoriya, but in addition they make earthen vessels, and they smoke with none of the other sub-tribes, the name is a corruption of Thârnuwilderness into a new and distant settlement; so in the present day he is said to be the guardian and guide of men travelling on a distant journey. No Thāru ever sets out from his village for such a purpose without first propitiating him with gifts and promising him a sumptuous feast of flesh, milk, and wine on his return. His presence is represented by a mound of mud, with a stone fixed in the middle, and he delights in seeing the blood of a live capon dashed against this stone and to feel its blood trickling down the side. One peculiarity of this god is that he is deaf, an emblem of his antiquity; and hence vows and prayer are addressed to him in a stentorian tone of voice. The title Gurua, which is generally prefixed to his name, implies that during his residence on earth he was famous as a wizard or medicine man, and acquired through this means the kingship or leadership of his tribe."

8. Dr. Oldham¹ believes that the Thārus are Indian aborigines and certainly very different from the Tartar Highland races. That the tribe has suffered much admixture is quite certain.

Ethnical affinities of the Thārus.

Mr. Newfield² writes:—"Owing to the intermarriages which have taken place within the last two or three centuries between Thāru men and Nepālese women the physiognomy of the Thāru tribe has acquired, in some instances, a slightly Mongolian cast, which shows itself chiefly, but not to a striking degree, in slanting eyes and high cheek bones. In other respects their physical characteristics are of the strictly Indian type. They have long, wavy hair, a dark, almost a black, complexion, and as much hair on the face and body as is usual with other natives of India. In stature, build, and gait they are distinctly Indian and not Mongolian; nor have they any traditions which connect their origin with Nepāl." One of Mr. Risley's³ correspondents remarks on the scantiness of their beards, but this peculiarity may be due to crossing with Nepālese or Mech. Mr. Knowles⁴ says that "some of the women are very fair, and are good looking both in face and figure; though they generally partake of the Mongolian style of features. They prove themselves genuine

¹ Nepal, 131

² Loc. cit., 37

³ Trilce and Casha, II, 312, & co.

⁴ Loc. cit., 21^o

by Mr. Bennett,¹ and is confirmed by a correspondent from the Gonda district, who does not, however, admit that the Dangariyas abstain from pork. The names of the sub-sections, according to another authority in the Gonda district, are Pârabiya, Dangariya Kathariya, Amari, Tharjogi, Khuna, and Dingar. A correspondent from Kheri gives them as Gorihwariya, Pachhuhin or "Western," Malwariya, Dangariya, Suhariya, and Râji, which last is usually regarded as a separate tribe. In Gorakhpur, besides the list already given, another enumeration as follows was furnished. Pachhaha (Barka, Chhntka), Kathariya, Dangariya, Khon, Khushiya, Marchaha, Kachla, Kanphata, Sarkohar, Nawalpuria. The Tharus of Kumaon gave another list which contains only five names Thar, Batta, Mahtam, Rawat, and Barwâik, the last three of which seem to depend merely on status. The Tharus of Bhunga, on the edge of the Bahraich district, gave another list containing seven names Dangariya, Kathariya, Khond, Dakhar, Raji, Masahar, Bot. In another part of the Bahraich district the names given were Kusmaha, Kathariya, Bantar, Dakhar, Dundwar, Kachla, Rotar, and Jogi.

13 Another carefully prepared list comes from Balrâmpur in the Gonda district. It gives Dangwariya Kathariya, Umra, Jogi, Dhaker, Purahiya, Batar, Khusiya, Dhîmar, Unchdih, Kumhâr, Khûn, Rautar, Detwâr, Kuchhula, Rajbatar, Dhakwal, Mandaha, Musahar, Dendwai, Pradhan Boksa. Of these it is said that the Dangwariya take their name from a place called Dang, which is somewhere in Nepal, the Kathariya from a place called Kathar in Deokhar. Of the Umra it is said that the name is a corruption of Dayamûr, 'root of mercy,' the title of the Kshatriya Chief who adopted the manners and customs of the Tharus and finally joined them. Of the Jogi Tharus the legend runs that a Sâdhu once kept a woman of the Tharu tribe as his mistress, and their descendants became known as Jogi Tharu. They still perform some of the rites of the Jogis. Thus, they bury their dead and erect over the grave a mound (samâdh). They eat and drink from the hands of the Dangwariya Tharus, but the Dangwariyas will not take food from their hands. This is rather like the relation of the Patanis and Mânphis. Formerly it is said that they used to admit

¹ Oudh Gazette r, III 302.

Kumhâr; (d) the Mânjhi Musahra, who may be connected ethnically, as they are by function, with the Musahars of the Vindhyan plateau, who differ from the Dingariya in that they are fishermen and carry the Jitters of the Gurbans Kathariya, Dingariya, and Parabiya; (e) the Parabiya or "Eastern" drink spirits and eat flesh, cultivate land and employ washermen, barbers and also Chamârs, to remove dead cattle. They smoke with the Diagariya and marry like Gurbans Kathariya; (f) Dhaikar, who are mendicants and get fixed annual alms from the other five classes. They eat with the Dingariya, and worship a godling of their own, named Kharag.

11. According to Mr. Nesfield,¹ in Gorakhpur the Thârus divide themselves into two great sections: the Pachbami or "Western" and the Pûrahi or "Eastern;" but what or where the dividing line is to be found has not been stated. The "Western," it is said, call themselves Chhatris, and refuse to eat with the "Eastern." The "Eastern," again, divide themselves into the "Upper Eastern" (Barka) and the "Lower" (Chhulka). Among each of these again is a large number of smaller clans, some of the names of which are Dagwariya, Nawalpuriya, Naichaha, Kupaliha, Jogithâru, Kosithâru, Kawasiya, and Garhwariya.² A different account of the divisions and sub-divisions of the tribe is given in the Gonda district. There the tribe divides itself into two great sections: the Dingariya (who are the Dingoriya of Captain Thorburn) and the Kathariya, the first of which indulges in pork, and the second, according to their own statement, abstain from it. Other witnesses, however, deny that the Kathariya abstain from swine's flesh. As to the smaller sub-divisions into which both sections are sub-divided, there are such diversities of statement that it is impossible to get at the truth."

12. The Jugi Thârus, according to Mr. Knowles,³ supply the Kanphatas or ear-pierced priests for the temple sacrifice at Tulasipur, as they are adepts in striking off by a single blow the heads of the goats and buffaloes brought as an offering to Devi. The two-fold division into Dangariya and Kathariya is also given by Mr. Beatt,¹ and is confirmed by a correspondent from the Gonda district, who does not, however, admit that the Dongariyas abstain from pork. The names of the sub-sections, according to another authority in the Gonda district, are Pûrabiya, Dangariya Kathariya, Amora, Thirjogi, Khuna, and Dingar. A correspondent from Kheri gives them as Gorhwahya, Pochhahân or "Western," Malworiya, Dongariya, Suhariya, and Râji, which last is usually regarded as a separate tribe. In Gorakhpur, besides the list already given, another enumeration as follows was furnished: Pachhâla (Barka, Chhatka), Kothariya, Dangariya, Khon, Khunsiya, Marchahî, Kichla, Kanphata, Sarkohar, Nawalpurîho. The Thârus of Kumaun gave another list which contains only five names Thîr, Batta, Mahtam, Râwat, and Barwâk; the last three of which seem to depend merely on status. The Thârus of Bhinga, on the edge of the Bahrâch district, gave another list containing seven names Dangariya, Kathariya, Khond, Dakhar, Râji, Musahar, Bot. In another part of the Bahrâch district the names given were Kusmaha, Kathoriya, Bantar, Dakhar, Dundwâr, Kaehla, Rotar, and Jogi.

¹ Loc. cit., 39, 37.

² North-Western Provinces Gazetteer, VI, 338.

³ Loc. cit., 115.

13 Another carefully prepared list comes from Boliâmpur in the Gonda district. It gives Dangwariya, Kathariya, Umra, Jogi, Dhaker, Pûrabiya, Batar, Khusiya, Dhîmar, Unchdih, Kumhar, Khûn, Rautar, Detwâr, Kaehula, Rajbotâr, Dhakwal, Mandaha, Musahar, Dendwâr, Pradhân, Boksa. Of these it is said that the Dangwariya take their name from a place called Dang, which is somewhere in Nepâl, the Kathariya from a place called Kathar in Deokhur. Of the Umra it is said that the name is a corruption of Dayamûr, "root of mercy," the title of the Kshatriya Chief who adopted the manners and customs of the Thârus and finally joined them. Of the Jogi Tharus the legend runs that a Sâdhu once kept a woman of the Thâru tribe as his mistress, and their descendants became known as Jogi Tharu. They still perform some of the rites of the Jogis. Thus, they bury their dead and erect over the grave a mound (samâih). They eat and drink from the hands of the Dangwariya Thârus, but the Dangwariyas will not take food from their hands. This is rather like the relation of the Patâris and Mânjus. Formerly it is said that they used to admit

¹ Oudh Gazetteer, III, 502.

Kumbhâr; (d) the Mânjhi Musahra, who may be connected ethnically, as they are by function, with the Musahars of the Vindhyan plateau, who differ from the Dingariya in that they are fishermen and carry the litters of the Gurbans Katheriya, Dingariya, and Purabiya; (e) the Purabiya or "Eastern" drink spirits and eat flesh, cultivate land and employ washermen, barbers and also Chamâra, to remove dead cattle. They smoke with the Dingariya and marry like Gurbans Katheriya; (f) Dhakar, who are mendicants and get fixed annual alms from the other five classes. They eat with the Dingariya, and worship a godling of their own, named Kharag.

11. According to Mr. Nesfield,¹ in Gorakhpur the Thârus divide themselves into two great sections: the Pachhami or "Western" and the Pûrabi or "Eastern;" but what or where the dividing line is to be found has not been stated. The "Western," it is said, call themselves Chhatris, and refuse to eat with the "Eastern." The "Eastern," again, divide themselves into the "Upper Eastern" (Barka) and the "Lower" (Chhulka). Among each of these again is a large number of smaller clans, some of the names of which are Dagwariya, Nawalpuriya, Marchaha, Kupaliha, Jogithâru, Kosithâru, Kawasiya, and Garhwariya.² A different account of the divisions and sub-divisions of the tribe is given in the Gonda district. There the tribe divides itself into two great sections: the Dingariya (who are the Dingoriya of Captain Thorburn) and the Kathariya, the first of which indulges in pork, and the second, according to their own statement, abstain from it. Other witnesses, however, deny that the Kathariya abstain from swine's flesh. As to the smaller sub-divisions into which both sections are sub-divided, there are such diversities of statement that it is impossible to get at the truth.³

12. The Jugi Thârus, according to Mr. Knowles,⁴ supply the Kanphatas or ear-pierced priests for the temple sacrifice at Tulasipur, as they are adepts in striking off by a single blow the heads of the goats and buffaloes brought as an offering to Devi. The two-fold division into Dangariya and Kathariya is also given should be added, however, that so long as the contract between the man and woman lasts, the latter is as chaste and faithful as any wife could be." At the same time it should be stated that some of the Thārus repudiate the idea that pre-nuptial license or anything in the form of communal marriage is tolerated.

¹ Loc. cit., 33, 24.

² North-Western Provinces Gazetteer, VI, 3, 7.

³ Loc. cit., 115.

16. The usual age for marriage on the woman's part is about seventeen or eighteen, and a man usually makes his first marriage at about that age. The Bengal Thārus practise both infant and adult marriage and one sub-division of them are said to tolerate sexual intercourse before marriage.¹ There is no betrothal in infancy, except among some clans which have come more completely under the influence of Hinduism. According to Mr. Nesfield, "the marriage contract is arranged, not by the parties themselves, but by the fathers on either side, and the pair for whom the negotiation is made have no power either to choose or refuse. The father of the youth goes over to the village or clan in which the father of the young woman resides, and after making his proposals for the price to be paid for her, offers him a drink of wine, and if the present is accepted, the bargain is closed. The contract once made is faithfully kept by both parties. The price paid for the woman may be in cash or kind, and its value depends on the means of the purchaser or the attractiveness of the woman." In Bibār² the bride-price is supposed to be nine rupees, but is liable to vary according to the means of the family. "The choice of the bride is limited by the rule of exogamy; in other words she must not be a blood relation to the husband chosen for her, nor of the same village, but of some outside village or clan. Wife capture is secretly practised to some extent among the Thārus. They have been known to carry off girls by stealth from the Bhuksa tribe contiguous with their own borders on the Sarda river, and from the Nepālese tribes living on the outer spurs of the Himālaya mountains, and this practice of getting wives from Nepāl will explain the slightly Mongolian cast of face which has now become rather common, though not universal, among the Thāru tribe. But though the fact of wife capture has become almost obsolete, the form is still preserved in the manner in which the bride is conducted to her new home. The father of the bridegroom never goes to take her away from her own clan or village to their clan a Dangwariya male who cohabited with one of their women or a Dangwariya woman who lived with one of their men. This custom has now ceased in British territory, but still prevails in the hills. The Dhaker are reported to be a branch of the Dangwariya. They are mendicants, who beg only from Thârus, and are endogamous. The Khûn are hardly found in British territory. They live by fishing and by attending sacred places, where they dive for and collect fragments of gold and coral which are thrown into the sacred stream with the ashes of the Hindu dead. The Pradhân are found in the direction of Hardwâr and are the same as the Mahton or Mahtam of the other lists. The Census returns show 73 sections of the tribe. Some of these are taken from Râjput septs or the names of other tribes, such as Bhagat, Gadariya, Jogi, Kathariya, Raghubansi, Râwat, and Râna; others are territorial, as Bijnauriya ("those of Bijnaur"), Jaunpuri, Kâshigauhân, Motipurha, Nawalpurha; most of them are, however, purely local titles, which must await wider knowledge of the geography of the Tarâi and its neighbourhood and the local patois of the tribe before their meaning can be ascertained.

¹ Risley, loc cit, II, 314.

² Ibid., II 314.

14. The truth seems to be that the tribal organization of the Thârus is not well established and is constantly changing under the influence of the local surroundings, and that the landmarks between the Thârus and allied tribes, such as the Bhoksas and Râjis, are very uncertain. The extensive lists given by Mr. Risley from Bihâr contain some of the names which have been already enumerated, but it is fruitless to attempt to work out the analogies in detail.

15. Of the marriage customs of the Thârus, Mr. Nesfield writes:—"Until the nuptial ceremony has been completed, and the woman has become the recognised property of some individual man, she is regarded as the common property of the clan, and is treated accordingly; till then there is no restriction of intercourse. Even when the marriage knot has been tied, it is not very difficult to get it unloosed; for the contract is not binding for life, or invested with anything like a sacred character, as it is with the Hindus, and men can and do change their wives in a spirit of mutual accommodation.¹ It who has lately died, saying 'Oh! my father is dead! 'Oh! my brother is dead' are very marked, as is the fight with sticks between the bride and bridegroom. Finally we have the rule that after the ceremonial goings and comings are over, the wife must never visit her father's house without his special leave, and the fact that the village into which his daughter is married is utterly tabooed for her father, her elder brother, and all her near elder relatives. They may not go into it, or even drink water from a well in that village, for it is shameful to take anything from one's daughter or her belongings. Even her more distant elder relations will not eat or drink from the house into which the girl is married, though they do not taboo the whole village. The boy's father can go to the girl's village by leave of her father, but not without. Similarly, all words denoting male relations by marriage are commonly used as terms of abuse, as, for instance, sura, sāla, bahnai, jamāi, or father-in-law, wife's brother, sister's husband, and daughter's husband. Of these the first two are considered so offensive that they are seldom used in their ordinary sense." It is necessary to say that many of the conclusions of Mr Ibbetson, as thus given, have been disputed.¹

¹ Oudh Gazetteer, III, 503; and see Lecomte, Evolution of Marriage, 52.

18 Among the Thārus, to complete the analogy to the old custom of wife capture, there is no celebration of nuptial ceremonies after the bride and bridegroom have come to their journey's end. As soon as they enter the house appointed for them, ipso facto, man and wife. Mr Risley² remarks that slight traces of the form of capture may perhaps be discerned in the ritual, but these are not very marked among the Thārus of Bābār. "Brahmans officiate as priests, and the brother-in-law of the bride usually takes a prominent part in the proceedings. In the Mardaniya and Chitwaniya sub-tribes the bridegroom's party, instead of being entertained by the bride's people, are expected to feast the latter for three days before the bride is produced. No second ceremony (gauna) is performed when the bride goes finally to live with her husband. When she is married as an adult, she goes to her husband at once, and in all cases it is deemed proper for her to spend one night at her husband's house immediately after marriage. On the occasion of this visit she and the relations who accompany her unless he is accompanied by a select bodyguard of fellow tribesmen. They enter the bride's house in the evening, eat and drink all they can get there in the way of pig, goat, wine, rice, and ghî; and then carry her off on the following morning led by a band of men dancers, men singers, and men musicians, while the bride herself screams and cries as if she were being led off by violence. All this implies a demonstration of force, though no such thing as force is really anticipated or intended."

¹ Punjab Census Report I 336
² Loc. cit. II 314 sq.

17. It is needless to say that much the same fiction of capture is Marriage by capture. found in the marriage usages of other tribes as well as the Thârus. Thus, writing of the Eastern Districts of the Panjâb joining on to these Provinces, Mr. Ithetson¹ says:—"The strict rule of tribal exogamy which still binds all classes, both Hindu and Musalmân, excepting, however, the priests and traders, who observe only the prohibitions of the Sanskrit scriptures, especially the rule against marrying from neighbouring village, the formal nature of the wedding procession, which must be as far as possible mounted on horses, and in which males only may take part, the preparatory oiling of the bridegroom, the similar treatment of the bride being, perhaps, a later institution,—all point to marriage by capture. So does the use of the bloody hand at both villages. The marking all the turnings from the village gate to the bride's house may be a survival of a very common intermediate stage, where the bridegroom visits the bride by stealth. The rule that the procession must reach the girl's village after mid-day, must not enter the village, but remain outside in a place allotted to them, the fight between the girl's and boy's parties at the door of the bride's house, the rule that the girl shall wear nothing belonging to herself, the hiding of the girl from the boy's people at the wedding ceremony,—all point to marriage by capture. So does the rule by which the boy's party must not accept food at the hands of the girl's people after the wedding, and must pay for what they eat on the succeeding night, and the fiction by which the girl's father is compelled to ignore all payment of money by the bridegroom's friends. The bloody hand stamped on the shoulder of the boy's father by the girl's mother as he departs, and the custom which directs the girl to go off bewailing some one of her male relatives, third day she is allowed to drink as much wine as she desires, and some is rubbed over her body. Tharu women assist each other at the time of childbirth. They are said to be very skilful in midwifery, and Chamâr women are not employed for such purposes as among Hindus. They have a form of lustral ceremony or baptism for the benefit of new-born babes. On the day of its birth the child is immersed in water, while the oldest man in the family pronounces over it certain auspicious words. After the immersion ceremony is over, the child is fumigated with fire and smoke, a tuft of dry lâns or lusa grass is dug out by the roots. After placing the head of a snake and the sting of a scorpion inside the tuft, they set it on fire, holding the flame as near as possible to the place where the child is lying. The ingredients taken from the snake and scorpion are intended to render the child proof for the remainder of his life against the attack of secret enemies of all kinds. An iron tool is kept in the room where the child sleeps to avert the Evil Eye. When the child is four or five months old, a name is selected for it, and this is bestowed before an assembly of friends by the oldest man in the household."

¹ Panjab Ethnography, 1883 and see McLennan, Studies, 22, 419. Primitive Marriage, 27, 299.

23 Among the more Hinduised Tharus of Gonda, a Chamarin is sometimes called in at births, and after six days her place is taken by the wife of the barber. All Tharus, except the Kathariyas, starve the mother after delivery, and she is not fed without a preparatory offering of laddu sweetmeats to Bhagawati. On the twelfth day the birth pollution is removed by a bath. There is no trace of the couvade.

24 Among the Tharus if a man is childless, he adopts one of his nephews, in preference the son of his elder brother. He assembles the clansman and taking the boy in his lap, he puts his cap on his head, which signifies that he is his son. Among the Dangwariya sept in Gonda, when a man marries a widow he very often adopts her son by her first marriage, and the son thus adopted receives a larger share of the inheritance than the issue of the marriage with his mother.

25 Earth burial seems to have been the usual way in which the Tharus formerly disposed of their dead, but cremation is now taking its place, except in the case of those who die of cholera or small pox, these are always interred.

are entertained at a feast called dulhi bhatāwan, 'giving rice to the bride,' which celebrates her formal admission into the sept to which her husband belongs. If she is still an infant, she is taken back next day to her parents' house by her brother-in-law, and remains there until she has attained sexual maturity."

19. Among the Dangariyas of Gonda it is forbidden to introduce women of low castes, such as the Kori, Chamār, or Musalmān; but if one of the sept can induce a woman of a caste higher than his own to live with him, the union is recognised, and children born of the pair are regarded as legitimate and enjoy full tribal rights.

20. In Gorakhpur the betrothal is arranged by neighbours and friends on both sides, and the pledge of the engagement is the sending of twelve cups (larahi) of spirits by the father of the bridegroom to the house of the bride. When this is accepted the engagement is complete. There are three forms of marriage ceremony in vogue: the Pachhiwādhān or "Western," the Purbīha or "Eastern" and the Bhoj or "Banquet." The most respectable form, in which the rites are done at the house of the bride, whose father provides a suitable dowry, is known as Pachhiwādhān. In the Purbīha form no dowry is given. The Bhoj is the least respectable of all, and is only done by the very lowest members of the tribe. The hindling portion of all three forms is the sendūrbandhan, when the youth applies vermilion (sendūr) to the parting (māṅg) of the girl's hair.

21. Thāru marriages are usually done in the early spring; but this is not essential, and they have not reached the stage when the rite cannot be done except on a lucky day selected by a Brāhman astrologer. Polygamy, divorce in the form of the expulsion from the house of the faithless wife with the approval of the council, widow marriage, and the levirate under the usual restrictions are all allowed. Divorced women can marry again like widows, and both classes are distinguished by the title wari, or "selected," from women who were married as virgins by the full ritual. The social status of a married widow or divorcee is, however, inferior to that of a regularly married wife; but for the purposes of succession both rank alike.

22. Of the Thāru birth rites Mr. Nesfield¹ writes:—"After the birth of a child the mother is not allowed to taste food or water for two days. On the third day she is allowed to drink as much wine as she desires, and some is rubbed over her body. Thāru women assist each other at the time of childbirth. They are said to be very skilful in midwifery, and Chamar women are not employed for such purposes as among Hindus. They have a form of lustral ceremony or baptism for the benefit of new-born babes. On the day of its birth the child is immersed in water, while the oldest man in the family pronounces over it certain auspicious words. After the immersion ceremony is over, the child is fumigated with fire and smoke; a tuft of dry lāns or lusa grass is dug out by the roots. After placing the head of a snake and the sting of a scorpion inside the tuft, they set it on fire, holding the flame as near as possible to the place where the child is lying. The ingredients taken from the snake and scorpion are intended to render the child proof for the remainder of his life against the attack of secret enemies of all kinds. An iron tool is kept in the room where the child sleeps to avert the Evil Eye. When the child is four or five months old, a name is selected for it, and this is bestowed before an assembly of friends by the oldest man in the household."

Birth rites.

¹ Loc. cit., 16.

23. Among the more Hinduised Tharus of Gonda, a Chamārin is sometimes called in at births, and after six days her place is taken by the wife of the barber. All Tharus, except the Kathariyas, starve the mother after delivery, and she is not fed without a preparatory offering of laddu sweetmeats to Bhagawati. On the twelfth day the birth pollution is removed by a bath. There is no trace of the couvade.

24. Among the Tharus if a man is childless, he adopts one of his nephews, in preference the son of his elder brother. He assembles the clansman and taking the boy in his lap, he puts his cap on his head, which signifies that he is his son. Among the Dangwariya sept in Gonda, when a man marries a widow he very often adopts her son by her first marriage, and the son thus adopted receives a larger share of the inheritance than the issue of the marriage with his mother.

25. Earth burial seems to have been the usual way in which the Tharus formerly disposed of their dead, but cremation is now taking its place, except in the case of those who die of cholera or small-pox, these are always interred.

"After cremation the ashes are scattered in the nearest river. Before, however, the corpse has been disposed of by either rite, it is usual to paint it with vermilion and expose it for one night on a mound outside the house. From this mound, as from a stronghold, the spirit of the dead is supposed to scare away wild animals from the crops.¹ Whether the body is buried or burnt, the ceremony is always performed on the southern side of the village, a notion probably borrowed from the Hindus, who consider that the north is the region commonly frequented by divine spirits, and the south by human souls.² The man who puts the first fire to the funeral pyre is considered to be unclean from having brought himself within dangerous reach of the contagion of death. He is therefore, kept at a distance for ten days after cremation, and compelled to live entirely alone. On the expiry of the tenth (or the thirteenth as some Thāris relate) the friends of the deceased meet at the house where he died, and after undergoing the ceremony of shaving, they hold a feast of the dead. The banquet prepared for this purpose consists of cooked flesh and wine, the scent and smoke of which are intended to refresh the departed soul; the solid parts, that is, the flesh and wine, themselves are consumed by the living." Mr. Nesfield³ suggests that the funeral feast consumed by the relations developed into the feeding of Brāhmins, because while offerings to the dead should be made through fire, Manu⁴ taught that "there is no difference between fire and a Brāhman," and that an oblation of food to such a holy man is "an offering in the fire of a sacerdotal mouth."

26. "In certain rare cases the burial rite is performed in a manner distinct from either of those already described. A man noted above his fellows for wisdom in counsel, bravery in the chase, or knowledge of the magical or medicinal arts, is buried under the floor of the house in which he was living before his spirit departed. The house thenceforth becomes a temple, and ceases to be used as a dwelling-place for man.⁵ The soul of the dead becomes its

¹ With this compare Spencer, Principles of Sociology, I, 257, 299; Tylor, Primitive Culture, II, 150.

² Mann, Institutes, III, 206; for the situation of Yamapura or Yamasodana, see Monier-Williams, Brāhmanism and Hinduism, 290.

³ Spencer, loc. cit., I, 155, 299; Tylor, loc. cit., II, 30.

⁴ Institutes, III, 212, 91-168.

⁵ Spencer, loc. cit., I, 251.

occupant, and it lives there to bless those whom it has left behind. At periods of three or six months after the death, the friends and neighbours of the deceased assemble round his grave or temple and make an effigy in clay, parts of which are painted in various colours, intended to reproduce the appearance of re-suscitated life. His worshippers fall down weeping and wailing before the image, and place offerings of cooked flesh and wine at its feet. Presently, at a given signal as soon as the soul of the dead is believed to have been propitiated by the scent of roast meat and the fumes of wine they commence to dance and sing with every expression of joy, and the proceedings of the day are closed with consuming the solid parts of the offering.

27. According to another account from Gonda, the dead are cremated, except those who have died without heirs, and these are buried. The Jogi Tharus, as already stated, raise a mound (samīth) over the graves of their dead. When a corpse is cremated, they bury the ashes on the spot or throw them into a neighbouring stream. Only a few, who are more completely Hinduised, carry the bones to the Ganges. When a person dies of pestilence the body is buried for the time, and, when the plague is over, disinterred and cremated. They shave the hair of the corpse, cut the nails, bathe it, and rub it with ubtan, consisting of ground mustard mixed with turmeric and water. It is then carried on a cot to the cremation ground. The mourners take with them some pulse, rice, ghee, and some earthen vessels. Before the corpse is burnt, they make two fireplaces on which they place two vessels, in which each of the mourners, by turn, cooks some rice and pulse. Then the corpse is placed upon the pyre, and the chief mourner walks seven times round it and sets fire to it. On their return to the house of the deceased, his widow and children wash some copper piece in water and sprinkle it over the party of mourners. The relatives supply some spirits and the friends sharbat, which are mixed together and drunk by all present. The man who burns the pyre secludes himself ten days in the case of a dead man and nine days for a woman. The Kathariya and Dangwariva sects keep a lamp burning in the house for ten days after the death to give light to the ghost when it comes to visit its home. On the tenth day they feast their clansmen, and on the thirteenth Brahmans. The other Tharus perform the rites in the ordinary Hindu way.

28. The religion of the more primitive branches of the Thârus is based on a belief in ghosts and consists of little else ; the Thârus of the plains are becoming rapidly Hinduised. The soul is believed to survive the body, wandering forth into space and frequenting the haunts of the living sometimes with malignant, sometimes with friendly, intentions. " One Thâru, on being questioned what became of the soul after death, gave an answer; which verifies, with remarkable closeness, the explanation of the ghost theory given by Dr. Tylor. He said that at the time of sleep his soul or second self leaves him and wanders about at will; and as he was not able to say where his soul goes to or what it does during the intervals of sleep, so he could not pretend to say what became of it after the final sleep of death had set in.¹ "

29. Mr. Knowles, whose knowledge of the beliefs of the Thârus is unique, writes²—" It was to be expected that this people would be very superstitious. The bhûts or demons lurking in the forest trees, especially the weird semal or cotton tree (bombax heptaphylla) and the prets or spirits of the dead lead there a very miserable life. When the last ray of light leaves the forest, and the darkness settles down upon their villages, all the Thâru men and women and children huddle together inside their fast-closed huts in mortal dread of these ghostly beings, more savage and cruel than the leopards, tigers, and bears that now prowl about for their prey. Only the terrible cry of " Fire " will bring these poor fear-stricken creatures to open their doors and remove the heavy barriers from their huts at night; and even in the day time, amid the hum of human life, the songs of the birds, and the lowing of the cattle no Thâru—man, woman or child—will ever venture along a forest line without casting a leaf, a branch, or a piece of old rag upon the Bansati formed at the entrance of the deep woods, to save themselves from the many diseases and accidents the goblins and malicious spirits of the forests can bring upon and cause them. The Bansati or ' good spirit ' of the woods is a square space cut in the ground six feet by six covered with pine branches. "

30. The Thâru patron saint Raksha or Rikheswar has been already mentioned. Mr. Risky³ thinks that he is identical with the ¹ Needell, loc. cit. 18. sq. & Tylor, Primitive Culture, I, 422, sq.

² Loc. cit., 211.

³ R.A.J., II, 315.

Rikhmun of the Musahar Bhuiyas Malignant spirits "cause fever, ague, cough, dysentery, fainting, headache, madness, bad dreams, and pains of all sorts. In fact the Thârus have no conception of natural disease, and no belief in natural death, except what is faintly conceived to be the result of physical decay. Their state, therefore, would be one of utter helplessness, were it not for the reputed skill of medium men or sorcerers, who profess to have the power to control the spirits of the air, or to interpret their grievances or wants. In the Thâru language these men are called Bararar, but the titles of Guru, Gurua, Bhagat, Nyotya, Ojhait, all of which are borrowed from the Hindi, are now in common use, though even of these the last two are probably of aboriginal or non-Sanskritic origin. The power of the medicine man is tremendous. He has a host of huge spirits at his command. Not only can he expel a fiend from the body of a sufferer, but he can produce suffering or death by driving a malignant spirit into the body of his foe. In order to exorcise an evil spirit, he holds in his left hand some ashes of cowdung, or grains of mustard seed, or wild nuts, and after breathing some mystical virtue into them by the utterance of a spell, he causes the patient to eat them, or has them attached to his arm. One of the spells uttered at such times is as follows. It is addressed to Kalka, the Thâru goddess of death and patroness of the magical arts —

Gurhai Gur sair, Gur lantra mantra, Gur,

Lakhai niranjan, toka sohai phulka bhâr,

Hamka sohai gun vidya kai bhar

Yahân lai vidya nahîn,

Kamru Kâri kai vidya

Jaisê vidya Kâmrû Kâm lai lâgai waisê uilya lâgai mor

The language is that of bad and scarcely intelligible Hindi and may be rendered thus —

"The Guru Kalka is great, she is everything, she is magic by deeds (lantra), she is magic by words (mantra). She points out the way to relief. Thou, O Kalka, deservest to be heaped with flowers! I too deserve to be heaped with secret wisdom, the wisdom of Kâmrû Kâm, not the wisdom of the country. Whatever effect the knowledge of Kâmrû Kâm produces, such effects let my knowledge produce also."

31 Mr Knowles¹ says — "Their religion is as simple as themselves. A very primitive piece of wood in the shape of a Mahâdeva stone, near which is erected a long stick, with a bit of red cloth fastened to the top, is all they have as an object of worship; and I found a very few in a village pay any attention even to this. They have some idea of a Supreme Being they call Nârâyan, who gives them sunshine and rain and harvests; but they have no proper idea how this great, far-off Being is to be approached and worshipped. I found about five Thârus, who had taken to themselves the luxury of a Brâhman Gura from Balrâmpur, and who carried on pûja in the usual Hindu orthodox way."

32. "The goddess who presides over life and death, and whom the Thârus believe to be the supreme power in the universe, is Kâlîka, one of the numerous forms of Devi, Durga or Kâli, at whose name all India trembles, especially the low tribes and the casteless tribes, among whom she originally sprung. One of her titles in Oudh is Sonmat or Sonwat, "the crescent headed;" Chândika Devi is the goddess of the Bhars, and her name means the same. Mari, the patron goddess of Kanjars, is also worshipped by them. She appears to be identical with Samai or Samaiya, who, according to Dr. Buchanan,¹ is a Thâru deity. Medicine men look to Kâlîka as the special patroness of their art. To the fair sex she is the goddess of parturition, and her aid is specially invoked by women who have had no children. All classes combine to give her a periodical ovation, accompanied by much dancing, banqueting, and drinking of wine, about the middle of October. Thârus also take part in the huge animal sacrifice performed at the celebrated altar in Devi Pâtan, in the Gonda district. Such is her thirst for blood that at this time twenty buffaloes, two hundred and fifty goats, and two hundred and fifty pigs are slaughtered daily, for ten days continuously. The sacrifice is vicarious, the blood of the buffaloes, etc., being intended as a substitute for that of human victims. This loathsome festival is thronged with visitors from the plains of India and from the hills of Nepâl, Sikkhim and Bhûtân."²

33. "Another deity revered by Thârus, and like Kâlîka of indigenous or non-Aryan origin, is her consort Siva, known chiefly among Thârus by the name of Bhairava, 'The Terrible,' Thâkur, 'The Lord,' and amongst Hindus by that of Mahâdeva, 'The

¹ Eastern India, II, 339.

² Neufeldt, loc. cit., 27.

Great God.' He, like his spouse, is a god of destruction and thirst for blood. But he is chiefly worshipped by the Thārus as the author of reproduction, of which a stone lingam, as among Hindus, is made the symbol. It is more usual, however, for a Thāru to erect a mud mound in front of his house, and fix an upright pole in the centre, to represent the presence of this phallic divinity. Nature worship among Thārus is represented by two deities of some importance. One is Madhu the god of intoxicating liquor, specially of the rice wine made by themselves. He represents the goddess Varnani, Vuruni, Madu or Sura of Vnishnavism.¹ The other is Dharehandi, 'the patroness of cattle,' though her name would imply that she was at first intended to personate the Earth. Her shrine, like those of the deities already named, is a mound of clay. The mound dedicated to Dharehandi is studded with short wooden crosses, on which rice, pulse, and other produce of the fields are offered, and always on plates of leaf. Her shrine is so placed that all the cattle of the village, together with the swine, sheep, and goats, pass it on going out to graze, and re-pass it on their return. When the cattle sicken or die, larger and more valuable offerings are made. Neither of these deities is known or worshipped by other natives of Upper India." In Champāran, Kuān is worshipped as a village deity by casting sweetmeats down a well (kuān) and smearing vermilion on its rim.²

31. In Gonda, besides the worship of Mahādeva and Bhāgawati, the Jogi Thārus worship a deified worthy known as Rutināth. They have also minor village deities, known as Garar Bīr, Kālī, and Deohār, or the collective village pantheon. Bhāgawati is worshipped on the tenth of Kuār with a sacrifice of a pig or a fowl and with an offering of milk and wine. At the same time the brethren are fed on sweetmeat. If there are several Thāru families in a village, they will each feed the brethren on successive days. Those who are poor feed only one member of each family of the brethren. Mahādeva is worshipped daily with an offering of sandal, washed rice (achhat), flowers, incense, a lighted lamp, and water. The worship of Garar Bīr and Kālī is done in the months of Jeth, Bhādon, and Aghān. In the months of Jeth and Bhādon the offering consists of a pig, goat, ram, fowl, wine, and milk. In Aghān they offer the maguri fish (macropteroxalus magur), fowls, eggs, rats, wine, and milk. The above is the rule among the Dangwariyn Thârus. The Kathariyn offer a ram in Asârh, and in Aghan a mixture of new rice, ghi, and sugar. The offerings are consumed by the worshippers. The worship of these deities is often carried on by a general subscription among all the Thârû residents of the village.

¹ Monier Williams, Brahmanism and Hinduism, 163

² Risley, loc. cit., II, 216

35. In Gorakhpur their chief objects of worship are Mahâdeva and Bhawâni. They have also a crowd of minor godlings, such as Sâwan, Lutta, Mangan, the Jâk and Jâkni, who are field godlings; Brahm, a deified Brâhman ghost; Mari, the goddess of death, and Bâgheswari, the tiger goddess. Of the origin and attributes of these godlings they are quite ignorant. Sâwan, Lutta, and Mangan receive a sacrifice of a cock at the Nanrâtri; Bâgheswari is worshipped through a Gurua or Ojha with an offering of rice-milk. After sowing the autumn crops, Jâk and Jâkni receive an offering of some oilcake and a chicken. At the same time a cock is offered to Mari. Brahm is worshipped at any time of sickness or other trouble with an oblation of milk.

36. Thârus hold three animals sacred above all others, and these they would deem it a sacrilege to destroy—Animal and plant wor- the cow, the serpent, and the monkey,—of ship. which the cow and monkey are probably adored through the example of their Hindu neighbours. The snake has a special service at the Nâgpanchami. The only tree to which they appear to show any particular respect is the pîpal.

37. In the spring Thârus observe the annual festival of fire, an observance "resembling, in many respects, the Festivals. Holi of the Hindus, and known to Thârus themselves by this and no other name. A mound of earth is prepared, in the centre of which a pole is fixed in a vertical position, the phallic emblem of reproductive energy. Offerings of turmeric, hemp, dhatûra, and other pungent or odorous herbs are placed upon the pole and mound by the assembled people. Straw and stubble and sticks are then piled around the pole; and the oldest or most respected man in the assembly puts fire to it. After the bonfire has burnt itself out, they amuse themselves with dancing, playing the drum and cymbals, pelting each other with coloured powder, singing amorous songs, and cracking lascivious jokes. The evening is spent in feasting on roast meats and rice and drinking wine. The only difference between this and the Hindu form of the Holi is that the same gods and demi-gods are not honoured in the one as in the other, and that the Thârus have retained the old phallic emblem, which among Hindus has gone entirely out of use"¹ As has been shown elsewhere,² this probably represents a more primitive form of the usage than that at present prevailing among Hindus. We have met a similar usage among the Dravidian tribes of Mirzapur, who burn the old year (sambat jalîna) in the form of a stake. In Gorakhpur, where the Thârus have come more completely under Brâhmanical influence, they observe all the ordinary Hindu festivals.

38. Mr. Nesfield³ has given an elaborate account of the social life of the Thârus. They live by hunting and fishing, gathering forest fruits and vegetables, grazing cows and buffaloes, making ghî, keeping pigs, fowls, and goats, and practising a rude form of agriculture "As hunters they despise and shun such vermin as jackals, snakes, and lizards. The animals which they chiefly hunt are the wild boar, the deer, the antelope, and other large game in which their forests still abound. They also lay snares for the porcupine (saâhî) and eat its flesh, which is considered to bear some resemblance to that of the pig. Sometimes, but only when they are pressed for food, they will eat field rats. They are fond of hares when they can catch them, and they are not averse to the flesh of the river tortoise. When the stock of meat happens to become larger than they can consume at once, their mode of preserving it is by cutting it into strips and drying it in the sun"

39 Mr. Knowles⁴ remarks that though the men and boys go about almost in a nude state, with only a piece of cloth hung loose in front, held by a string fastened round the waist, yet the wives and daughters of the tribe are so well clothed that only the arms and feet are left exposed.

40 In Gonda they eat pork, and the flesh of deer and those cloven-footed animals which ordinary Hindus eat, fowls, fish, both scaled and scaleless, tortoises, rats and hares. They will not eat beef, or the flesh of the monkey, crocodile, snake, lizard, jackal, and

¹ Nesfield, loc cit, 30

² Introduction to Popular Religion and Folklore, 301, 32

³ Loc cit, 3 377

⁴ Loc cit, 210

other vermin. This is also the case in Gorakhpur; but here there seems to be an increasing tendency towards the restrictions in force among Rājputs, of whom they claim to form a branch. In Gonda all Thārus will smoke together. The Kusumha, Dahel, Lampochhua and Parjuriya or Palpharaha septs eat kachchi and drink together. These will not eat with Kumhār Jogi and Dhaker. But the latter will eat from the Kusumha. The Dangwariya and Katheriya will eat pakki together. The Brāhmans and Kshatriyas of the hills will not touch food from any Thāru; but they will drink water drawn by members of the Dangwariya sept. The Brāhmans of the plains will drink water drawn by the Katheriyas. Their chief fishing implements are the hook and line, the net and the funnel-shaped basket. They often poison the water and catch fish in this way. Their favourite root is a plant of the yam species, which grows freely at the foot of the hills. Wild rice, the flower of the mahua tree (bassia latifolia) and the fruit of the wild fig tree are gathered in their several seasons. Until recently they used to cultivate in a rude way by cutting and burning down the jungle, but now they cultivate the transplanted rice throughout the Tarāi, and they have a valuable source of food in the plantain which grows plentifully around their villages. Mr. Knowles¹ writes that "the rice which is not carefully taken out of the husk and is therefore all broken, is their principal food. They eat three times a day. At what answers to our breakfast they eat a meal of boiled rice; at what we call our tiffin they make a meal of boiled rice-water, and at our dinner time they make a more substantial meal of pulse and rice and the meat of any game they may have shot or caught in the jungle. But they never eat bread of any kind. Little wheat is grown and that for market. The first meal is called kalwa or kalewa (Sanskrit kalya-rarta); the second mingi and the third beri." The women do the largest part of the sowing, weeding and harvesting, while the men engage in hunting, fishing, etc., which they regard as the proper occupation of their sex. "The only kind of labour, which a Thāru will undertake, is that of elephant-driver to some Rāja. Their skill as elephant-drivers is admitted everywhere; and latterly they have acquired the art of catching wild elephants from the forest and taming them for the Rāja of Balrāmpur and other noblemen."

¹ Loc. cit., 211.

41 Their villages, according to Mr. Knowles,¹ are from one to two miles distant from each other, and the houses are all made of wood or grass. The outside grass walls of each house are plastered over with red mud. They never use cowdung for this and other household purposes as is usual with the people outside the jungle, that they use only for manure. The cattle sheds are protected from beasts of prey by strong wooden palings. The wells in the village are kept from falling in by boards being let down and fastened together. The houses are large, cool and commodious, and generally raised on poles, like those of the Dyaks described by Mr. Wallace,² in order to protect the inmates from damp and malaria. They contain large jars of red clay in which food grain and seed rice are kept. Dr. Buchanan³ remarks that "the huts of the Thārus have straight ridges, and in general are much wider and longer than those of other natives. But one hut usually serves as the residence of a family, which in the southern parts of the District would have three or four huts round a yard. On one side of the hut is usually a garden, neatly fenced and containing tobacco, mustard and a few plantain trees. The Thārus keep cows, buffaloes, sheep, goats, fowls, and pigeons, and this live stock occupies an open end of their hut separated from the dwelling apartments by a hurdle wall."

42 "Every little village," writes Mr. Nesfield⁴ "is a self-governing community. Disputes are decided by a council of elders, and this is sometimes presided over by a headman who, in the Thāru language, was formerly called Barwaik, but who is now dubbed even by themselves with the ordinary Hindu title of Chaudhān. The office of headman is not hereditary. The man selected is one whose age, experience and knowledge of the magical and medicinal arts entitle him to more respect than the rest, and he acquires the status of headman by tacit consent and not by formal election. The decisions of the council or the headman are obeyed unreservedly, and there is no such thing known as a Thāru taking a fellow tribesman before a tribunal outside his own community. Litigation between Thārus and Hindus is equally unknown. Amongst themselves the Thārus are, for the most part, a peaceful and good natured race,

¹ Loc cit 111

² Malaya Archipelago 59

³ Eastern India II 40

⁴ Loc cit 6 sq

following without question, as if by a law of nature, the customs and maxims of their ancestors."

43. Their strongest form of oath is placing the hand on the lingam of Mahâdeva or on the shrine of Kâlîka. "A less potent oath, and one evidently derived from the Hindus, is by holding water in the palm of the hand, the water being supposed to have come from the Ganges. When two persons accuse each other of some fault, and it is known that one or other must be guilty, resort is had to the floating test. The two disputants are flung simultaneously into deep water, and the one who rises first is declared guilty. Another kind of ordeal practised by them consists of throwing a coin into a bowl of boiling oil or boiling water, and thrusting in the arm to take it out. If the arm comes out unblistered the person is declared innocent."

44. "The tools and weapons used by the Thârus are not made by themselves. The share of the plough, the point of the spear, the blade of the axe or hatchet, and the blade of the hoe with which they dig the yam are procured from Lohârs. The recollection of stone weapons survives even in tradition. The curved knife (khukhuri) is procured from Nepâl. Their plough is of the same design as that used by Hindus, but more simple, for the upright pole (jangha), to which the oxen are attached is in the same piece of wood with the curved part to which the iron share is fastened." They work in bamboo, reeds, and fibres, and make baskets, snares, nets, and similar appliances for hunting and fishing. A peculiar article of dress is the broad leaf umbrella worn over the head to keep off the sun and rain.

45. They have a national dance performed by boys or men, never by girls or women. "A boy of fifteen or sixteen is dressed as a woman, and his partner beats a small drum suspended from the neck. The pair advance and retreat with a gliding motion, and represent with coarse fidelity the advances of the lover and the coyness of the maid. As they proceed they warm to the work; and I shall never forget the ecstatic but somewhat ludicrous rapture which shone in the face and spake in every limb of the drummer after two hours of the exercise and the infusion of a large amount of raw spirits. Every now and then the dancing gives place to a dramatic interlude, in which a dullard is made the butt of the rough and occasionally obscene wit of the leading actor. These scenes were invariably the vehicle of satire, and the Brâhmans of the plains and Sir Jang Bahâdur of Nepâl were visited with unsparring ridicule."¹

46. They make their principal intoxicating drinks from rice. This rice liquor is drunk more or less every day, and every member of the family—from the oldest Intoxicating drinks. to the youngest—drinks it. "They say by only thus drinking they can be kept alive in these forests, especially in the rains. The water in the village wells is certainly not fit to drink without some disinfecting process, and the Thârus themselves say that drinking it would kill a desi or person living outside the forest in a week. Of course they drink to excess on special occasions. Every now and then they have a big nâch or dance of a very degrading kind. In it they act a regular play in which there is a plot and a grand finale. A Nepâl prince who carries off a beautiful Thâru girl figures in it. The women take part in it, and I am told the curtain had better fall over the last act."²

47. Like all secluded races the Thârus are notorious for witchcraft and in the plains, Thâruhat or "the Thâru country" is a synonym for witch land. "Every Thâru woman," says Mr. Knowles,³ "after the marriageable age, is supposed by those who live outside the Thâru country to possess the tona or power of the Evil Eye to bewitch and enchant; so that she has the power to turn a desi or stranger into a wild animal or destroy him slowly by consumptive fever. This, I find, is one reason why all the natives outside the forest dread the Thârus and fear to live among them. The forest officer has had the greatest difficulty in getting carpenters and masons to come out and build his house, because they were afraid of Thâru tona. The power of the Evil Eye displays itself in two forms: the major curse being known as lokna, which commences with violent wasting away, and results invariably in a rapid death. For the lesser (bej), recovery may be expected; it displays itself in a low fever accompanied with diarrhœa. The fever and dysentery of the Tarâi keep the superstition alive. Both men and animals are supposed to be subject to this malignant influence; but a handsome bachelor is considered the most likely victim. The souls of those who are thus affected remain for ever in the power of the enchantress, and when she dies she becomes a Bhukchm, a malignant demon, commanding a troop of the souls she has slain. Among the lower castes of Hindus, and especially the Kewats and Châis, whose traditional descent from the Kaivartas or Nishâdas stamps them as non-Aryan, are found individuals who possess the secret antidote to the fascination. At Pipra Ghât on the Râpti, between Utraula and Tulasipur, there is an especially famous exorcisor, who has a large school of pupils."¹

¹ Oudh Gazetteer, III, 504.

² Knowles, loc. cit., 212. It has been generally believed that the Thârus are proof against malaria but the Bengal returns (Census Report, 173) shows that they are unusually short lived.

³ Loc. cit., 214.

48. The only caste with whom the Thârus live on in intimate terms is that of the Banjâras. The honesty of the Thârus is proverbial. It is said that when a family flies into the hills they will always leave any arrears of rent that may be due tied up in a rag to the lintel of their deserted house. It is said that husband and wife never quarrel. "This is not," says Mr. Knowles,² "because the women are kept under; for they seem as free and independent in their movements as the men. A Thâru woman will look as straight at you when you speak of her as a European woman will. I noticed another good trait in the social character of these people. The parents seem as fond of the girls as of the boys, and make no degrading distinction as the natives of the plains do. The Thâru's word of endearment for his wife is jâni. He calls his daughter a bâbu and his son a bhâiya—"My love," "my lord," "my brother."

Distribution of Thârus according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Bareilly	8	Tarâi	15,332
Pilibhît	46	Kheri	1,975
Gorakhpur	3,072	Gonda	2,475
Basti	208	Bahrâkh	2,311
Kumaun	65	TOTAL	25,492

¹ Oudh Gazetteer, III, 503.

² Loc. cit., 210.

Thathera¹—(Probably derived from Sanskrit taṣṭa-kīra, "one who polishes")—The caste of braziers and makers and sellers of brass and copper vessels. It is not easy to ascertain exactly the difference of function between the Kasera and Thathera. According to Mr. Nesfield:² "The Kasera's speciality lies in mixing the softer metals (zinc, copper, and tin), and moulding the alloy into various shapes, such as cups, bowls, plates, etc. The Thathera's art consists in polishing and engraving the utensils which the Kasera supplies." In the Panjāh it would seem that the Kasera is the capitalist dealer, while the Thathera is the skilled artisan.³ But these functions seem to overlap, and in Mirzapur the term Thathera seems to be more generally applied to the craftsman who makes ornaments out of the alloy known as phul.

2. Curiously enough, there is, in Oudh, a widespread tradition that the Thatheras were lords of the land before the Rājput invasion.⁴ Mr. McMinn hazards the speculation that the Thatheras of Oudh legend were Bhars, others say that they were Thārus. But all this is mere speculation, and we really know nothing as to the people who are referred to. The tribe in Mirzapur say that they came from Bengal some three or four generations ago, and they name a place called Nasirganj in the Shāhābād District as their head quarters. In Lucknow they say that they were originally Kshatriyas, and they have the stock story that, when Parasurama destroyed the Kshatriya race, one of their women, who was pregnant, was protected by a certain Kamandala Rishi, and that her offspring founded the caste of Thatheras. They add that their original home was a place called Ratanpur in the Dakkhin. In Benares, according to Mr. Sherring,⁵ they wear the Brāhmanical thread and claim to hold a place intermediate between the Kshatriyas and Vaisyas. The caste is obviously purely occupational.

3. The internal organization of the caste is very complex. At the last Census no less than three hundred and fourteen sub castes were recorded, but

¹ Based on enquiries at Mirzapur and notes by M. Chhoté Lal Lucknow Pandit Baldeo Prasad, Deputy Collector, Cawnpur.

² Brief View, 29.

³ Johnston's Monograph on Brass and Copper Ware 17.

⁴ Elliott's Chronicles of Uda, 25. Oudh Gazetteer I, 22. 221 sq. 270. 275. Hardoi Settlement Report, 75, 85, 100, 165, 227.

⁵ Hindu Tribes I 321.

it is at present impossible to say how many of these represent endogamous, and how many exogamous, groups. In Mirzapur there are two endogamous groups, Awadhiya or "those of Oudh," and Bhusantiya. In Lucknow the chief exogamous groups are Bhariya, Bangariya, Barwar, Daundiya Kheriya, who take their name from the famous Bais Rājput stronghold on the Ganges, Gurha, Barhariya, Tusaha, Gulraha, Dandiya, Jarseth, and Lodh.

4. The exogamous groups practise the usual rule which excludes the line of the paternal and maternal uncle and the paternal and maternal aunt for three or four generations, or until all knowledge of relationship is lost.

5. They marry in the orthodox way by the forms known as byāh or chāhana and dola. Widow marriage and the levirate are allowed under the usual restrictions.

6. Some Thatheras are Saivas; but most of them are Vaishnavas. In Mirzapur they worship Mahābīr, the Pānchon Pīr, and Devi in the form of Bhāgawati. Mahābīr is worshipped in the months of Sāwan or Kuār and on the birth of a child with an offering of sweetmeats, fried gram (ghughuri), bread, and the erection of a flag (jhanda) in his honour. The Pānchon Pīr are worshipped at marriages and at the festivals of the Diwāli and Khichari; at marriages with an offering of a head-dress (maur) and food, on the Diwāli with parched grain (lāi, chura), and at the Khichari with khichari or rice boiled with pulse. They worship as a fetish the furnace (bhatti) in which the metal they work up is melted. In Lucknow their anvil (nihāi) and hammer represent a deity known as Kalawati Kanya or "the skilful maiden." Their domestic ceremonies are superintended by a low class of Brāhmins, who, in Lucknow, are Tiwāris.

7. They drink spirits and eat goat's meat and mutton as well as fish. They eat pakki cooked by Brāhmaas, Rājputs, and Halwāis; but kachchi only if cooked by one of their own caste. Banyas and all lower castes eat pakki cooked by them; but kachchi cooked by them is eaten only by Nāis and other castes of similar social standing.

Distribution of the Thatheras according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Musal- mans.	TOTAL.
Dehra Dûn	9	...	9
Sahāranpur	71	17	88
Muzaffarnagar	91	252	343
Meerut	37	...	37
Bulandshahr	10	...	10
Aligarh	129	...	129
Mathura	347	...	347
Agra	133	...	133
Farrukhābād	304	...	304
Mainpuri	81	...	81
Etāwah	94	...	94
Etāh	39	...	39
Bareilly	32	...	32
Bynor	148	216	364
Budāun	31	...	31
Morādābād	60	...	60
Shābjahānpur	356	...	356
Pilibhit	29	...	29
Cawnpur	247	...	247
Fatehpur	492	...	492
Bānda	259	...	259
Hamirpur	86	...	86
Allahābād	1,398	...	1,398
Jhānsi	546	...	546
Jālaun	87	...	87
Lahitpur	137	...	137

Distribution of the Thatheras according to the Census of 1891 —concluded.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Musal- mins.	TOTAL.
Benares	470	...	470
Mirzapur	143	...	143
Jaunpur	907	...	907
GhAzipur	806	...	806
Ballia	414	...	414
Gorakhpur	1,631	...	1,631
Basti	1,605	...	1,605
Azamgarh	1,826	...	1,826
Tarāi	12	37	49
Lucknow	702	...	702
Unāo	1,233	...	1,233
Rāi Bareilly	129	...	129
Sitapur	317	...	317
Hardoi	65	...	65
Kheri	777	...	777
Faizābād	351	...	351
Gonda	2,136	...	2,136
Faizābād	533	...	533
Saltānpur	513	...	513
Partābgarh	430	...	430
Bārabanki	547	...	547
TOTAL	20,823	532	21,345

Thavai—(Sanskrit stāpātī, "a master-builder").—The caste of masons and bricklayers. At the last Census they appear to have been included under Rāj (g. v.). They are the Thavi of the Panjāb, who is a mason and bricklayer in the hills, and claims to have been originally a Brâhman, who was degraded because he took to working in stone. The caste is purely occupational and contains both Hindus and Muhammadans, the latter say that their first ustâd or teacher was Baba Ibrahîm, or father Abraham. The Hindu branch say the same of Viswakarma, the architect of the gods. The Muhammadan branch worship their tools at the Id festival, and offer sweetmeat to them. The Hindu Thavais, when they commence work in the morning, say Viswakarma ki jay ho "Glory to Viswakarma."

Tiyar, Tiar — A Dravidian boating and fishing tribe in the Eastern Districts, sometimes classed as a sub-tribe of the Mallah. The word is possibly derived from Sanskrit tīra, "a hunter or fisherman." According to Mr Risley's account¹ their customs on the whole correspond with those of the allied fishing and boating tribes. They are apparently the same as the so-called Teehurs of Oudh, who furnish one of the stock instances of communitio marriage. They are said to "live almost indiscriminately in large communities, and even when two people are regarded as married the tie is but nominal."² Though there may be considerable laxity of sexual intercourse among a people, the males of whom are compelled by their profession to leave the women for considerable intervals, the statement is perhaps exaggerated. The Tiyars also furnish one of the best modern cases of human sacrifice. The account given by Mr Goad,³ after describing how the bodies of two murdered men were found in 1865 in a hut in the Benares district, goes on to say — "Two of the Tiyar caste had been down to Bengal in charge of some boats, when they returned they brought a letter addressed to the Tiyar caste calling on them to become vegetarians (bhagat), they were not to kill fish, nor eat them any more. This letter appears to have been circulated among the Tiyar caste in the Benares, Azamgarh, and Ghazipur districts, and which resulted in the above assemblage, on which occasion they acted a regular play by five men representing five deities — Râm, Mahahir, Mahadeo Senior (etc), Zethut (etc), and Mahadeo Junior (etc) — that is to say, the three defendants — Bem, Pirthi Pal, and Bassi represented the deities

¹ Tribes and Castes sqq II 323

² Lubbock, Origin of Civilisation 83 quoting Watson and Kaye The People of India II plate 85

³ Quoted by Dr Cherrers Medical Jurisprudence, 400 sqq from Lowin's Police Oude, 205

Râm, Mahâhîr, and Mahâdeo Junior, and the deceased Shinbharat and Râm Sewak, Mahâdeo Senior and Zetbut; and by the order of Râm, Mahâdeo Junior, and Mahâhîr slew Zetbut and Mahâdeo Senior, Râm having promised to bring them to life again. This appears to be a most curious case, as nothing of the kind has been heard of before. The actors in this affair are a low caste, and next to savages, so that it is difficult to get a proper meaning to the catastrophe."

2. The same is the name of a clan of Râjputs in Sultânpur. Mr. Millet¹ describes them as nearly an extinct race, who are said to have been at one time lords of Pargana Sultânpur. "They succeeded the Bhadaiyâns, the conquerors of the Bhars and were in turn overcome by the Bachgotis, whose star is at present in the ascendant. The order of succession is chronicled in the following doggerel lines:—

Bhar mâr Bhadaiyân :

Bhadaiyân mâr Tiyar :

Tiyar mâr Bachgoti.

The Tiyars gave their name to one of the old sub-divisions of the pargana, Tappa Tiyar, and this, perhaps, rather than the entire pargana, was the extent of their dominions. At present they have nothing more than a right of occupancy in a few acres in their own Tappa. Regarding the Tiyars very little is known. Mr. Carnegie² considers them to belong to the Solar race; they themselves say that they are descended from immigrants from Baiswâre, who received a grant of the Bhadaiyâns territory from the Râja of Benares. Mr. Millet suggests a connection between their name and the Tarâi or Tirabbukti (Tirhût).

Tomar (Sanskrit tomara, "a club") Tunwar.—A famous sept of Râjputs. Though a sub-division of the Yadubansi they are usually reckoned as one of the thirty-six royal races. They furnished India with the dynasty of Vikramaditya. Delhi was rebuilt by Anangpâl Tomar in A.D. 731—736 and became his capital and that of several of his successors; but, according to General Cunningham,³ there is reason to believe that subsequently the Tomar capital was removed to Kanauj, where it remained for several generations prior to the invasion of Mahmûd of Ghazni. Shortly after that the small town of Bîri, north of Lucknow, became the capital till about 1050 A.D., when the Tomars returned to Delhi before the growing power of the Râthours; and then Anangpâl, the Second, rebuilt the city and erected the Lâlkot. There is an inscription of his on the iron pillar, dated 1052 A.D., and just a century after Anangpâl III was defeated by Visala Deva, Chauhân, in 1151-52 A.D. The history of the dynasty has been worked out with great detail by General Cunningham.

¹ Sultânpur Settlement Report, 131, sq.

² Notes, 27.

³ Archæological Reports, I, 111, p. 12. & 221.

2. The Tomar dynasty of Gwâlior was founded by Bîr Sinh Deva, who was probably a member of the Delhi family, and, according to the annalists, declared his independence in the time of Alâ-ud-dîn Khiljî; but there is a difficulty about the dates, and General Cunningham¹ believes that the rise of the Tomars must have taken place during the few troubled years that immediately preceded the invasion of Timûr. His successor, Dungar Sinh, who came to the throne in 1421, raised the kingdom to great prosperity and began the great rock sculptures. Their power reached its zenith in the reign of Mân Sinh, who succeeded in 1486 A.D., and the kingdom was finally destroyed by Ibrahim Lodi in 1519 A.D., who captured the capital.

3. In these Provinces the present status of the clan does not correspond with the splendour of its traditions. The Janghâra of Bndâun claim to be of this stock, but their genealogical lists do not substantiate their assertion. They fix their immigration in the time of Shahâb-ud-dîn (1202—1206 A.D.). In Morâdâbâd² they fix their settlement at Sambhal at 700 A.D., where it is said to have lasted till 1150 A.D., the time of the rise of the Chauhâns. The Bareilly clan claim to have entered the district under their leader Hansrâj, and expelled the Guâlas in 1388, and the Ahîrs and Bhîls between 1405 and 1570 A.D.³ The Batola of Garh-wâl claim to be another branch of the same stock.⁴ In the Eastern Districts they are not considered to be of high rank, a fact which Dr. Buchanan⁵ explains in his quaint way by alleging that the last princes of the race were "abominable heretics."

4. In Sitapur they marry girls of the Gaur, Abban, Bâchhal, or Janwâr septs.

¹ Ibid., II, 331, sq.

² Settlement Report, 8.

³ Settlement Report, 221.

⁴ Atkinson, Himalayan Gazetteer, III, 276.

⁵ Eastern India, II, 463.

Distribution of the Tomar Rájputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Sahāranpur	1,005	16	1,021
Muzaffarnagar	307	1,362	1,669
Meerut	391	...	391
Bulandshahr	482	3,344	3,826
Aligarh	1,436	...	1,436
Mathura	1,043	38	1,080
Agra	5,521	37	5,558
Farrukhābād	769	...	769
Malopuri	2,976	2	2,978
Ethwah	2,128	15	2,143
Etah	2,265	57	2,322
Bareilly	29	...	29
Dijoor	67	207	269
Baddun	2,937	70	3,037
Morālibād	1,201	107	1,308
Shāhjahānpur	989	...	989
Pilibhit	250	2	252
Cawnpur	953	...	953
Fatehpur	911	...	911
Banda	584	23	607
Hamirpur	76	...	76
Allahābād	268	...	268
Jhānsi	276	...	276
Jiloun	4	...	4
Lalpur	134	...	134
Benares	137	...	137
Ghāzipur	2	5	7

Distribution of the Tomar Rājputs according to the Census of 1891—concl'd

DISTRICTS	Hindus	Muham- madsas	TOTAL
Ballia	359	..	359
Gorakhpur	86	135	221
Basti	403	403
Azamgarh	1	171	172
Tarāi	158	...	158
Lucknow	105	3	108
Unāo	115	27	142
Raō Bareilly	177	...	177
Sitapur	1,882	1	1,883
Hardoi	1,227	...	1,227
Kheri	1,161	0	1,173
Faizābād	151	.	151
Bahrūch	29	...	29
Sultānpur	12	...	12
Partābgarh	61		61
Bārabanki	60	...	60
TOTAL	32,915	6,030	38,954

Turk (Sanskrit turushka), a term properly applied to the Mongolian Turkomāns of Turkistān Sir H Yule¹ shows that the distinction which we now make between Turk and Turkomān was popular as early as the twelfth century On the Biloch frontier the word Turk is equivalent to Minghal, and it is often used by Hindus for any official of foreign birth In the Panjāb even Hindu clerks of the Kāyasth caste are sometimes called by this name. The Dravidian tribes very often call any Muhammadan a Turk.

² In these Provinces there is a large cultivating caste in the Tarāi known as Turk, and in Azamgarh the term is applied to a section of the Koeris. Those in the north of Rohilkhand are described as a more manly people than the Naumuslim and appear to have come into the district at an early period with some of the Sayyid colonies.¹

¹ Marco Polo, I, 41

3. From a report received from the Râmpur State it appears that the Turks claim to be originally emigrants from Turkistân, whence they came in the train of the army of Shahâb-ud-dîn Ghori. They deny that they have ever admitted converts from Hinduism; but they are more Hindu in their customs than other Muhammadans. They marry early, earlier than even the many Hindu castes, and for the ceremonial shaving of their children prefer the month of Baisâkh. They care little about the seclusion of their women. They are endogamous, and if a Turk marries a woman of another Muhammadan tribe he is put out of caste. The women wear a peculiar dress, the scarf and drawers, which are generally of coarse cloth, being dyed blue and lined with red. The drawers are very loose above the knee and tight over the ankle. They have sections whose names are derived from local appellation and do not influence marriage. Their profession is agriculture.

Distribution of the Turks according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Allahâbâd . . .	7	Tarâi . . .	4,853
Gorakhpur . . .	7	Lackaow . . .	9
Garhwâl . . .	18	Rampur . . .	34,008
		TOTAL . . .	39,002

¹ Allahâbâd Settlement Report, 23; Azamgarh Settlement Report, 34.

U

Udāsī (Sanskrit udās, "to sit separate or apart from") — An order of Hindu ascetics who are said to have been founded by Sri Chand, the son of Nanak.¹ "The Udāsīs were distasteful to the third Guru, Amar Das, who excommunicated the order, but it appears to have been revived by Bāba Gurditta, the son of the sixth Guru, Har Govind. Gurditta proclaimed his mission in the following manner. There was on a hill near Rawalpindi a Muhammadan faqir called Budhan Shah, to whom Baba Nanak had entrusted some milk to be kept till his successor should come to claim it. This faqir, seeing Gurditta approach, requested him to appear in the form of Baba Nanak, and Gurditta having acquiesced, earned the title of Baba and a claim to considerable sanctity. He lived mainly at Kirtārpur, but he died at Kiratpur, where there is a handsome shrine in his honour, built on an eminence commanding a fine view. At Kiratpur there is also a shrine known as Mānji Sahib, where Baba Gurditta is said to have discharged an arrow, which fell in the plain below at a place called Patalpur, long used as a burning ground for the Sodhis. Gurditta is said also to have been known merely as Bahaji.

2 'The Udāsīs are divided into four orders (called Dhuan, 'smoke,' from the fires round which they sit) named after four noted Udāsīs, viz., Phul Sahib whose shrines are at Bahadurpur and Chini Ghāti in the Hoshiarpur district, Baba Hasana, whose shrine is at Charankanl near Anandpur, Almasi Sahib, who is represented at Jagannāth and Naini Tal, and Govind Sahib, who is represented at Shikārpur in Sindh and at the Sangalwala Gurudwara in Amritsar. There are also sections called Bhagat Bhagwan and Sangat Sahib, but it does not appear clearly whether these are separate sections or subordinate to or identical with, some of the above. The Bhagat Bhagwans are said to have a Gurudwara at Patna. They are the followers of one Bhagat Gir of that city, who was converted by Dharm Chand the grandson of Nanak.

3 "The Sangat Sahibīya will not eat with others. They were founded by Bhāi Bhālu who, according to one version of the story, was a Jat merchant of the Mālwa country and, according to another, a carpenter of Amritsar. He was, while yet in darkness, a follower of Sultān, but was persuaded by Gura Govind Singh to throw over the form of worship and adopt the name of Sangat Sāhib. Another legend ascribes the origin of the Sangat Sāhibiya to Bhāi Phern. It is said that a large number of Jāts, carpenters, and Lohārs belong to this section. They have a Gurudwāra in the Lahore district, and the Brahmabhūt Akhāra at Amritsar. Each sub-division of the Udāsis has a complete organization for collecting and spending money, and is presided over by a principal Mahant, called Sri Mahant, with subordinate Mahants under him.

4. "The Udāsis are recruited from all castes and will eat food from any Hindu. They are almost always celibates and are sometimes, though not usually, congregated in monasteries. They are generally found wandering to and fro from their sacred places, such as Amritsar, Dera Nānak, Kirtārpur, and the like. They are said to be numerous in Mālwa and in Benares. In the Panjāb returns they appear strongly in Jālandhar, Rohtak, and Firozpur. It is a mistake to say that they are not generally recognised as Sikhs; they pay special reverence to the Adi-granth, but also respect the Granth of Govind Singh and attend the same shrines as the Sikhs generally. Their service consists of a ringing of bells and blare of instruments and waving of lights before the Adi-granth and the picture of Bāba Nānak. They are, however, by no means uniform in their customs. Some wear long hair, some wear matted locks, and others cut their hair. Some wear caste marks (tilak); others do not. Some burn the dead in the ordinary Hindu way; some, after burning, erect monuments (samādhi); others apparently bury the dead. They are for the most part ascetics, but some are said to be engaged in ordinary secular pursuits. The ordinary dress of the ascetics is of a red colour, but a large section of them go entirely naked, except for the waist-cloth, and rub ashes over their bodies. These, like the naked sections of other orders, are known as Nangē; they pay special reverence to the ashes with which they smear their bodies and which are said to protect them equally from either extreme of temperature. Their most binding oath is on a ball of ashes.

5. "In Ludhiāna the Udāsis are mostly Jāts by origin, the disciple and successor (chela) being usually chosen from this tribe and are found to be in possession of the Dharmśālas in Hindu villages, where they distribute food to such as come for it and read the Granth, both of Bāba Nānak and of Guru Govind Sinh, though they do not attach much importance to the latter. The head of the college is called Mahant and the disciples chelas. They live in Sikh as well as in Hindu villages, and it is probably on this account that they do not quite neglect Guru Govind Sinh. They rarely marry; and if they do so, generally lose all influence, for the dharmaśāla becomes a private residence closed to strangers. But in some few families it has always been the custom to marry, the endowments being large enough to support the family and maintain the institution; but the eldest son does not in this case succeed as a matter of course. A chela is chosen by the Mahant or by the family. If a Mahant whose predecessors have not married, should do so, he would lose all his weight with the people."

6. In these Provinces perhaps the most important Gurudwāra of the Udāsīs is that of Dehra, which was built in 1669 A.D.¹ The Mahant is the richest man in the Dān. His election from among the disciples (chela) of the last deceased Mahant was formerly guided by the Sikh chiefs of the Panjāb, a fee (nazarāna) of five hundred rupees being presented by the British Government at the installation with the complimentary gift in return of a pair of shawls. The distinctive head dress of the sect worn by the high priest and his disciples is a cap of red cloth, shaped like a sugar loaf, worked over with coloured thread and adorned with a black silk fringe round the rim. Some of the more ignorant Udāsīs have a legend in defiance of all chronology, that Gorakhnāth was the first disciple of the order, and was converted by Nānak. Once, they say, there was a contest between Nānak and Gorakhnāth which of them was the greater. To try his power Nānak assumed the form of a fish, and Gorakhnāth failed to catch him. But when Gorakhnāth took the shape of a mosquito, Nānak seized him. Then Gorakhnāth admitted his inferiority and became the disciple of Nānak. The form of initiation is that the Guru bathes the disciple and smears his body with ashes, and with the same substance makes a long and slightly curved mark on his forehead. Then the initiate washes the feet of the Guru and four of his senior disciples with water which he drinks. If he can afford it he then feasts the brethren. They will eat and drink from the hands of all but the lower class of Hindus. They always repeat an invocation to the Creator in the words Satya Brī Kartār; and they salute the brethren in the words Gor lagāta hān—"I salute your feet." The use of intoxicants is strictly forbidden by the rules of order, but many use gānja and opium. Here they appear always to cremate their dead. Some of the ashes are occasionally kept, and a monument, which they call jantri, is erected over them.

¹ Atkinson, Himalayan Gazetteer, III 197

Distribution of the Udāsīs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Dehra Dūn . . .	652	Hamirpur . . .	1
Faharānpur . . .	357	Allahābād . . .	70
Muzaffarnagar . . .	35	Jhānsī . . .	6
Meerut . . .	153	Benares . . .	9
Balandshahr . . .	6	Mirzapur . . .	23
Aligarh . . .	2	Jāunpur . . .	33
Agra . . .	10	Gbāzipur . . .	66
Farrukhābād . . .	33	Ballia . . .	227
Mainpuri . . .	11	Azamgarh . . .	12
Etāwah . . .	5	Garhwāl . . .	14
Etah . . .	28	Tarāi . . .	17
Bareilly . . .	64	Lucknow . . .	35
Bijnor . . .	105	Rāi Bareli . . .	3
Badāun . . .	2	Sitapur . . .	204
Morādābād . . .	270	Kheri . . .	46
Shābjahānpur . . .	3	Faizābād . . .	53
Filkhāt . . .	64	Gonda . . .	17
Cawnpur . . .	7	Bahrāich . . .	73
Fatehpur . . .	13	Saltānpur . . .	42
Bandā . . .	5
		TOTAL . . .	2,791
		Females . . .	770

Ujjaini.—A sept of Rājputs who take their name from the city of Ujjain, the Ozene of the Greeks. In Azamgarh¹ they can tell no more of their history than that they emigrated sixteen generations ago; they once hold the greater part of pargana Gopālpur, but were obliged to give way to the Kausiks. In Cawnpur² they carry back their first settlement to the arrival from Ujjain of Sūr Sāh, a Panwār Rājput, by invitation of his connection Jay Chand, of Kanauj, who invested him with the title of Rāja of the Ujjains. They are thus really of Panwār origin. In Sultānpur³ they are said to have succeeded the Bhars. It may be noted that some of the Bais and other Rājput septs in Oudh also claim their origin from Ujjain.

2 In Farrukhābād they claim to belong to the Garga gotra, give girls to the Chandel, Bhadauriya, Kachhwāha, Chauhān, and Pramār, and marry their sons to the Chamar Gaur, Rāthaur, Gaharwār, and Sombansi. In Ballia their gotra is Saunak. They take wives from the Haihobansi, Barwār, Nikumbh, Kinwār, Raghubansi, Sengar, Salawār, Chandel, Maharwār, and Pachhtoriya. They give brides to the Bisen, Sirnet, Rāj Kumār, Baghel, Bais, Kausik, Nāgbansi, Raghubansi, Chauhān, and Haihobansi.

Distribution of Ujjaini Rājputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS	Number	DISTRICTS	Number
Farrukhābād . . .	740	Basti . . .	211
Mainpuri . . .	40	Azamgarh . . .	551
Etawah . . .	121	Lucknow . . .	38
Shāhjābānpur . . .	40	Unāo . . .	482
Cawnpur . . .	5	Sitapur . . .	105
Hamirpur . . .	3	Hardoi . . .	260
Allahābād . . .	5	Faizābād . . .	77
Benares . . .	157	Gonda . . .	15
Mirzapur . . .	4	Bahrāich . . .	10
Jaunpur . . .	10	Sultānpur . . .	207
Ghāzipur . . .	242	Partābgach . . .	4
Ballia . . .	775
Gorakhpur . . .	457	TOTAL . . .	4,586

¹ Settlement Report, 60.

² Ibid. 22, 25

³ Oudh Gazetteer, I, 25.

Ummar.—A sub-caste of Banyas found in considerable numbers, except in the Meerut, Agra, and Kumāun divisions. An attempt has been made to connect their name with that of the Umrās, who are described by Colonel Tod as a branch of the Sodhas, and who gave their name to Umarkot. Those to the east say that they emigrated from the neighborhood of Ajudhya about three generations ago. To the east they are divided into three endogamous groups—Til Ummar, Derh Ummar, and Dūsra, of which the last holds an inferior position. Widow marriage is not allowed. They agree in their customs with the Kasandhan (q. v.). Their clan deities to the east of the Province are Mahābīr, Mahādeva, and Devi. To Mahādeva and Mahābīr they offer sweets, Brāhmanical cords, gram, and flowers on the twenty-eighth day of Sāwan. They worship Devi at the Naurātri with offerings of cakes (soḥāri), sweetmeats (halwa), and a burnt-offering of camphor. Their priests are Sarwariya Brāhmins.

2. The Ummar are shopkeepers and usually sell provisions and tobacco. The use of meat and spirits is prohibited. Their priests, but not other Brāhmins, eat pakki prepared by them. Banyas eat pakki but not kachchī cooked by them. They will eat pakki cooked by Brāhmins and by other Banyas, but kachchī only if cooked by one of their own sub-caste.

Distribution of Ummar Banyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Balandshahr . . .	1	Pilibhit . . .	639
Mathura . . .	17	Cawnpur . . .	7,518
Agra . . .	35	Fatehpur . . .	2,972
Farrukhabād . . .	893	Bandā . . .	622
Mainpuri . . .	1	Hamirpur . . .	4,371
Etāwah . . .	169	Allahābād . . .	615
Bareilly . . .	61	Jhānsi . . .	1,178
Morādābād . . .	1	Jālaun . . .	302
Shāhjahanpur . . .	1,732	Lalitpur . . .	1

Distribution of Ummar Banyas according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Benares . . .	424	Hardoi . . .	2,744
Mirzapur . . .	3,893	Kheri . . .	1,114
Jaunpur . . .	3,731	Faizâbâd . . .	14
Gorakhpur . . .	611	Gonda . . .	969
Basti . . .	637	Bahrâich . . .	1,417
Azamgarh . . .	270	Sultânpur . . .	216
Lucknow . . .	3,122	Partâbgarh . . .	2,934
Unâo . . .	812	Bârabanki . . .	1,055
Sitapur . . .	823	TOTAL . . .	46,513

Unâi, Unâya.—A sub-caste of Banyas chiefly found to the east of the Province. They take their name from their diâ or place of origin, Unâo. To the east they have formed two endogamous groups: the Unâi and Unâwa Unâi, the latter of whom are held in higher estimation because they prohibit widow marriage. They are practically all Hindus, the Jânas being very few among them.

Distribution of Unâi Banyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Farrukhâbâd . . .	3	Râo Bareilly . . .	1
Shâhjahanpur . . .	27	Sitapur . . .	2,268
Pilibhît . . .	281	Hardoi . . .	10
Cawnpur . . .	4	Kheri . . .	1,073
Benares . . .	33	Faizâbâd . . .	31
Jaunpur . . .	1,501	Gonda . . .	661
Gorakhpur . . .	4,657	Bahrâich . . .	2,966
Basti . . .	241	Partâbgarh . . .	8
Azamgarh . . .	2	Bârabanki . . .	2,354
Lucknow . . .	1,766	TOTAL . . .	17,895

Utkala.—A tribe of Brāhmans who take their name from Odra or Orissa, of whom a few are found in these Provinces. According to Mr. Beames¹: "Tradition relates that all the original Brāhmans of Orissa were extinct at the time of the rise of the Gangavansa race of kings, but that ten thousand Brāhmans were induced to come from Kanauj and settled in Jaypur, the sacred city, on the Baitarani river. The date of this immigration is not stated, but the fact is probably historical, and may have been synchronous with the well-known introduction of Kananjiya Brāhmans into the neighbouring province of Bengal by King Adisura in the tenth century. When the worship of the idol Jagannāth began to be revived at Puri, the Kings of Orissa induced many of the Jaypur Brāhmans to settle round the new temple and conduct the ceremonies. Thus there sprang up a division among the Brāhmans, those who settled in Puri being called the Dakkhinātiya Sreni, or Southern Class, and those who remained at Jaypur the Uttara Sreni, or Northern Class. The latter spread all over Northern Orissa. Many of the Southern Brāhmans are also found in Balasore, and the divisions of two classes are fairly represented in most parts of the district, though the Southern Class is less numerous than the Northern. The former are held in greater esteem for learning and purity of race than the latter."

2. The divisions of the Utkala Brāhmans are most extensive and intricate. As they are scantily represented in these Provinces, it will be sufficient to refer the reader to the lists given by Messrs. Sherring, Risley, and Dr. Wilson.²

Distribution of the Utkal Brāhmans according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS	Number.	DISTRICTS	Number.
Sahāranpur . . .	4	Fatehpur . . .	3
Muzaffarnagar . . .	1	Jālsun . . .	2
Mathura . . .	26	Gorakhpur . . .	6
Mainpuri . . .	185	Lucknow . . .	1
Dareilly . . .	8	Sitapur . . .	1
Shāhjahānpur . . .	11
Cawnpur . . .	2	TOTAL . . .	250

¹ Risley, Tribes and Castes, I, 160.

² Hindu Tribes, I, 73, sq.; Indian Caste, II, 222, sq.

V

Vallabhachârya, Gokulastha Gusâin.—A sect who take their name from the great heresiarch Vallabhachârya, who was born in 1479 A D, being the second son of Lakshman Bhat, a Talanga Brâhman of the Vishnu Swami Sampradaya. "By the accident of birth, though not by descent, he can be claimed as a native of Upper India, having been born at Champiranya, a wild solitude in the neighbourhood of Benares, whither his parents had travelled up from the South on a pilgrimage. Their stay in the holy city was cut short by a popular emente, the result of religious intolerance; and the mother, who was little in a condition to encounter the distress and fatigue of so hasty a flight, prematurely gave birth on the way to an eight-months' child. Either from an exaggerated alarm as to their own peril, or as was afterwards said, from a sublime confidence in the promised protection of Heaven, they laid the babe under a tree and abandoned it. When some days had elapsed and their fears had subsided, they cautiously retraced their steps, and finding the child still alive and uninjured on the very spot where he had been left, they took him with them to Benares." By another form of the legend the scene of Vallabhachârya's miraculous deliverance is fixed at Chunnâr, and the parents are said to have thrown the child into a well which is known as the Achâraj kûp, or "wonderful well." Hence the place is visited by large numbers of Vallabhachârya pilgrims, who have erected a temple there dedicated to Mahâ Prabhu. The slaughter of fish and other animals is specially prohibited within the sacred precincts and bathing in the sacred well is supposed to be a remedy for leprosy and barrenness in women.

2 The sect has acquired rather disgraceful notoriety in connection with the famous Mahârâja libel case which was tried in Bombay in 1862. The proceedings of this remarkable trial have been reprinted in a book entitled "The History of the sect of the Mahârâjas of Vallabhachâryas in Western India," which gives a full account of their history, tenets, and religious practices. From this authority we learn that a "Vallabhachârya temple consists of three separate compartments. The central one is larger and more open than the other two, being intended for the accommodation of the numerous worshippers who daily throng there. Of the remaining two, one is the residence of the Muhârâja, and the other is dedicated to the worship of the image of Krishna. The temples are numerous all over India, especially at Mathura and Brindaban. In Benares there are two very celebrated and wealthy temples, one of which is dedicated to Krishna under the name of Lâlji, and the other to the same god under the name of Parushottamji. Those of Jagannâth and Dwârîka are also particularly venerated, but the most celebrated of all these establishments is that at Sri Nâthadwâra in Mewâr. The image is said to have transported itself thither from Mathura, when Aurangzeb ordered the temple it stood in to be destroyed. The present shrine is modern, but very richly endowed, and the high priest, a descendant of Gokulaâthji, is a man of great wealth and importance.

3. The image Thakurji, or the idol, in the different temples is either of stone or brass, and represents Krishna in various attitudes, corresponding to those which he is alleged to have assumed in the several periods of his earthly existence, either when performing uncommon feats and miracles, or living at particular places, or engaged in particularly interesting scenes. Each of these is worshipped under a different name; that of Sri Nâthji, being the most important and most honoured, is at Nâthadwâra. Krishna is here represented as a little boy in the act of supporting the mountain Govardhan on his little finger, to shelter his playmates from a heavy shower of rain which had overtaken them when at play. This image is always splendidly dressed, and richly decorated with ornaments, which are often of the value of several thousand pounds." For further particulars of the sect generally full information may be obtained in the authority from which this quotation has been made.

4. Of the sect at Mathura Mr. Growse¹ writes:—"Unlike The Mathura Vallabhachârya.
other Hindu sects, in which the religious teachers are usually unmarried, all the Gurûs among the Vallabhachâryas are invariably family men and engage freely in secular pursuits. They are the Epicureans of the East, and are not ashamed to avow their belief that the ideal life consists rather in social enjoyment than in solitude and mortification Such a creed is naturally destructive of all self-restraint, even in matters where indulgence is by common consent held criminal ; and the profligacy to which it has given rise is so notorious that the Mahârâja of Jaypur was moved to expel from his capital the ancient image of Gokul Chaudrama, for which the sect entertained special veneration, and has further conceived such a prejudice against Vaishnavas in general, that all his subjects are compelled, before they appear in his presence, to mark their foreheads with the three horizontal lines that indicate a votary of Siva. However, as in many other forms of religion, and happily so in this case, practice is not always in accordance with doctrine. Though there may be much that is reprehensible in the inner life of the Gusâins, it is not at Gokul obtruded on the public, and has never occasioned any open scandal, while the present head of the community, Gusâin Parushottam Lâl, a descendant of Bithalnâth's sixth son Jadunnâth, deserves honourable mention for his exceptional liberality and enlightenment."

¹ Mathura, 251, 277.

5 At all Vallabhacharya temples, the daily services are eight in number, viz, 1st, Mangala, the morning levee, a little after sunrise when the god is taken from his couch and bathed, 2nd, Sriugara, an hour and a half later, when the god is attired in all his jewels and seated on his throne, 3rd, Gwala, after an interval of about three-quarters of an hour, when the god is supposed to be starting to graze his cattle in the woods of Brâj, 4th, Râj Bhog, the midday meal, which, after presentation is consumed by the priests and distributed among the votaries who have assisted at the ceremonies, 5th, Uttapan, about 3 P M, when the god awakes from his sêsta, 6th, Bhog, the evening collation, 7th, Sandhya, the disrobing at sunset, and 8th, Sayan, the retiring to rest. Upon all these occasions the ritual concerns only the priests, and the lay worshipper is only a spectator, who evinces his reverence by any of the ordinary forms with which he would approach a human superior.

6 On the full moon of Asârh there is a curious annual ceremony for the purpose of ascertaining the agricultural prospects of the year. The priests place little packets of the ashes of different staples, after weighing them, in the sanctuary. The temple is then closed, but the night is spent in worship. In the morning the packets are examined. Should any of the packets have increased in weight, that particular article of produce will yield a good harvest, and should they decrease; the harvest will be scanty in proportion to the decrease.

Distribution of the Gokulastha Gudiâns according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Fatehpur . . .	1	Faizâbâd . . .	26
Gorakhpur . . .	3	TOTAL . . .	30

CASTE INDEX.

[The references are to paragraphs. The castes to which asterisks are attached are the subject of special articles.]

A

- Abâdpura—Balôhar 1.
 Abakahon—Banarwâr.
 Abar—Ahîr 3.
 'Abbâsi—Bihishti 1: Habashi: Sayyid 2: Shaikh 2.
 Abhîra—Ahîr 1.
 *Abhyâgat.
 'Abidi—Sayyid 2.
 -Abkâr—Kalwâr 1.
 Ablapuriya—Halwâi 2.
 Ahri—Gandhîla 2.
 Achâr-wâla—Halwâi 6.
 Achârya—Bhât 2: Brâhman 9: Dasnâmi.
 Adhana—Gûjar 6.
 Adhanliya—Madâri 1.
 Adhela—Kanjâr 3.
 Adhoi—Bhoksa 4.
 Adhrij—Arakh 3.
 Adi Gaur—Gaur: Joshi 7.
 Afridi—Pathân 6.
 Agari, Agariya—Dom 42.
 *Agariya—Darzi 2: Sunâr 7.
 *Agarwal } Beldâr 2:
 *Agarwâla } Bhâtiya 6:
 Chhîpi 3: Darzi 2: Kanjar 5: Kewat 2: Kumbhâr 2: Mallâh 3: Mochi 3: Patwa 3.
 *Agastwâr.
 *Aghori. }
 *Aghorpanthi. }
 Aghwân—Banjâra 12.
 *Agnihotri.
 Agrabansi—Beldâr 2.
 *Agrahari } Chhîpi 2.
 Agrehri }
 Agwariya—Barhai 2.
 Ahalpuriya—Halwâi 2.
 *Ahar—Ahîr 10.
 Ahâriya—Gahlot 1.
 Aharwâr—Barai 3: Chamâr 4: Gaddi 2: Joshi 4: Kewat 2: Kori 2: Tamboli 2.
 *Ahban.
 *Aheriya—Pâsi 8: Tamboli 2.
 *Ahir—Gadariya 2: Gaddi 2: Musahar 11.
 Ahirbansi—Kasera 2.
 *Ahiwâsi.
 'Ahl-i-Quraish—Banjâra 12.
 Airan—Agarwâla 1.
 Ajmar—Chamâr 3.
 Ajmeri—Khâgi: Mahesri 2.
 *Ajudhyabâsi } Agrahari 2:
 Ajudhya } Barai 3:
 Beldâr 2: Boriya: Chhîpi 2: Dhobi 2: Dhuniya 4: Hâhûra 3: Halwâi 2: Kanjar 5: Kasera 2: Kathak 3: Kewat 2: Khatik 1: Kori 2: Kumbhâr 2: Kurmi 5: Lohâr 4: Luniya 3: Manihâr 2: Sunâr 6: Tamboli 2.

*Akâli—Nânakpanthi 4.
 Akâsh Bhânwari—Banar-wâr.
 Akâsh Kâmini—Tawâif 6.
 *Akâshmukhi.
 Akhpuriya—Halwâi 2.
 Akrethiya—Kurmi 3.
 *Alakhgir. }
 Alakhiya. }
 Alakhnâmi. }
 Alandiya—Ahar 2.
 Alapuriya—Manihâr 2.
 Alâqeband—Patwa 1.
 *Alawiya—Sayyid 2; Shaikh
 2.
 *Alipuriya—Halwâi 2.
 Allya—Banjâra 12.
 Alamnagari—Halwâi 2.
 Alampuriya—Manihâr 2.
 Allahâbâdi—Kanjari 1 : Mochi 3 ; Also see Illahâbâdi.
 Alona—Sunâr 7.
 Alwi—Banjâra 12.
 Amalpuriya—Halwâi 2.
 Amara—Thâr 12.
 Amargarh—Jâdon 2.
 Amariya—Kâchhi 2.
 Amawatiya—Sunâr 7.
 Ambashtha—Kâyasth 10.
 *Amethiya—Dhobi 2 : Rastâ-ogi : Sunâr 9.
 Amisht—Kâyasth 10.
 Amlakhiya—Bhât 3.
 Amlohiya—Sunâr 7.
 Amrapuriya—Beriya 3.
 Amritpuriya—Halwâi 2 :
 Khâgi 2.
 Amrutiya—Chamâr 3.
 Anad—Khatri 15.
 *Anant panthi.

Andhâri ka khatanga—Su-
 nâr 7.
 Anfi—Irâqi 2.
 Angarkha—Manihâr 2.
 Angi—Irâqi 3.
 Angiras—Bhuinhâr 11 :
 Joshi 8.
 Anguriya—Sunâr 7.
 Anrukh—Gandharb 2.
 *Ansâri—Dafili 2 : Dhuniya
 4 : Gâra : Shaikh 2.
 Antarbedi } Bhangi 20 :
 Antarvedi } Boriya : Chamâr
 3 : Lodha 2.
 Antavâsin }
 Antêvâsin } Bhangi 2.
 *Apapanthi.
 Aphariya }
 Aphiriya } Ahir 5.
 Aradhya—Jangam 2.
 Arakh—Boriya : Gandharb
 2 : Pâsi 8.
 Aranya—Dasnâmi.
 Aril—Dharkâr 1.
 Arjariya kot—Jhijhotiya 2.
 Armor }
 Armu } Majhwâr 3.
 Arora—Ror.
 Arpatti—Majhwâr 3.
 Aryapanth—Kanphata 2.
 Asadpuriya—Halwâi 2.
 Asandhâri—Gusâin 7.
 *Ashiqân—
 Asrama—Dasnâmi.
 Asrent—Dom 7.
 Astâwar—Dasnâmi.
 Asthâna—Kâyasth 11.
 Astiya—Basor 1.
 Astra—Chaulê 2.
 Asuriya—Bhuinhâr 11.

Aswâl—Gangâri.
 Atariha—Dhânuk 2.
 Ateriya—Kahâr 5.
 Athariha } Bluînhar 11 :
 Athariya } Kumbhâr 2 : Kurmi 5.
 Athbhaiya—Bhadauriya.
 Athsalla } Bhât 3, 4.
 Athsela }
 *Atît—Kingriya 2.
 *Atishbâz—Darzi 2.
 Audha—Barai 3.
 'Audhâr—Kurmi 6.
 Audhbâsi—Bharbhûnja 1.
 Audhiya—Chhîpi 2 : Dhârhi
 2 : Dhuniya 4 : Gaddi 2 :

Halwâi 2 : Koiri 2 : Mco
 4 : Nâi 2 : Sunâr 9 : Thathera 3.
 Audhiyâr—Bhangî 21.
 Augar—Mahesri 2.
 Aughar—Aghorpanthi : Jogi
 2.
 Auji—Dom 41.
 Aurana—Agarwâla 1.
 Aurangâbâdi—Halwâi 2.
 *Awadhût.
 Awasthi—Jhijhotiya 2.
 Ayâziya—Madâri 1.
 *Azâd.
 Azamgarhiya—Chamâr 4 :
 Koiri 2.

B

Bâba Hasna—Udâsi 2.
 Bâbhan—Bhuînhar : Sunâr 7.
 Bach } Bais 7 : Gandhâr
 Bacha } 2.
 Bachanwâr—Bhangî 21.
 *Bachgoti—Beldâr 2 : Musahar 11 : Nat 7.
 Bachgotra Chauhan—Luni-
 ya 3.
 Bachguâr—Bohra 4.
 Bâchhal } Ahîr, 10 : Arakh 3 :
 Bâchhar } Beldâr 2 : Darzi
 Bâchhil } 2 : Gaddi 2 :
 Kathak 3 : Kurmi 6 : Mamihâr 2 : Parwâl 1 : Taga 6.
 Bachhîliya—Parwâr 1.
 Bachhrâjpuriya—Sunâr 9.
 Bachor—Pâsi 8.

Badahrê—Khatri 16.
 Badalna—Kumbhâr 2.
 Badan } Banarwâi : Banjâra
 Badana } 12.
 Badhai—Dom 41.
 Badhak } Bharbhûnja 1 :
 Badhik } Darzi 2 : Hâbûra
 3 : Kanjar 3.
 Badhuriya—Mallâh 3.
 Badhauliya—Sunâr 9.
 Badhi—Barhai.
 Bâdi—Bhât 3 : Dom 42 :
 Nat 9, 37.
 Bâdipuriha—Sunâr 7.
 Badlân—Bhangî 21.
 Badniyâr—Bâwariya 7.
 Bagauliya—Sahariya 2.
 Baghâri—Baidguâr.

*Bâghbân—Rain 2.
 Bâghdâdi—Sayyid 2.
 *Baghel } Balâhar 1 : Basor
 Baghela } 1 : Belwâr :
 Bagheli } Dhânuk 2 : Ga-dariya 2 : Ghosi 1 : Kathak
 3 : Musahar 11 : Tamboli
 2.
 Baghochhiya—Bhuhinhâr
 11 : Musahar 11.
 Bâghwân—Kunjra 2 :
 Murâo 2.
 Bâgri—Arakh 3 : Bhangî 20 :
 Chhîpi 3 : Jâdon 2 : Joshi
 4 : Kadhera : Mochi 3 :
 Sayyid 2 : Sunâr 6.
 Bagula—Nat 9.
 Bagulha—Luniya 3.
 Bagura—Bâwariya 6.
 Bahadsiya—Hâbûra 3.
 Bahâdurpuriya—Kathak 3.
 Bahajbana—Gandharb 2.
 Bahâli—Hâbûra 3.
 Bahaniya—Hâbûra 3.
 Bahâri—Mahesri 2.
 Bahariya—Bais 7 : Harukiya.
 Bahariyâbâdi—Sunâr 7.
 Bâharwâla } Bhangî 1 :
 Bâharwâr } Chamâr 3.
 Bahas—Hâbûra 3.
 Bahel—Khatrî 15.
 *Baheliya—Beldâr 2 : Boriya :
 Dhuniya 4 : Dusâdh 5 :
 Kanjar 1 : Kumbhâr 2 :
 Manihâr 2 : Pâsi 5.
 Baheniya—Kâchhi 2 : Mâli
 3 : Saini.
 Baheriya—Ahar 2.

Bahika—Kâthi 1.
 Bahlîm } Banjâra 12 : Bha-Bahlîmi } thiyâra 2 : Bihishti 1 : Gâra : Nâi 2 :
 Shaikh 2 : Teli 3.
 Bâhman—Barhai 2 : Murâo
 4 : Nat 8.
 Bâhman Gaur—Ba'âhar 1.
 Bâhmangot—Basor 1.
 Bahmaniya—Hurkiya :
 Kurmi 5.
 Bahrâichi } Dafâli 2 : Dho-Bahrâichiya } bi 2 : Dhuniya 4 : Gaddi 2 : Harjala :
 Julâha 2 : Kumbhâr 2 :
 Manihâr 2 : Teli 3.
 Bahrâri—Banjâra 12.
 Bâhri—Khatrî 18.
 Bâhuki—Banjâra 12.
 Bahrûp } Banjâra 11 :
 Bahrûpiya } Bhând.
 Bahunalna—Nat 11.
 Baid—Darzi 2 : Kanjar 3 :
 Nat 33.
 *Baidguâr—Banjâra 20.
 Baiga—Bhuiyâr 1.
 Baikata—Gadariya 2.
 Baira—Baranwâr.
 *Bairâgi—Koiri 2.
 Bairswa—Dom 42.
 *Bais—Balâhar 1 : Beriya 3 :
 Bhangî 20 : Bihishti 1 :
 Chhîpi 3 : Chûrihâr 2 :
 Dalera 2 : Darzi 2 : Dhobi
 2 : Gaddi 2 : Joshi 4 : Ju-lûha 2 : Kahâr 5 : Kanjar
 5 : Kathak 3 : Khâgi 2 :
 Kharâdi 2 : Mochi 3 :
 Musahar 11 : Nâi 2 : Nat
 8 : Taga 6.

Baisgari—Ahar 2
 Baiswâla—Tamboli 2.
 *Bisawâr } Arakh 3 Barai 3
 Baiswârî } Beriya 3 Bhan-gi 20, 21 Boriya Chhîpi
 3 Darzi 2 Kadhera
 Khâgi 2 Kanjar 3 Kori
 2 Kori 2 Kurmi 5
 Manhâr 2
 Bajâj—Baranwâr
 Bajaniya—Nat 7, 11
 Bajauriya—Mârwarî 6
 Bajbhan—Gandharb 2
 Bajdhâr—Baheliya 2
 *Bâjgi
 Bâjpei—Jhijhotiya 2
 Bajutheb—Agariya 3
 Bakariya—Ahar 10
 Bakandar—Murio 2
 Bakarha—Bhând
 Bakarkasâu—Gadariya 2
 Bakarqassâb } Khatik 1
 Bakarqassai } Qassab
 Baksariya—Balâhar 1 Bhuinhâr 11 Dhuniya 4
 Dom 7 Churihâr 2
 Khatik 2 Tawâif 2
 *Balabar—Arakh 3 Basor 1
 Balahi }
 *Balai } Bohra 1.
 Bâlakchamariya—Bhangî
 20
 Balant—Meo 4
 Balapura—Gaddi 2
 Balbhadaraut—Kachhwâha
 2
 Baldua—Mahesri 2.
 Balgai—Dom 8
 Balpuria—Ilalwat 2

Baliyân—Chamar 3 Jat 19
 Ballâl—Kahâr 6 Kori 2
 Ballamturiya—Kându
 Balliya—Mallâh 3
 Bâlmik } Kayasth 12
 Bâlmiki } Bhangî 21.
 Baloch—Biloch
 Balot—Meo 1
 Balrâmpuri—Dhârhi 2
 Baltent—Bhar 1
 Bâmhan—Chûnhâr 2 Dar-zi 2 Gaur Râjput 2
 Bamhaniya—Bhând Chamâr
 3 Gadariya 2.
 Bamhila—Basor 1.
 *Bammargi
 Bamra—Ramaiya 2
 Bana—Thâru 10
 Banaj—Kol 1
 Banal—Gandharb 2
 *Banaphar.
 Banirasi } Boriya
 Banârasiya } Lohâr 1 Teh 3
 *Banarwar
 Banaudh } Banjâra 14
 Banaudhiya } Bhangî 20
 Chamâr 3 Sunâr 7
 Banawar—Chhupi 2
 Banbheru—Nâr 2
 Banbirpota—Kachhwâha 2
 Banchhor—Kapariya 2
 Bandariya—Barhai 2
 Bandarwâr—Banarwâr
 *Bandhalgoti }
 Bandhigoti }
 Bandhugoti }
 *Bâudi
 Bandi—Irâqi 3
 Bandichhor—Khatik 1

- Bandijan—Bhât 3.
 Bandwâri—Banjâra 12.
 Bangachwâr—Agariya 3.
 *Bangâli—Beriya 3: Kanjar 5.
 Bangâli Gusâin—Gauriya.
 Bangar—Mahesri 2.
 Bangariya—Thathera 3.
 Bangash—Bihishti 1: Pathân 8.
 Banghar—Mahesri 2.
 Banha—Balâhar 1.
 Banhchariya—Kingriya 2.
 Banhkata—Kingriya 2.
 Bani Fâtima—Sayyid 2.
 Bani Hâshim—Hijra 2.
 Bani Isrâîl—Shaikh 2.
 Baniwâl—Bhangi 30: Halwâi 2.
 *Banjâra } Ahar 2: Barai 3: Banjariya } Bihishti 1: Bis-âti: Dhuniya 4: Hâbûra
 3: Jhojha 1: Kanjar 5:
 Manihâr 2: Ramaiya 2.
 Banjhalwâr—Agariya 3.
 Bark—Ramaiya 2.
 Bankar—Dabgar 1: Dhâlgar
 1.
 Bankarwâr—Manihâr 2.
 Banmânush—Musahar 2.
 Bannait—Baiswâr 2: Chûri-
 hâr 2.
 Banohra—Hâbûra 3.
 Banrâj—Musahar 2.
 Bansit—Baiswâr 2.
 *Bânsphor—Bhangi 21:
 Dhârhi 2: Dom 7: Domar.
 Banswâr } Bhât 4:
 Banswariya } Kori 2.
 Bantar } Thâru 12:
 Bantariya } Kându.
 Banthela—Bhând.
 Banwâr } Bâwariya 7:
 Banwariya } Hâbûra 3.
 *Banya—Barai 3: Beriya 3:
 Julâha 2: Khâgi 2: Pâsi 8.
 Banyâna—Darzi 2.
 Bâori—Kadhera: also see
 Bâwariya.
 Baragwâr—Agariya 3.
 Baraha—Bhând.
 Barahhazâr—Chero 6.
 Barahi—Saraswata 2.
 *Bârahsehi.
 Bârahzâti—Khatrî 13.
 Barai—Dolera 2: Tamboli 1, 2.
 Baraik—Panka 1.
 Baraiya—Barai.
 Baramkali—Harjola.
 Baraniya—Teli 3.
 *Bâranwâl } Bhangi 20.
 Baranwâr }
 Barâr } Basor 1:
 Barariya } Kanjar 3.
 Barasi—Bhuinhâr 11.
 Bara Sudaya—Gujarâti
 Brâhman 9.
 Barauniya—Patwa 3.
 Barausiya—Ahir 5.
 Barbhaiya—Teli 3.
 Barchandi—Hâbûra 3.
 Barchi—Bhangi 21.
 Bardbansi—Chero 6.
 Bardhân—Chero 6.
 Bardhiha }
 Bardhiya } Kumbhâr 2:
 Bardhiha } Kûrmi 5.

Bardwâr } Chamâr 3;
 Bardwâri } Koiri 2.
 Bareiya—Gadariya 2.
 Bareli—Darzi 2.
 Barendra—Bangali.
 Bareriya—Ahar 2.
 Baresra—Kumhâr 2.
 Bargadda—Banjâra 12.
 *Bargah }
 Bargâha } Abîr 4, 9, 10.
 Bargâhi }
 Bargaiyan—Kurmi 6.
 Bargala } Dhuniya 2: Taga
 Bargali } 6.
 *Bargi.
 Bargotiya—Khangâr 3.
 Bargpuriya—Halwâi 3.
 *Bargûjar—Bhangî 20, 21:
 Bhât 2: Bhokea 4: Dalera
 2: Darzi 2: Dhuniya 2,
 4: Gâra: Julâha 2: Ka-dhera: Kathak 3: Khatik
 1: Manihâr 2: Meo 4:
 Mochi 3.
 Bargyân—Bhât 2.
 Barh—Jât 21.
 *Barhâi.
 Barhâiya—Barhiya.
 Barhaniya—Bhokea 4.
 Barhariya—Thathera 3: Biyâr 1.
 Barharwâr—Gadariya 2.
 Barhauliya—Barholiya:
 Mâli 3.
 Barhel—Dom 7.
 Barhi—Barhai.
 *Barhiya.
 *Barholiya.

VOL. IV.

Bâri—Joshi 4: Kahâr 5:
 Nâi 2.
 Bariya—Nat 7: Saiqalgar.
 Barjatwa—Chamâr 3.
 Barla—Mughal 3.
 Barlang—Bhangî 21.
 Barmaniyân—Barhai 2.
 Barmâr—Bâwariya 7.
 Baroda—Dom 41.
 Barohi—Bhaugi 30.
 Barothi—Alûr 5.
 Barpagwa—Bhât 4.
 Bartun—Jâdon 2.
 *Barua—Bhât 3: Dharkâr 1:
 Kanjar 3.
 Barubansi—Chero 6.
 Barwa—Ahîr 10: Bhât 3.
 Barwâik—Thârû 12.
 *Barwâr—Bhangî 21: Bhât
 3: Bhuinhâr 11: Biyâr 1:
 Dusâdh 5: Joshi 4: Kol
 4: Mochi 3: Thathera 3.
 Barwariya—Lodha 2.
 Barya—Dom 42.
 Baryal—Mahesri 2.
 Basgarh—Basor 1.
 Bashara—Azâd.
 Bâsil—Parwâl 1.
 Basobiya—Basor 1.
 Basodhiya—Bhât 3.
 *Basor }
 Basora } Balâhar 1: Bhan-Basoriya } gi 21: Bhât 3: mar: Khangâr 3: Mochi
 3.
 Bata—'Irâqî 3.
 Batal—Dom 41.
 Batar—Gûjar 6.

Bâtham } Bharbhûnja 1 :
 Bathawa } Bohra 4 : Darzi
 Bathma } 2 : Dhobi 2 : Ka-
 Bathmi } dhera : Kahâr 5 :

Kalwâr 4 : Kanjar 5 : Kewat 2 : Kisân 1 : Kurmi 6 :
 Lodha 2 : Mallâh 2 : Mani-
 hâr 2.

Batsil—Agarwâla 1.

Batra—Teli 3.

Batta—Thâru 12.

Batur—Thâru 10.

Baturha—Gandharb 2.

Baurâsi—Pâsi 8.

Bauri—Bâwariya 9.

Bâwan—Kamboh 3.

Bâwan Goli—Kamboh 3.

Bâwanjati—Khatrî 13 : Saraswata 2.

Bawar—Nâi 2.

*Bâwariya.

Bazâz Bartya—Mârwarî 6.

Bâzigar—Nat 4, 8.

Bedbâf—Dom 39.

Bedi—Khatrî 13.

Bediya—Beriya.

Begi—Bihishti 1 : Mahesri 2.

Behara—Kahâr 1.

Behâri—Dom 8.

Behna—Dhuniya : Ghosi 1.

Bel—Kamboh 3.

Belbhariya—Chamâr 3.

*Beldâr—Dhângar 2 :

Kanjar 1.

Belharia—Bhuinhâr 11.

Belkharia—Kumhâr 2.

*Belwar—Bhûtiya 6 : Dhângar

2 : Dhobi 2 : Dusâdh 5.

Belwariya—Khatik 1.

Bem—Dom 41.

Bemuwâr } Bhuinhâr 11.

Bemwâr }

Benawa.

*Benbans } Ahîr 5 : Bânsphor

Benbansi } 2 : Dabgar 1 :

Darzi 2 : Dhâlgar : Dhângar 2 : Dharkâr 1 : Domar :

Jhojha 1 : Kharwâr 2.

Bendpâri—Kamboh 3.

Bengâli—Bangâli.

Bengar—Dabgar 1.

Bentbansi—Dharkâr 1.

Beonriha—Bhuiyâr 1.

Bera—Dom 41.

Beri—Khatrî 15.

*Beriya—Banarwâr : Kanjar
 . 1 : Nat 8.

Berwâr—Barwâr.

Beshara—Azâd.

Bhadana—Gûjar 6.

*Bhadauriya—Beldâr 2 : Beriya 3 : Bhangi 20, 21 : Bharbhûnja 1 : Bhât 2 : Chamâr

3 : Darzi 2 : Dhobi 2 : Gad-di 2 : Kâchhi 2 : Kori 2 :

Lodha 2 : Murâo 2 : Nat 8 :

Pâsi 8.

Bhaddal—Agarwâla 1.

Bhaddali—Joshi 1.

Bhaddari—Jogi 3.

Bhadesiya—Tamboli 2.

Bhadohiya—Kathak 3.

Bhadwariya—Bhadauriya.

*Bhagai } Ahîr 5 : Barai 6 :

Bhagta } Bhar 4 : Bhât

Bhâgtaha } 4 : Bhuinhâr

11 : Chamâr 22 : Kâchhi 2 :

Luniya 3 : Murâo 2 : Râdha :

Thâru 13.

Bhagat Bhagwân—Udâsi 2.
 Bhagawatiya } Bhangi 21 :
 Bhagwatiya } Kori 2 : Lu-niya 3.

Bhâgirathi—Lodha 2 : Lu-niya 3 : Mâli 3 : Saini.

Bhagri—Ahar 2.

Bhâgulpuriya—Darzi 2.

Bhainhar—Kori 2.

Bhainiwâl—Jât 17.

Bhains } Beriya 3 : Gha-
 Bhainsa } siya 2 : Kan-
 Bhainsaha } jar 3 : Sâ-siya 2 : Teli 3.

Bhainsara—Ahîr 5.

Bhainswâr—Kalwâr 4.

Bhaiwadh—Bhuinhâr 11.

Bhaiyator—Gadariya 2.

Bhaktiya—Koiri 2.

Bhakwa—Gandharb 2.

Bhâl—Gara

Bhâlê—Bhâtiya 6.

*Bhâlê Sultân

Bhalira—Ramaiya 2.

Bhall—Bhuiyâr 2.

Bhallê—Khatiri 15.

*Bhând.

Bhandâri—Kurmi 5 : Mahesri 2.

Bhaudauliya—Kori 2.

Bhandela—Bhând.

Bhanes—Kanjari 3.

*Bhangi—Beriya 2 : Gaddi 2 :
 Julâha 2.

Bhângiwâla—Kanjari 5.

Bhaniha—Bhuiyâr 2.

Bhankâwat—Kachhwâha 2.

Bhanolê—Mâli 3.

Bhân—Bhîud.

Bhanreriya—Hinsaini ; Joshi 1.

*Bhântu.

Bhânwag—Bais 7.

*Bhar.

Bharadih—Bais 7.

*Bhâradwaj } Bhar 4 : Bhât
 Bhâradwaja } 2, 4 : Bha-tiya 5 : Bhuinhâr 11 ;
 Chaubê 2 : Joshi 4 : Kathak 3 : Sejwâri 1.

Bharariya—Gadariya 2.

Bharat—Bhar 1.

Bharatduâri—Kumhâr 2.

Bharati—Dasnâmi.

Bharatwâr—Chaubê 2.

Bharauniya—Ahîr 10.

Bhar Bhuinhâr—Bhar 4.

*Bharbhûnja—Kându.

Bharda—Khangâr 3.

Bhardela—Basor 1.

Bharê—Pâsi 8.

Bhareriya Tiwâri—Jhijhotiya 2.

Bhârgava—Bhûinhâr 11 :
 Dhûsar 1.

Bharil—Parwâl 1.

Bhariya—Kasera 2 : Thathe-ra 3.

Bharka—Dhobi 2.

Bharmâre—Mallâh 3.

Bharosiya—Ahîr 10.

Bharpatwa—Bhar 1.

*Bharsaiyân.

Bharsiya—Dusâdh 5 : Ka-lâr 6.

Bharsiyân—Bharsaiyân.

Bharta—Khangâr 3.

Bhartai—Jogi 3.

- Bharthariya—Ahar 2.
 Bhartrinâth—Kanphata 2.
 Bharu—Kanjari 4.
 Bharua—Kathak 1: Ta-
 wâif 1.
 Bharwariya—Chamâr 3.
 Bhasiru—Khatrî 15.
 *Bhât—Daizi 2: Ganr Râjput 2: Julâha 2: Meo 4:
 Ramaiya 2: Rangrez 1.
 Bhatara—Bhât 3, 4.
 Bhatela—Râdha 1.
 *Bhathiyâra.
 Bhatiya—Bohra 4: Nat 9.
 Bhatkariya—Bais 7.
 Bhatkhauwa—Sunâr 8.
 Bhatnâgar—Bharbhûnja 1:
 Bhât 2: Kâyasth 8.
 Bhatra—Mahesri 2.
 Bhatti—Ahîr 10: Banjâra
 12: Bihishti 1. Gadariya
 2: Gaddi 2: Gâra: Gûjar
 6: Hâbûra 3: Ramaiya 2.
 Bhâtu—Bhântu: Kanjar 1:
 Nat 7.
 Bhaura—Gurkha.
 Bhawâni—Mâlî 3.
 Bhayâr—Chamâr 3.
 Bhemua—Kâchhi 2.
 Bheniya—Nâs 2.
 Bhenriha—Musahar 10.
 Bherihâra—Barai 4.
 Bhiân—Telî 3.
 Bhijauriya—Ahar 2.
 *Bhikba Sâhib.
 Bhikhpuriya—Halwâi 2.
 *Bhîl—Bachai 2: Bhathiyâra
 2: Pâsi 8.
 Bhilaur—Bhangî 21.
 Bhimbru—Nâi 2.
 Bhimpuriya—Koeri 2.
 Bhîrgudi—Ahîr 5: Kahâr 6.
 Bhîtari }
 Bhîtariya } Bais 7: Nat 35.
 Bhogta—Kharwâr 2.
 Bhoi—Kahâr 1.
 Bhojpuri Râwat—Bhangî 20.
 Bhojpuriya—Chûrikâr 2:
 Dhobi 2: Joshi 4: Kal-wâr 4: Luniya 3.
 Bhok—Mallâh 3.
 Bhokar—Bhangî 21.
 *Bhoksa.
 Bholiya—Sunâr 9.
 Bhomiyan—Mâlî 3.
 Bhond } Belwâr.
 Bhonda } Kahâr 6.
 Bhongiya—Baheliya 2.
 Bhonrelê Dûbê—Jhijhotiya
 2.
 Bhontiya—Mallâh 3.
 Bhorak—Ahiwâsi 2.
 Bhorar—Bhatiya 6.
 Bhosiya—Lodha 2.
 *Bhot.
 Bhotiya—Bhot: Gurkha.
 Bhrigubansi—Bhûinhâr 11.
 Bhudi—Bhatiya 6.
 Bhugta—Kharwâr 2.
 Bhuinganiya—Sunâr 9.
 *Bhûinhâr—Bhuiya 4: Bhuiyâr 2: Kunjra 2: Luniya 3.
 *Bhuiya—
 *Bhulyâr.
 Bhûj—Bharbhûnja 1.
 Bhujkalaura—Kalwâr 1.
 Bhujua—Bharbhûnja 1.

Bhujwâr—Sunâr 9.
 Bhukarsî—Kurmî
 Bhukarwâl—Murâo 2.
 Bhukiya—Banjâra 12.
 Bhuksa—Bhoksa
 Bhûl—Dom 42
 Bhulnihai—Kanauiya
 Bhumiyân—Bhangî 21
 Bhunsaiha—Kathak 3
 Bhur—Kurmî 6
 Bhurji—Bharbhânja 1
 *Bhartiya—Ahîr 8 Boriya.
 Bhusangar—Ahar 2
 Bhusautiya—Thathera 3
 Bhûsar—Bhniyâr 2.
 Bhusela—Dhânuk 2.
 Bhusiya—Chamâr 3 Lo
 dha 2
 Bhutta—Rân 2
 Biâr—Biyâr
 Bichaurî—Râdha 1
 Bidaniya—Kumbhâr 2
 Bidâwati—Bâwariya 2
 *Bidua
 Biganandi—Bairâgi 2
 Bigwa—Sunâr 7.
 Bihâni—Mahesri 2
 Bihâri—Pâsi 8
 Bihârwâla—Kanjar 5
 Biharpuriha—Kalwâr 1
 *Bihisti
 Bijaniya—Khangâr 3
 Nat 7
 Bijaypuriya—Musahar 11
 Bijhoniya—Bais 7
 Bijilwâr—Gangârî
 Bijmargî—Bâmmargî 2
 Bijnauriya—Thâru 13
 Bikwâns—Taga 3
 Bilaiya—Sunâr 7.

Bilâlpuriya—Sunâr 7
 Bilâra—Sunâr 7.
 Bilehniya—Ahîr 5
 Bilgotiya—Khangâr 3.
 Bilkhariya—Bâri 3 Bhangî
 20, 21 Dharkâr 1
 Billmâr—Khatrî 14.
 *Biloch
 Bilpurwâr—Bhangî 30
 Bilûch—Biloch
 Bilupuriya—Halwâi 2
 Bilwâr—Belwâr.
 Bin—Kol 4
 Binaunân—Lodha 2.
 *Bind—Bhar 5 Kanjar 5
 Kewat 2 Luniya 3 Mallûh 3
 Bindrabani } Tamboli 2
 Bindrabanbâsi } Baisi 3
 Bindrabâsi } Musahar
 11.
 Bindwâr—Beldâr 2
 Binnâni—Mahesri 2.
 Birha—Dom 2.
 Birhariya—Ahîr 10 Bhûti-hâr 11 Chamâr 3
 Birmbhât—Bhât 3
 Birramiya—Bhûmhâr 11
 Birthariya—Golapûrab 1
 Birtiya—Kurmî 6
 Biruâr—Bhûinhâr 11.
 *Birwâr—Barwâr Rajput
 Berwâr
 Bisa—Agarwâla 1 Taga 6
 Bisali—Chamâr 3
 Bisari—Barhai 2
 *Bisâti—Ramaiya 2
 *Bisen—Gaddi 2 Julaha 2
 Bisensob—Bhangî 20

*Bishnoi.

Bishnpuriya—Kathak 3;

Manihār 2; Musahar 11.

Biswān—Taga 6.

*Biyār—Bhar 5.

Bodala—Kahār 6.

Bodiwāla—Nānakpanthi 3.

Bodlē

Bodlān } Dasnāmi; Jāt 19.

Bohat—Kanjar 4.

Bohra—Bhatiya 6.

Bora—Darzi 2.

Boriya—Dhārhi 2; Pāsi 3.

Bot } Bhot: Kahār 5;

Bota } Kurmi 5.

Boxwāla—Bisāti.

Brajbāsi—Beriya 3; Bariya:

Kanjar 3; Kasera 2; Koi-ri 2; Nat 6, 8; Tawāif 2.

Bremperi—Harjala.

Brahma—Kanphata 2.

*Brāhman.

Brāhmaniya—Bhāt 4.

Brahmbhāt—Bhāt 4.

Brijbāsi—Brajbāsi.

*Brindabani.

Būchar—Gūjar 6; Khatik
1; Nat 3.

*Bughana.

Bujar—Luniya 3.

Bukarra—Halwāi 2.

Bukhāri—Sayyid 2.

Bulāhar—Dalāhar.

Bulbulha—Chhīpi 2.

Bulehra—Nāi 2.

Bunbun—Bhuiyār 2.

Bundel } Bhāt 2; Kathak

*Bandela } 3.

Bundeliya—Bhangī 20.

Bunerwāi—Pathān 9.

Bungariya—Dasādī 5.

Bunjahi—Khatrī 13.

Bunkar—Kori 2.

Burbak—Banarwār.

*Burbela.

Burki—Banjāra 12.

Burkiya—Bhānd.

Burtiya—Banjām 12.

Buzqassāb—Qassāb.

Byādha—Nat 9, 21; Pāsi 3.

Byāhta } Kalwār 4; Lohār 4;

Byāhut } Nāi 2; Teli 3.

C

Chachara—Teli 3.

Chagāba—Gond 3.

Chagtai—Mughul 2.

Chāhu—Barwār Rājput.

*Chāl } Bhar 5; Bind 2.

Chāin } Kahār 5; Kewatu

Chāini } 2; Mallāh 3.

Challta—Halwāi 2.

.Chak—Gadariya 2; Mughul
3.

Chakardiya—Sahariya 2.

Chakauriya—Dāngi 2.

Chak Bais—Bais 7; Kum-hār 2.

Chakchāiniya—Kāchhi 2.

Chakhri—Kumhâr 2
 Chakirâba—Banjâra 12
 Chakiya—Ahîr 10
 Chakseniya—Kâchhi 2
 Chalanmahrâo—Khatik 1
 *Chamâr—Âgarwâla 8 Chhîpi 3 Darzi 2 Dom 41,
 42 Gaur. Julâha 2
 Chamarbans—Gaddi 2
 Chamar Barhai—Barhai 2.
 *Chamar Gaur—Balahar 1
 Joshi 4
 Chamar Gautam—Nat 8
 Chamariya—Bhangî 20
 Kumhâr 2
 Chamarmangta—Chamâr
 3 Kanjar 1 Nat 8, 33
 Chamarmûnda—Nâi 2
 Chamar Nat—Nat 8
 Chamar Sangla—Nat 8
 Chamar Sûjiya—Darzi 2
 *Chamar Teli—Teli 3.
 Chamarwa—Nat 8
 Châmî—Bâwariya 6
 Chamkel—Bânsphoi 2
 Chamoli—Gangari
 Chamrel—Dom 7
 Chanahiya—Bhangî 21
 Chanâl—Kanjar 1
 Chanamiya—Bais 7.
 Chananu } Biyâr 1 Kur-
 Chananawa } mi 5
 Chanau—Kurmi 5
 Chanchara—Kîndu
 Chandak—Mahesri 2
 Chandal } Bhangî 2, 21,
 Chandâla } 30 Dom 1
 Chandaliya } Kanjar 4

Chandan } Biyâr 1 G-
 Chandanawa } dariya 2
 Chandaul } Banjâra 12
 Chandauliya } Chamâr 3
 Chandaurya } Sunâr 9
 Chandbharag—Kanphata 2
 *Chandel } Baheliya 2
 Chandela } Bhangî 20
 Chandeli } Chamâr 3
 Chandelwâl } Darzi 2
 Chander } Gadariya 2
 Gaddi 2 Gâra Gôjar 6
 Kabâr 5 Kapariya 2
 Khâgi 2 Kurmi 6 Manihâi 2 Meo 4 Musahar
 11 Nat 8 Rangrez 1
 Taga 6.
 Chandpurîha } Halwâi 2
 Chandpurîya } Khâgi 2
 Kurmi 6
 *Chandrabansi—Bhât 2
 Chand Râe—Chamâr 3
 Chandraseniya—Bhadau-nyar
 Chandrauliya } Kori 2
 Chandrâwal } Kurmi 6
 Chandwâr—Kamhar 2.
 Changilê—Bhât 4
 Chanwar—Ahîr 10
 Chapar—Kori 2
 Charan—Banjâra 2 Bhât 8
 *Charandâsi
 Charandha—Kalwâr 4
 Chargoriha—Bhuiyâr 2.
 Charkha—Banjara 12
 Charokota—Sunar 7
 Charwâr—Bohra 4
 Châryârî—Dhumya 4
 Charzati—Khatrî 13.
 Châsa—Sadgop

Chatbanûri }
 Chatrauri } Sayyid 6.

Chauâna—Sombansi 2.

Chaubê—Bharbhûnja 1:
 Jhijhotiya 2.

Chaudhari } Baiswâr 2:

Chaudhariya } Banarwâr:

Bhuinhâr 11: Chero 6:

Dom 8: Ghosi 1: Jhojha

1: Kapariya 2: Kurmi 6:

Mallah 3.

*Chauhân—Baidguâr: Ban-

jâra 11, 12, 15: Barai 3:

Barhai 2: Bâri 3: Bâwarriya, 6, 7, 12: Beldâr 2:

Beriya 3: Bhangi 20, 21,

23: Bharbhûnja 1: Bhathiyâra 2: Bhoksa 4: Bihishti 1: Bind 2: Boriya:

Chamâr 3: Chhipi 3: Chûrihâr 2: Dalera 2: Darzi 2:

Dhobi 2: Dhuniya 2, 4:

Dom 8: Gaddi 2: Gand-

hila 2: Gâra: Ghosi 1:

Golapûrah 3: Habashi:

Hâbûra 3: Jât 20: Jhojha

1: Jogi 3: Joshi 4: Jalâha 2: Kâchhi 2: Kadhera: Kahâr 6: Kanjar 5:

Kathak 3: Khâgi 2: Khatik 1: Kunjra 2: Luniya

3: Manihâr 2: Meo 4:

Musahar 11: Nat 8: Rangrez: Sânsiya 2: Taga 6.

Chauhâniya Misr—Kamhâr

1.

Chauhatt—Agrahari 2.

Chauhela—Bhangî 21.

Chaukhar—Chautel 2.

Chaunsathiya—Ahîr 10.

Chaupata Khamb.

Chaurâsi. } Bhât 3, 4:

Chaurasiya } Barai 3:

Chamâr 3: Dhârhi 2: Gâ-ra: Halwâi 2: Julâha 2:

Kamboh 3: Lohâr 4: Luniya 3: Moeh 3: Pâsi 8.

Chaurâsi Goli—Kamboh 3.

Chaurâsi Kanha—Kamboh

3.

Chausaki—Kalwâr 4.

*Chauseni—Khatik 1.

Chelaha—Chûrihâr 2.

Chenr—Bhând.

*Chero—Kol 4.

Chhachhûndar—Khangâr 3.

Chhagoriya—Chamâr 3.

Chhâhari—Beriya 3.

Chhahzâti—Khatîr 13.

Chhakrê—Ahar 2.

Chhâchhdîh—Sânsiya 2.

Chhaniyân—Patwa 3.

Chhappariya—Kurmi 5.

Chhata—Tawâif 6.

Chhatarpuriya—Chhipi 2.

Chhatrabhujant—Kâchhwâha 2.

Chhatîr—Baheliya 2:

Beriya 3: Chhipi 3:

Darzi 2: Gaddi 2:

Gandharb 2: Kamboh 3:

Kasera 2: Kathak 3: Nat

8: Rauniyâr: Râjput 1:

Sunâr 6: Tamboli 2.

Chhlânâvê—Agarakhî 2:

Chhibari—Joshi 4.

Chhlariya—Nat 9.

Chhlâtiya—Dhânuk 2.

- *Chhîpi—Bhangî 21
 Chhîraura—Chubê 2
 Chhirkulât—Meo 1
 Chhokarzâda—Jâdon 2
 Chhonkar—Dhobi 2 Jât 21.
 Chhota Samudaya—Gujar-rîti Brâhman 9
 Chhoti Sen—Gadariya 2
 Chhotkana—Gûjar 6
 Chhunkari—Dhuniya 2
 Chhuriyapel—Chhîpi 2
 Chichâm—Majhwâr 3
 Chik—Khatik 1 Pankha 1
 Qassâb
 Chikaniya—Sunâr 7
 Chikbarâik—Pankha 1
 Chikchikwa—Kharwâr 2
 Chikwa—Gadariya 2
 Qassâb
 Chirâr—Gahlot 3
 Chirauncha—Sahariya 2
 Chirklot—Meo 1
 Chiryamâr—Alhar 1 Baheliya 2 Chhîpi 3 Dalera
 2 Bhatiyara 2 Hâbûra
 3 Pâsi 8
 Chithauriya } Dhobi 2
 Chithoriya } Kachhi 2
 Nat 8
 Chishti } Madârî 1
 Chishtiya } Sayyid 2
 Chitlangya—Mahesri 2.
 Chobdâr—Arakhi 3 Kalwâr
 1 Sejwârî 1
 Chodsi—Kamloli 3
 Cholimargi—Bâmmargi 2
 Chopar—Ghesi 1
 Chopra—Khatrî 15.
 Chotya Chauhân—Bangîra
 12
 Chuadha—Khatrî 15.
 Chuhân—Bhangî 21.
 Chûhar. }
 Chûhara } Bhangî 1
 Chuhra }
 Chûlat—Taga 3
 Chunâr. } Bhangî 21
 Chunâra } Dom 11 Pâsi
 Chunarha } 8.
 Chungelê—Bhat 3.
 Chunyâra—Barhai 2
 Dom 42
 Churel—Jât 21
 Churelê—Bhangî 21 Kach-hi 2
 Chureliya—Dom 7
 Churiha—Kamkar 2.
 Chûrîhâr. } Chhîpi 3
 Chûrîhâra } Sunâr 7.
 Churiya—Kamkar 2
 Churiya Guâl—Ahîr 7
 Chutelê—Bhangî 21

D

- Dabas—Bâwariya 6
 *Dabgar—Musahar 11
 Dâbi—Bâwariya 6
 Dadai—Gangârî.
 Dadaichi—Majhwâr 3.
 Dadavê—Gond 2

- Dadhich—Gaur 2.
 *Dâdupanthi.
 *Dafâli.
 Daga—Mahesri 2.
 Dagwariya—Thâru 11.
 Daiha—Jât 20.
 Dahait—Kol 4.
 Dahariya—Kahâr 5.
 Dahima—Abîr 5.
 Dahman—Barhai 2.
 Dahngâi—Meo 4.
 Dahuna—Jât 20.
 Dakaut—Husaini : Meo 4.
 Dakhar—Thâru 12.
 Dakkhinâha—Barni 3 : Barhai 2 : Bâri 3 : Biyâr 1 :
 Chamâr 3 : Chûrihâr 2 :
 Dhobi 2 : Kahâr 6 : Kalwâr
 4 : Kathak 3 : Kharot : Koiri
 2 : Kumhâr 2 : Lohâr 4 :
 Manihâr 2 : Sunâr 8 : Teli 3.
 Dakkhinatiya Sreni—Utkala
 1.
 Dakkhini—Dafâli 2.
 Dakkhinwâr—Bhât 2 ; 3.
 Daksha—Chaulê 2.
 Dalâmau—Agrahari 2.
 Dalât—Meo 4.
 Dalê—Bâwariya 7.
 Dalel—Gujar 6.
 *Dalera—Khâgi 2.
 Dali—Hâbûra 3.
 Dalpuriya—Bhât 2.
 Dalwariya—Bhangî 23.
 Dammari—Mahesri 5.
 Damrauniya—Kahâr 5.
 Danderi—Banjâra 12.
 Dandi—Dasnâmi.
 Dandiya—Thatkura 3.
 Dandwâr—Bhuiya 4.
 Dangan—Kamboh 3.
 Dangarha—Kâchhi 2.
 *Dângi.
 Dankmardan—Bhangî 21.
 Danya—Joshi 8.
 Daras—Dhâlgar.
 Dargal—Ramaiya 2.
 Dari—Dabgar 1.
 Dariya—Nat 9.
 Darji—Chhîpi 3.
 Dars—Kori 2.
 Darshani } Kanphata 1 :
 Darshaniya } Mâli 5.
 Darsiya—Gadariya 2.
 Darswâr—Abîr 10.
 *Darvesh.
 Darwar—Meo 4.
 Darya—Dom 42.
 Daryâbâdi—Kumhâr 2 : Nat
 8.
 *Darya Dâsi.
 *Darzi—Dom 41, 42 : Mani-
 hâr 2.
 Das—Dom 41.
 Dasa—Agarwâla 1 : Golapâr-ab 4 : Taga 6.
 Dasati—Bohra 4.
 Dasaundhi } Bhât 3, 4 :
 Dasaundhiya } Luniya 3.
 Dasghar—Bhât 4.
 Dasgopâl—Kanphata 2.
 *Dasnâmi.
 Dasput—Bhuiyâr 2.
 Dastarband—Darzi 1.
 Daswân—Jât 19 : Taga 6.
 Datta—Dasnâmi.
 Dâûdzal—Pathâu 10.
 Daundiya Kheriya—Tiathera 3.

Daurâha—Dorha
 Daurâni—Mahesri 2
 Daurha—Dorha
 Dauriha—Dharbar 1.
 Dauwa—Ahir 5
 Dê—Jat 11
 Dehâti }
 Dehi } Musahar 10
 Dehiya—Jat 12
 Dehliwâl } Beldâr 2 Dhobi
 Dehliwâla } 2
 Demrot—Meo 4
 Deobansi—Patwa 3
 Deodinâik—Nat 11
 Deogayân—Sanâr 9
 Deohariya—Bhuyâr 2
 Deorâj—Lamya 3
 Deosiya—Musahar 2
 Derhummar—Ummar 1
 Deriya—Banarwâr
 Desi—Bârî 3 Beldâr 2
 Bhând Bhangî 21 Bharbhûnja 1 Chamar 3 Dhârhu 2 Jhojha 1 Kori 2
 Kumbâr 2 Rangrez 1
 Sunâr 9 Tih 3
 Deswâl } Beriya 3 Bhangî
 Deswâla } 21 Bohra 4 Jat
 11, 18 Mambâr 2 Nâi 2
 Rangrez 1
 Deswâli—Bâwariya 2 Bhan-gi 21 Gandhu 1 Ghosi 1
 Jhojha 1 Kahâr 6 Lohâr
 1 Mâh 3 Sunâr 6
 Deswâr—Ahir 10 Dhobi 2
 Deswâri—Chhipi 2
 Detwâr—Thâru 13
 Devdâs—Bhatiya 5
 Dewaiya—Sunâr 7.

Dewar—Gond 3
 Dewâsi—Kamboh 3
 Dewat—Kalwâi 1
 Dhaba—Dhâlgar
 Dhâighar—Khatrî 13
 Dhakar—Thâru 10
 Dhajpanth—Kanphata 2
 *Dhakara—Dhânuk 2. Ka-naujya
 Dhakarya—Chhipi 3
 Dhakauliya—Bhangî 21
 Kâchhi 2
 Dhaker—Thâru 13
 Dhakeri—Dhumya 2
 Dhaki—Dom 41
 Dhâkra—Dhâkara
 Dhakwâl—Thâru 13
 *Dhâlgar—Dahgar 1
 Dhâlwâl—Barhai 2
 Dhaman—Chamâr 3 Kamboh 3 Kori 2 Lohâr 4
 Dhandara—Bâwariya 6
 Dhandhal—Bâwariya 6
 Dhandin—Bâwariya 7
 Dhanesh—Darzi 2
 *Dhângar—Banarwâr Dhumya 4
 Dhangra—Bholsa 4
 Dhângya—Banjara 12
 Dhanî—Kamboh 3
 Dhankikya—Banjara 12
 Dhankûta—Banjara 12;
 Bharbhûnja 1
 Dhaman—Barhai 2
 Dhanor—Kahâr 5
 *Dhânuk—Basor 1 Bânsphor
 2 Beriya 3 Bhangî 21
 Darzi 2 Kadhera Pâi 8.
 Dhanwân—Khatrî 15

- Dhanwariya—Barai 4.
 Dhanyasha—Agarwāla 1.
 Dhâr—Mallāh 3.
 Dharaun—Chamâr 3.
 Dharavnê—Chhîpi 2.
 Dharbansi—Ahîr 10.
 *Dhârhi—Dom 42 : Dusâdh
 5 : Kathak 3 : Nat 9.
 *Dharkâr—Bânsphor 2 : Dom
 7 : Dusâdh 5.
 Dharm—Gaur 3.
 Dharora—Ahîr 10.
 Dhauma—Agarwāla 1.
 Dhaunchak—Kahâr 6.
 Dhaunsiya—Dom 7.
 Dhauriya—Dângi 2.
 Dhê—Bhangi 19 : Jât 11.
 Dhelana—Agarwāla 1.
 Dhelphor—Bhangi 20 : Bhar
 4 : Dhârhi 2 : Kurmi 5 :
 Mallāh 3.
 Dhenk—Banarwâr.
 Dhenkaliya—Kâchhi 2.
 Dhenwar—Gurkha.
 Dhlman—Kori 2.
 Dhimar—Kahâr 1, 5 :
 Mallāh 1 : Nat 8 : Thâru
 13.
 Dhindhor—Ahîr 5 : Chamâr
 3.
 Dhindhwâr—Kurmi 6.
 Dhingar—Gadariya 2.
 Dhinwâr—Kahâr 5.
 Dhiyar—Dom 41.
 *Dhobi—Dom 17, 41, 42 :
 Kathak 3 : Nat 8.
 Dhobibans—Kanjari 4.
 Dholakiya—Kâchhi 2.
 Dholdhâr—Kambohi 3.
 Dholi—Barhai 2 : Dom 11,
 43 : Gond 2.
 Dholri—Ahîr 10.
 Dhongiya—Bhar 4.
 Dhorpahi—Banjâra 12.
 Dhuma—Chanbê 2.
 Dhuna—Dhnniya : Kadhera :
 Mochi 3.
 Dhunar—Dom 41 : Khagi 2.
 Dhundhal—Gûjar 6.
 Dhundhiya—Chamâr 3.
 Dhundhiya Khera—Khar-âdi 2.
 Dhuneb—Basor 1.
 *Dhuniya—Joshi 8.
 Dhûnsar—Dhûsar.
 Dhurana—Gangâri.
 Dhuriya—Ahîr 10 : Chamâr
 3 : Kahâr 2, 5 : Kându :
 Mallāh 3 : Musahar 10.
 *Dhûsar.
 Dhusiya—Bind 1 : Chamâr
 4.
 Dhut—Mahesri 2.
 Dibhan—Barhai 2.
 Dîchhit—Kewat 2.
 Dihlawi—Kâyasth 13.
 Dikhit } Beldâr 2 : Bhât 2 :
 *Dikshit } Bhunhâr 11 :
 Jhijbotiya 2 : Kathak 3 :
 Taga 6.
 Dilazâk—Pâthân 11.
 Dilliwâl—Bhât 2 : Bihishti
 1 : Dabgar 1 : Darzi 2 :
 Manihâr 2 : Kumbhâr 2 :
 Lodha 2 : Mâli 3 : Mochi
 3.
 Dilwâri—Banjâra 2 : Chhîpi 2.
 Dimar Râthaur—Bhoksa
 11.
 Dimri—Gangâri.
 Dina—Kahâr 6.
 Dinar—Gandhi 1.

Dingal—Meo 4
 Dingariya—Hâru 10
 Dingoriya—Hâru 10
 Dirhor—Ahîr 5
 Dirhwar—Ahar 2.
 Disauriya—Dângi 2
 Diswâr—Ahîr 5.
 Dîwân—Joshî 8
 *Diwâna.
 Doâsna—Telî 3
 Dobhal—Gangân.
 *Dogar.
 Doghar—Dogar
 Dohar—Ahîr 10 Chamâi 4
 Dojwâr—Dhânuk 2
 Dokhar—Gadanya 2
 Dolidhauwa—Chamâr 4
 Dolkarha—Musahar 10
 *Dom—Bhangî 21 Dharkâr
 1 Hâbûra 3 Kanjar 1
 Nat 8.
 Domahra—Dom 7
 Doman—Ahar 2
 *Domar—Balâhar 1 Bhangî
 21 Chamâr 3 Gaddî 2
 Dombarî—Nat 2
 Domîn—Tawâf 6.
 Domkatâr—Bhuînâr 11
 Dom 1
 Dom Mirâsi—Mirâsi
 Domra—Dom 7, 20
 Domtikâr—Dom 1
 Domwâr—Dom 1
 Donrwar—Chaubî 2
 *Donwar—Barai 3 Bâri 3
 Bhuînâr 11 Musahar 11

Dophansiya—Bharbhûnja 1
 *Dor—Musahar 11
 *Dorha.
 Dospuriya—Bhât 1
 *Drâvira
 Drigpuriya—Halwâi 2
 Duâlbândhi—Kharwâr 2
 Dûbê—Bhuînâr 11 Halwâi 2
 Dûbêpuriya—Halwâi 2
 Dugal—Khatrî 15
 *Dugdha *
 Dugugiya—Bhoksa 1
 Dukauha—Bhât 1.
 Dûm—Dom 41.
 Dûmar—Bhântu
 Dûm Mirâsi—Mirâsi.
 Dundwâr—Tharu 12
 Dunhan—Dhânuk 2
 Dûnr—Ahîr 5
 Dunsua—Chhîpi 2
 Dunwâr—Donwâr
 Dunwariya—Bhoksa 1
 *Durgbansi.
 Durki—Banjâra 12
 Durrânî—Panthân 12
 *Dusâdh—Bhar 4 Chamâr
 3 Dhânuk 2 Dhârhi 2
 Kadhera
 *Dûsar
 Dusaya—Chhîpi 2
 Dûsra—Kâyasth 7 Ummar
 1
 Dutiya—Kahâr 6
 Dyâs—Bâwariya 7
 Oyondi—Gangân

E

Ekâsna—Telî 3.
Ekka—Dhângar 2.

Eksariya—Bhuinhâr 11.
Ekthauliya—Kanjâr 3.

F

Faizâbâdi—Chamâr 3; Ju-lâha 2.
Faridi—Shaikh 2.
Farûql—Bihishti 1; Shaikh
2.

Fatchpuri—Sunâr 9.
Filwân—Nat 8.
Firdosiya—Madâri 1.

G

Gadahla—Gandhîla 1.
Gadar—Jât 21.
*Gadariya—Bhangî 20; Dom
39; Kathak 3; Meo 4;
Thâru 13.
*Gaddi—Ahîr 5; Banjâra 12;
Ghosîl.
Gaddi Gûjar—Ghosî 1.
Gaderiya—Barai 3; Gada-riya
Gadh—Bhât 3.
Gadhâiya—Chhîpi 2.
Gadhara—Kisân 1.
Gadhara—Kâchhi 8; Kum-
hâr 2.
Gadhîla—Kumhâr 2.
Gadhwa—Bhât 3.

Gadi—Kamboh 3.
Gadiya—Lohâr 3.
Gadoi—Sejwâri 1.
Gagoliya—Nat 11.
Gagra—Bhangî 30.
Gaharwâr—Beldâr 2; Kathak 3; Kurmi 5; Musa-hâr 11; Tamboli 2.
*Gahlaut } Banjâra 12; Barai
Gahlot } 3; Bhangî 21;
Ghosi 1; Jogi 3; Kadhera; Kahâr 6; Meo 4; San-siya 2.
*Gahoi.
Gaiduha—Pâsi 8.
Gairola—Gangâri.
Gajbhîm—Bhât 3.

Gajgoti—Khangār 3
 Gajra—Ramaiya 2
 Gamel } Ahir 5 Kadhera
 Gamela } Lohār 4
 Ganaiti—Kamboh 3
 Ganda—Panka 1
 Gandena—Gandhila 2
 Gandharap }
 Gandharb } Beriya 3 Ta-
 Gandharv } wāif 1
 *Gandhi—Teli 6
 Gandhikar—Gandhi 1
 Gandhila—Khatik 1
 Gandwāl } Ahir 5 Gand-
 Gandwār } harb 2
 Ganga—Gadariya 2 Sunār
 9
 Gangāl—Gangau
 Gangapāri—Beldar 2 Bhar bhūja 1 Bihisti 1 Cha-mar 3 Dhuniya 4 Julāba
 2 Kori 2 Kurmi 5 Nat 8
 *Gangaputra—Bhāt 2
 Gangarami—Hijra 2
 *Gangārī
 Gangaur—Oswāl 8
 Gangauri—Tank 1
 Gangelē—Jhijhotiya 2
 Gangoha—Bhar 4
 Gangwāni—Agrahari 3
 Gangwar—Bhat 3, 4 Kan-jar 5
 Gangwati—Bhangī 21
 Ganreriya—Gadariya
 Giorāni—Bhānd
 *Gāra.
 Garali—Bawariya 7
 Garariya—Gadariya
 Garauthiya—Bhangī 21

Garag } Agarwāla 1 Bhu-
 *Garg } inhār 1 Bind
 Garga } 2
 Gargbans—Bans 7 Bhūin-hār 11 Garg
 Gargeya—Chanbē 2
 Gargya—Bhūinhār 11 Joshi
 8
 Garhwapāri—Bhāt 4
 Garwariya—Thāru 11
 Gariya—Knhāi 5
 Garoi—Sejwāri 1
 Garoriya—Ahir 10
 Garpetha—Dhanuk 2
 Garuhaiya—Dhānuk 2
 Garwāla—Agarwāla 1
 Gatru—Kamboh 3
 Gauda—Gaur Kāyasth 17
 Gauharna—Nat 11
 Gaunhārīn—Tawāif 2
 Gāuqassāb—Qassāb
 *Gaur—Arakh 3 Bandi Ban-jara 15 Bāwariya 7 Bel-dār 2 Belwar Beriya 3
 Bhāt 2 Bhatiya 6 Bihishti 1 Darzi 2 Dhobi 2
 Dhuniya 4 Ghosi 1 Julā-ba 2 Kadhera Kathak 3
 Kāyasth 17 Kewat 2
 Kumhār 2 Mochi 3 Nāi
 2 Nat 8 Ramaiya 2
 Rangrez 1 Taga 6 Tamboh 2
 *Gaurahar—Khāgi 2
 Gaurithān—Banjara 20
 *Gauriya—Barai 3 Dusādih
 5, Habūra 3 Mallih 3-
 Patwa 3
 *Gaurua—Bargala

- Gausel—Bānsphor 2.
 *Gautam } Agarwāla 1 : Bel-Gautama } dār 2 : Bhuin-hār 11 : Joshi 4 : Kapariya 2.
 Gautamiya—Bhuinhār 11 :
 Jhijhotiya 2.
 Gauthiwāra }
 Gauthwāra } Jāt 19 : 21.
 Gawal—Agarwala 1.
 Gawaqassāb—Qassāb.
 Gaya—Chero 6.
 Gaymar—Dom 7.
 Gel—Ahīr 10.
 Gemar—Dom 7.
 Generālī—Bhangī 32.
 Gepar—Dom 7.
 Ghairkameladār—Qassāb.
 Ghamra—Kanjār 4.
 Ghanik—Kahār 5.
 Ghara—Nat 32.
 Gharē—Banjāra 12.
 Gharbārī—Atīt 1 : Bānsphor
 1.
 *Gharūk—Kahār 5.
 *Ghasiya.
 Ghasiyāra—Ghasiyāra.
 Ghaskata—Golapūrab 3.
 *Ghasiyāra.
 Ghatiya—Chamār 3 : Gangaputra 1.
 Ghatkiya—Sunār 7.
 Ghatwāl—Jāt 14.
 Ghatwarīya—Kahār 6.
 Ghāzi—Jhojha 1.
 Ghāzipuri Rāwat—Bhangī
 20.
 Ghāzipuriya—Musahar 11.
 Ghei—Khatrī 15.
 Ghildyāl—Gangārī.
 Ghilzāl—Pathān 13.
 Ghissāra—Lohār 3.
 Ghogh—Kewat 2 : Mallāh 3.
 Ghol—Kurmi 6.
 Ghoraha—Bhāt 4.
 Ghorcharāo—Khatik 1.
 Ghorcharha—Ahīr 5 : Bārī
 3 : Chamār 3.
 Ghorgotiya—Khangār 3.
 Ghorgushti—Pathān 15.
 Ghorī—Banjāra 12 : Bihishtī
 1 : Gāra : Jhojha : Nat 8 :
 Pathān 16 : Rangrez 1.
 Ghoriwāl—Banjāra 12.
 Ghosi—Ahīr 5 : Beldār 2 :
 Boriya : Dhārhi 2 : Gaddi
 2 : Manihār 2 : Meo 4 :
 Nat 8.
 Ghosiwāl—Sunār 7.
 Ghosiya—Ahar 2 : Boriya 3 :
 Chamār 3.
 Ghughasiya—Nat 32.
 Ghulām—Barhai 2 : Barwār
 1.
 Ghurcharha—Boriya.
 Ghussar—Kanjār 2.
 Gidhiya—Mochi 3.
 Gidhlē—Agariya 3.
 Gidhmār—Boriya 3.
 Gidiya—Bāwariya 6.
 *Gindauriya.
 Gird—Ahīr 5.
 Girdaha—Kalwār 4.
 Girdharpuriya—Ahīr 10.
 Giri—Dasnāmī.
 Gobhil } Agarwāla 1 : Bhu-
 Gobhila } inhār 11.
 Gochhar—Ahar 2.
 Godhi—Jāt 21.
 Godiya—Bhar 5.

Gohal } Gandhila 2 : Kanjar
Gohar } 3.

Goher—Kanjar 3.

Gohil—Parwâl 1.

Gohiya—Khangâr 3.

Gohorwâriwâl—Bhât 4.

Goil—Agarwâla 1 : Parwâl 1.

Goin—Agarwâla 1.

Goirar—Agariya 3.

Gokain—Barhai 1.

Gokulastha Gusâin—Valla-bhachârya.

Gokulbansi—Barhai 2.

Gokuliya—Ahîr 10.

Gola—Bâwariya 7 : Chhîpi 2 :

Kahâr 5 : Kumbhâr 2 : Lu-niya 3 : Mâli 3 : Nâi 2 :

Saini.

*Golahrê.

*Golapûrab.

Golar—Kasera 2.

Golherê—Kalwâr 4.

Goli—Bhuksa 4.

Goliwâla—Dabgar 1.

*Gond—Kalwâr 4 : Kahâr 6 :

Nat 8 : Sejwârî 1.

Gonda—Ahîr 5.

Gondal—Kurmi 6.

Gondar—Barai 3. Dusâdh 5.

Gondhi—Bâwariya 6.

Gondiya—Ahîr 10.

Gond Majhwâr—Majhwâr.

Gonr—Gond 1 : Halwâi 2 :

Kahâr 5 : Kânda.

Gonraha—thak 3.

Gonthi—Sunîr 9.

Gopâlpuriya—Chârihâr 2.

Gorait—Chamâr 3.

Gorakhi—Dhuniya 1.

Vol. IV.

Gorakhpanthi—Jogi 2.

Gorakhpuri—Barai 3 : Bel-dâr 2 : Gaddi 2 : Kasera 2 :

Kunjra 2.

Gorchha—Gurchha.

Gorê—Kamboh 1.

Goriya—Bhar 4 : Kewat 2 :

Mallâh 3 : Nat 9.

Gorkha—Guikha.

Gotela—Basor 1.

Gothalwâr—Chhîpi 2.

Gotiya—Kahâr 5 : Lohâr 4 :

Sunkar 1.

Gotwâla—Jât 19.

*Govindpanthi.

Govind Sâhib—Udâsi 2.

Goyit—Kurmi 5.

Gozruniya—Madâri 1.

Grihasti—Sanjogi.

Guâl—Banjâra 12 : Bibishti

1 : Chamâr 3 : Ghosi 1 :

Meo 4 : Musahar 11 : Nat

6, 8 : Pâsi 8.

Guâlbans } Ahîr 5, 7, 10

Guâlbansj } Ghosi 1 : Harjala : Musahar 11 : Nat 8.

Guâliyâri—Nat 7.

Guâl Pathân—Rangrez 1.

Guâr—Arakh 3 : Banjâra 11, 12.

Gudar—Ahîr 5.

Gugâwat—Kachhwâha 2.

Gujahna—Dusâdh 5.

*Gûjar—Bâwariya 7 : Bibishti

1 : Boriya : Dhuniya 4 :

Gaddi 2 : Gaur : Kadhera :

Meo 4 : Nat 8 : Pâsi 8 :

Ramaiya 2.

Gujara—Bind 2.

Gujarân—Ramaiya 2.
 Gûjar Gaur—Darzi 2; Jho-
 shi 7.
 Gujarâti—Dhârhi 2; Joishi 4;
 Kori 2; Kurmi 5; Mochi
 3.
 Gujarha—Bhând.
 Gujariwâla—Bhât 3.
 Gujariya—Dom 7.
 Gulâbdâsi—Sain.
 Gulahla—Nat 9.
 Gulfarosh—Mâli 5.
 Gulhâni—Teli 3.
 Gulhârê—Kalwâr 4.
 Gulhariya—Teli 3.
 Gulraha—Thathera 3.
 Gundaka—Mârwarî 6.

Guninâtha—Kându.
 Gunnar—Beriya 3.
 Guranawa—Bhîl 1.
 Gurbans—Thâru 10.
 *Gurehha.
 Gurer—Kalwâr 4.
 Gurha—Thathera 3.
 Gurhâbâdi—Lohâr 4.
 Guriya—Goriya: Mallâh 3.
 *Gurkha—Damera 2.
 Guror—Kalwâr 4.
 Gursariya—Basor 1.
 Gurunâtha—Kahâr 6.
 Gurung—Gurkha
 Gurwâl—Kahâr 6.
 *Gusain—Musabar 11.

H

*Habashi.
 Habibliya—Madâri 1.
 Habshi—Habashi.
 *Hâbûra—Kanjâr 3, 5.
 Hadoti—Jâdon 2.
 Hagiya—Nat 9.
 Haidarâbâdi—Jnlâha 2.
 Haihobans—Hayobans.
 Hairi—Aheriya 1.
 Hajâri—Babeliya 2.
 Hâjipuriha } Halwâi 2; Su-
 Hajipuriya } nâr 7.
 Hajjâm—Nâl.
 Halâlkhôr—Bânsphor 2;
 Bhangî 1.
 *Halwâi.
 Hamar—Gûjar 6

Hamirpuri } Bharbhûnja 1:
 Hamirpuriya } Bhât 2.
 Hanafi—Bihishti 1; Habashi.
 Hândê—Khatrî 15; Kambola
 1.
 Hânri—Bhangî 19.
 Hanriyânwa—Kol 4.
 Hans—Gadariya 2.
 *Hâra—Boriya: Meo 4; Sej-wârî 1.
 Haraihila—Sunâr 9.
 Haral—Rangrez 1.
 Haranwâl—Gadariya 2.
 Harchanni—Dom, 7, 23.
 Hardaha—Chero 6.
 Hardainiya—Kâchhi 2.

Hardâspura—Chaubê 2
 Hardiha } Kâchhi 2 Kahar
 Hardiya } 6 Kisân 1 Koiri
 2 Kurmi 5 Mâh 3 Murao
 2
 *Hardoi
 Hardoiri—Ramaiya 2
 Hardwâr—Sejwari 1
 Hardwari } Darzi 2 Joshi
 Hardwariya } 4 Kurmi 5
 Hargadi—Chaubê 2
 Hari—Bhangî 19
 Haridas—Jadon 2
 Haripurîya—Dhârhu 2
 *Harischandi
 Hariya—Mambâr 2
 Hariyana—Gaur
 Harjai—Tawâif 1
 *Harjala
 Harphor—Chamar 3
 Harwariya—Kol 1
 Hasani—Sayyid 2
 Hasain ul-Husaini—Sayyid
 2
 Hasanpurî—Bhand Kathak
 3 Julaha 2
 Hashimi—Sayyid 2 Shaikh
 2
 Hastinapurî—Bhat 2
 Hatar—Banyâra 2
 Hatheliya—Kumhar 2
 Hathgotiya—Khangar 3
 Hathichighar—Dhanuk 2

Hatlar—Dhangar 1
 Hatthi—Kambohi 3
 Hatwal—Gangari
 Hatyâra—Dom 1, 7, 21
 Haulaniya—Jât 12
 *Hayobans
 Hazârî—Bahelja 2 Dhanuk
 2 Dom 5
 Hâzirpurîya—Halwai 2
 Hela—Bhangî 21 Bhâr 4
 Gûjar 6 Jat 11
 Heri—Aheriya 1
 Heriya—Mahesi 2
 Hethjhaulî—Kamphata 2
 *Hijra
 Hindiya—Banyâra 12
 Hindoliya—Kathiyara 1
 Hinduriya—Bhangî 26
 Hindubalana—Harbûra 3
 Hinduiya—Bari 3
 Hirangot—Khangar 3
 Hirnotiya—Kathiyara 1
 Hiwan—Gandharb 2
 *Hotri
 Hubariya—Madari 1
 Hurkha—Bhand
 *Hurkiya } Dom 43 Gaddi
 Hurukiya } 2 Kathak 3
 Koiri 2 Tawâif 2
 Husainabadi—Sunar 7
 *Husaini—Sayyid 2
 Husrentê—Nai 2

Ilâqêband—Patwa 1
 Ilha—Dhangar 2

Ilahâbadi } Ahir 7 Gada-Ilahabasi } riya 2 Hal-wai 2 Koiri 2

Imdâdnagari—Halwâi 2.
 Imiliya—Kahâr 5.
 Inâyati—Jâdon 2.
 Indauriya—Balbhar 1: Halwâi 2: Joshi 4: Nat 8: Sunâr 9.
 Indrapati—Rastâogi.

Irâki }
 *Irâqi } Kalwâr 4.
 Islâmpuriya—Halwâi 2.
 Ismâilpuriya—Meo 4.
 Itfarosh—Gandhi 1.
 Itsrâz—Gandhi 1.

J

Jachoriya—Sahariya 2.
 *Jâdon } Banjâra 11:
 Jâdonbansi } Bhangi 20
 Bihishti 1: Darzi 2:
 Kathak 3: Kadhera:
 Kamboli 3: Kanjar 5
 Kurmi 6: Meo 4: Mochi
 8: Nat 8: Tamboli 2.
 Jadua—Kurmi 6.
 Jaduâr—Hâbâra 3.
 Jadubans } Ahîr 5: Barai
 Jadubansi } 3: Bhangi
 20: Bhoksa 4: Chhîpi 3:
 Dalera 2: Ghosi 1: Jâdon
 4.
 J'afari—Sayyid 2: Shaikh 2.
 Jâga—Bhât 3, 7.
 Jagarhâr—Manihâr 2.
 Jagatpuriya—Halwâi 2.
 Jagawa—Bhât 4.
 Jagbasa—Gandhi 1.
 Jagiya—Chamâr 3.
 Jagjâdon—Bharbhûnja 1.
 Jagneri—Sayyid 6.
 Jagu—Mahesri 2.
 Jaimini—Agarwâla 1.
 Jaini—Chhîpi 2.

*Jais—Kadhera.
 Jaisari ka Bhatra—Bhât 4.
 *Jaiswâr } Barai 3: Bar-
 Jaiswâra } hai 2: Beriya
 3: Bhangi 20: Bhât
 2: Bhatti 4: Bhil 1:
 Chamâr 4: Darzi 2:
 Dhobi 2: Golapûrab 3:
 Kahâr 5: Kalwâr 4:
 Kanjar 5: Kewat 2:
 Khâgi 2: Kharâdi 2:
 Koiri 2: Kori 2: Kunjra
 2: Kurmi 5: Lodha 2:
 Manihâr 2: Mochi 3:
 Musahar 10, 11: Nat 8:
 Pâsi 8: Sunâr 9: Tamboli
 2: Teli 3.
 Jaitha—Majhwâr 3.
 Jaithariya—Bhuinbâr 11.
 Jaiwâr—Maithila 2.
 Jajapuriya—Halwâi 2.
 Jajahutiya—Jhijhotiya.
 Jakhar—Jât 15.
 Jâlak—Mallâh 1.
 Jafâl—Bhoksa 4.
 *Jalâli—Dhuniya 4: Sayyid 2.

Jalāliya—Dhānuk 2
 Jalālpuriya—Darzi 2 Khlāg,
 2
 Jalchhatrī—Dhobi 2 Mallāh
 3
 Jalesariya—Barhai 2 Sunār
 9
 Jaliyān—Kahār 6
 Jalkhatrī—Bhathiyāra 2
 Jallād—Dom 1, 7, 21 Kan-
 jar^{3, 5}
 Jalpachhar—Dhobi 2
 Jalwar—Bhoksa 4
 Jamaduva—Chaubē 2
 Jamālpuriya—Bhangī 20
 Jamnapārī—Bhangī 20
 Dhārhi 2 Kasera 2
 Kharādī 2 Tamboli 2
 Janakpurī—Bhangī 20 Hal-wāi 2
 Janeudhārī—Barhai 2
 Jangali—Beriya 3 Kathak 3
 Musahar 10
 *Jangam
 *Janghāra { Barhai 2
 Janghariya { Bhangī 21
 Bilushti 1 Tawaif 6
 Janghra—Barhai 2
 Jangria—Bhāt 3
 *Jangra
 Janjariya—Ahir 5
 Janta—Ghasiya 2
 Janwār—Beriya 3 Chamār
 3 Darzi 2 Dhāngar 2
 Meo 4 Mochi 3 Tamboli
 2
 Jaraliya—Sunkar 1
 Jarant—Kharot

Jariya—Gurkha Kisan 1:
 Kurmi 6 Mallah 3
 Jaroha } Bhānd
 Jaroyān }
 Jarrāh—Nāi 6
 Jarseth—Thathera 3
 Jaruhār—Kurmi 5
 Jarwariya—Ahir 5
 Jasaundhi—Bhāt 4
 Jasāwat—Jādon 2
 Jasnubali—Bhangī 21
 Jashar—Dhānuk 2
 *Jāt—Banjāra 12 Bihishti 1:
 Bind 2 Dafāh 2 Gaddi
 2 Mochi 3
 Jatarni—Jat 19
 *Jati—Dibgar 1 Dasnāmī
 Jatlot—Chamār 4
 Jatua—Chamār 1 Kori 2
 Jauhari—Manuhār 2
 Jaunpuri } Barai 3 Bhangī
 Jaunpuriya } 20 Bharbhūnja
 1 Bhāt 2 Gadariya 2
 Halwāi 2 Kalwār 4 Kasera 2 Kori 2 Kunjra
 2 Tamboli 2 Telī 3
 Thāru 13
 Jaypuri Gaur—Joshī 7
 Jaypuriya—Halwai 2 Nat
 8
 Jaysalmer—Bhatiya 6
 Jebkatra—Chāi 4
 Jeni—Chhīpi 2
 Jeorahiya—Patwa 3
 Jethwant—Bind 2 Kahar,
 6
 Jhalot—Baujāia 12
 *Jhamaiya—Kurmi 6
 Jhanjhiya—Sunār 7

Jharkat—Mahesri 2.
 Jhatwatiya—Banarwâr.
 Jhijhautiya } Kanjar 4: Teli
 *Jhijhotiya } 3.
 Jhinjhariya—Nat 37.
 Jhitiya—Basor 1.
 *Jhojha—Dafâli 2.
 Jholiya—Lohâr 4.
 Jhuar—Dhangar 2.
 Jhunjhunwâla—Mârwarî 6.
 Jhura—Kurmi 6.
 Jimichhiya—Nat 32.
 Jodhpuriya—Aheriya 1.
 Jog—Maithila 2.
 Jogeli—Bengâli 2.
 *Jogi—Bhil 7: Kanjar 1:
 Kingriya 2: Patua 3:
 Thâru 13.
 Jogila—Nat 6.
 Jôgi Thâru—Thâru 11.

Jogiya—Bhangî 20.
 Jogrân—Rôr 1.
 *Johiya
 Jolâha—Julâha.
 Jonkâha }
 Jonkâra } Arakh 3: Bhar
 Jonkiya } 5: Kori 2:
 Jônkiyâra } Nâi 6.
 Jonmanê—Chaubê 2.
 Joriya—Kori 2.
 *Joshi—Bind 2.
 Jugelê—Dhânuk 2.
 Jugir—Dom 7.
 Jugud—Gaur 3.
 Jujhaina—Bhât 3.
 *Julâha—Chûribâr 2: Gâra:
 Meo 4.
 Junediya—Madâri 1.
 Juriya—Kahâr 6: Kori 2:
 Manihâr 2.
 *Jyotishi.

K

Kabara—Mahesri 2.
 Kabâri } Bharbhûnja 1:
 Kabariya } Kâchhi 2:
 Khatik 1:
 Kunjra 1.
 Kabirbansi } Kadhera:
 *Kabirpanthi } Kori 2.
 Kâbuli—Nat 8.
 Kabûtara } Kanjar 3.
 Kabûtari } Nat 6.
 Kabûtâr-wâla } Tawâif 2.
 Kachcha—Kâyasth 13.
 Kachhâr—Beriya 3.

*Kâchhi—Bâghbân: Bohra
 4: Hurkiya: Kadhera:
 Murâo 2.
 Kachhiya—Chhipi 3.
 Kachhiyâna—Manihâr 2.
 Kachhlohiya—Lohâr 4.
 Kachhmâli—Mâli 3.
 Kachhot—Chhipi 2.
 *Kachhwâha }
 Kachhwâhiya } Banjâra 15.
 Kachhwaya } Beriya 3.
 Bhangî 20: Bhât 2: Dar-zi 2: Dhânuk 2: Gadariya
 2: Golspûrab 2: Jogi 3:

Kâchlu 2 · Kadhera :
 Kahâr 6 Kanjar 5
 Kewat 2 Kori 2 Kurmi
 5 Mallâh 1 Meo 4
 Mochi 3 Murâo 2
 Kachhwâna—Chûrîhâr 2
 Kachhwâr—Kori 2 Sejwâr 1
 Kachla—Thâru 12
 Kachni—Banjara 12
 Kadam—Chamâr 3
 Kadha—Kahâr 6
 Kadhar }
 *Kadhera }
 Kâfir—Habashî
 Kahâr—Chamâr 3 Tamboli 2
 Kahariya—Kunjra 2
 Kahatwâr—Bhûinhâr 11
 Kahoji—Kamboh 3
 Kahto—Biyâr 1
 Kâi—Mughal 3
 Kâin—Bhatiya 6
 Kainswat—Pâsi 8
 Kairati—Barhai 2 Kurmi 6
 Kaithal—Gaur 3
 Kaithel }
 Kaithela } Bhând Dom 7
 Kaithiya—Bharbhûnja 1
 Boriya Dhânuk 2 · Dhobi
 2 Halwâi 2 Kori 2 Telî
 3
 Kaithla—Bhand
 Kaithwâns—Boriya Pâsi 8
 Kaivarta—Kewat 1
 Kaiyân—Bohra 1 Chamar 4
 *Kakan—Chûrîhar 2
 Kâkar—Pathân 17
 Kakara—Joshî 4
 Kakariya—Banarwar

Kakhar—Khatrî 13
 Kakhera—Nat 9
 Kakli—Kamboh 3
 Kalabâz—Nat 6, 32
 Kalâl—'Irîqi 1. Kalwâr 1
 Kâlapaltan—Bhangî 32
 Kalaphartor—Murâo 2
 Kalâr—Kalwâr 4
 Kalaunjiya—Telî 3
 Kalawant } Bhangî 21
 Kalawata } Mamhâr 2
 Kaldâr—'Irîqi 3
 Kalesa—Meo 4
 *Kalhans—Gurchha 2
 Kalka—Sansiya 2
 Kalkamaliya—Bawariya 2
 Kalkanaur—Habûra 3
 Kalkatiya—Kunjra 2
 Kallâni—Mahesri 2
 Kâlpî—Hurkiya
 Kalsa—Bhat 4
 Kalsakhi—Meo 4
 Kalsi—Bansphor 2
 Kalsiyân—Gûjar 6
 *Kâlupanthî
 Kalûri—Kamboh 3
 *Kalwâr—Halwâi 2 Tamboli
 2
 Kalyânaut—Kachhwaha 2
 Kalyaniya—Banarwâr
 Kâma—Bohra 4
 Kamângar—Kadhera Rangrez 1
 Kamâni—Pâsi 8
 Kamar—Dom 41
 Kamarha—Bhand
 Kamariha—Ahîr 5, 7 Kori 2
 Kamariya—Ahîr 5 Kori 2
 *Kamboh—Gaddî 2

- Kamboja—Kamboh 2.
 Kāmchor—Beriya 3.
 Kamdhaj—Kanphata 2.
 Kameladār—Qassib.
 *Kamkar—Kahār 5.
 Kampuwāla—Dholā 2.
 Kamro—Majhwār 3.
 Kanak—Sunār 9.
 Kanas—Gūjar 6.
 Kanaudha—Ahār 5.
 Kanauj-ke-meharē—Khatrī 14.
 *Kanaujiya—Ahār 16 : Barai 4 : Bāri 3 : Beldār 2 : Bhar 4 : Bharbhūnja 1 : Bhāt 3 : Bihishti 1 : Bind 2 : Biyār 1 : Boriya : Chamār 3 : Chhipi 2 : Chūrihār 2 : Dabgar 1 : Darzi 2 : Dhārhi 2 : Dhobi 2 : Dusādh 5 : Gaddi 2 : Gandharb 2 : Ghosi 1 : Gurehla 2 : Halwāi 2 : Joshi 4 : Julāha 2 : Kāchhi 2 : Kahār 6 : Kalwār 4 : Kāndu : Kanjar 3, 5 : Kasera 2 : Kathak 3 : Khatik 1 : Koiri 2 : Kori 2 : Kumhār 2 : Kurmi 5 : Lohār 4 : Māli 3 : Manihār 2 : Mochi 3 : Murāo 3 : Mnsahar 11 : Nāi 2 : Nat 8 : Sunār 6 : Tamboli 2 : Teli 3.
 Kanchan—Hurkiya : Nat 3 : Tawāif 1.
 Kanchhariya—Ahār 10.
 Kandera—Dhuniya.
 *Kandewāl.
 Kandewāla. }
 Kandiyā—Bharbhūnja 1.
 *Kāndu } Bharbhūnja 1.
 Kandua }
 *Kanet.
 Kanghigar—Nat 9.
 Kanghiwāla—Kanjar 3.
 Kanha Thākur—Kharādi 2.
 *Kānpuriya—Barai 3 : Beriya 3 : Bhangī 20 : Chūrihār 2 : Dalera 2 : Darzi 2 : Julāha 2 : Kadhera : Kewat 2 : Meo 4.
 Kanikē—Banjāra 12.
 Kāniwāla—Bhānd.
 *Kanjar—Bharbhūnja 1 : Nat 9.
 Kanjriwāl—Bhāt 7.
 Kanju—Gandhi 1.
 Kankani—Mahosri 2.
 Kankauriya—Ahār 5.
 Kankhandi—Jāt 10.
 Kanmailiya—Nāi 8.
 Kanothi—Banjāra 12.
 *Kanphata—Jogi 2 : Thārū 12.
 Kans—Dhūsar 2.
 Kantaha—Mahābrāhman.
 Kantak—Darzi 2.
 Kanwar—Dhāngar 1.
 Kanūri } Gāngari.
 *Kanyūri }
 Kapahi—Banjāra 12.
 Kapālīka—Aghori : Kanphata 10.
 Kaparchirua—Kingriya 2.
 Kapariya—Beriya 3 : Gandhi 1 : Nat. 33.
 Kapilāni—Kanphata 2.
 Kapilgotri—Bhūinhār 11.
 Kaprahti—Goli.

- Kapri—Mahi 3
 Kapriya—Bâwariya 2
 Kapûr—Khatrî 13
 Kapûrî—Nat 7
 Kar—Dasnâmi
 Kara—Ahar 2
 Karai—Kambohi 3
 Karahûla—Sunai 9
 Karaiya—Kalwar 4
 Karan—Kajasth 16
 Karandha—Kalwai 4
 Karas—Kambohi 3
 Karataha—Mahâbrahman
 Karaul—Baheliya 2
 Karawai—Bhil 1
 Karbak—Mallah 1
 Karenawa—Bhuînhar 11
 Kareya—Banjâra 12
 Kargar—Hahûra 3
 Kargati—Majhwâr 3
 Kariaha—Chero 6
 Kârîgar—Hahûra 3
 Karîm—Nat 9
 Kariya—Bari 3
 Kariyâm—Majhwâr
 Kariya Misra—Jhujhotiya 2
 Karjwa—Kurmî 6
 Karkhand—Sânsiya 2
 Karmai—Bhuînhar 11
 Karnâni—Mahesri 2
 *Karnâta.
 Karnâtak—Beriya 3 Kanhjar
 5 Nat 6, 30
 Karni—Kambohi 3
 Karot—Luniya 3
 Karpatti—Majhwâr 3
 Karpê—Majhwâr 3
 Karraha—Bhand
 Karua—Bhuiyar 2
 Karyâl—Gangârî
 Kasâbka—Sejwârî 1
 Kasana—Gûjar 6
 Kasarbâni }
 *Kasarwâmî } Kasauliya—Banarwâr
 Kasauncha—Kumbhîr 2
 *Kasannadhan
 Kasbi—Tawaif 1
 *Kasera—Thatbera 1
 Kasgar—Kumbhâi 2
 Kâshi—Byâi 1
 Kâshiganhar—Tharu 13
 Kâshipuri—Nat 8
 Kâshiwâla—Beldar 2
 *Kashmiri—Beriya 3 Bhând.
 Gandharb 2 Kunja 2
 Nat 31 Tawaif 1
 Kâsib—Bohra 4
 Kâsil—Agarwala 1 Patwâl 1
 *Kâsip
 Kâsipgotra—Bind 2
 Kastora—Kumhar 2
 Agarwala 1
 Kasyap } Bhuînhar 4
 Kasyapa } Kanauiya
 Kataha—Mahâbrahman
 Katahriya—Basor 1
 Katariya—Sunâr 7
 Katari—Lodha 2
 Katariya—Banarwâr
 Katâriya—Basor 1 Meo 4
 Kataya—Chaubê 2
 Katera—Dhuniya
 Katha—Ahîr 10
 *Kathak—Ramaiya 2
 Kathar—Kathiyâra 1

Kathariya—Dhānak 2: Dhobi
2: Lodha 2: Thāru 13.

Kath Bais—Bais 7: Kharādi
2.

*Katheriya—Ahir 10: Banjāra 12: Barai 3: Bhangī
20, 21: Bihishti 1: Ganr.
Rājput 2.

*Kāthi.

Kathik—Kathak.

Kathiya—Ahar 2: Bhāud.

Kathiyār } Chamār 3:

Kathiyāra } Kurmi 5.

Katholiya—Banarwār.

Kathuār—Tamboli 2.

Kathyār—Tamboli 2.

Katiha—Bhāt 4.

Katila—Bhānd.

Katiyār—Barai 4: Kadhera;
Kori 2.

Katorāha—Dnsādh 5.

Katua—Katwa: Kori 2.

Katulya—Gond 2.

*Katwa.

Katwār—Kurmi 5.

Katyāyana—Bhuinhār 11;
Kanaujiya.

Kauriya—Ahir 10.

*Kansik } Agarwāla 1: Bhū-Kausika } inhār 2: Joshi 8.

Kausikiya—Bhangī 2.

Kausil—Parwāl 1.

Kavasiya—Tharu 11.

Kavirāj—Bhāt 4.

*Kāyasth—Bhānd: Bharhūnb-ja 1: Darzi 2: Kathak 3:
Mochi 3: Nat 8.

Kāyasthbansi—Bhangī 21.

Kāyasthwār—Tamboli 2.

Kāzimi—Sayyid 2.

Kedara—Kanjār 4.

Keliya—Bhāt 3, 4.

Kerām—Majhwār 3.

Keutār—Nat 9.

Kevala—Gaar.

*Kewat—Bind 2: Dhārhi 2:
Luniya 3: Mallāh 1, 3.

Kewatiya—Musahar 11.

Kewat ke Bhāt—Bhāt 4.

Kha—Bhānd.

Khadiha—Musahar 10.

Khadwāra—Kahār 5.

Khagār—Arakh 3: Khangār.

*Khāgi—Bāwariya 7: Kahār
5: Kisān 1, 4: Lodha 2:
Sānsiya 2.

Khagoriha—Bhuiyār 2.

Khāha—Dhāngar 2.

Khaimadoz—Darzi 1.

Khairābādi—Halwāi 2:

Harjala: Julāha 2: Meo 4.

Khairaha—Bhuiya 29:

Kharwār 2.

Khairpuriya—Kahār 6: Lu-niya 3.

*Khajrwa.

Khaiyāt—Darzi 1.

Khakhara—Banjāra 12.

Khākrob—Bhangī 1.

Khalil—Pathān 19.

Khalkatiya—Chamār 3.

Khālkhār }
Khalkhur } Beriya 3.

Khalli—Ahir 5.

Khallu—Khatik 1.

Khalranga—Khatik 1.

Khalsa—Kalwār 4.

Khan—Banjāra 14.

Khânagi—Tawâif 1.
 *Khandelwâl—Patwa 3.
 Khandit—Baiswâr 2.
 Khandiya—Jât 22.
 *Khangâr—Bohra 4 : Boriya.
 Khangaraut—Kachhwâha 2.
 Khangrela—Basor 1.
 Khannê—Khatri 13.
 Khanrawa—Patwa 3.
 Khanrkhâl—Hâbûra 3.
 Khânsat—Mahesri 2.
 Khânzâda—Bhâlê Sultân 3.
 Khapariya—Kaparîya : Kin-griya 2.
 Khapribandh—Kurmi 5.
 Khar } Ahîr 10 : Bind 1.
 Kharê } Chero 6 : Kahâr
 6 : Kâyasth 7 : Khatik 1
 Patwa 3
 Kharâdi—Barhai 2
 Kharâha—Bhangî 23
 Kharagwâr—Kahâr 5
 Kharaiha—Dhîruk 2.
 Kharâont—Luniya 3.
 Kharautiya—Bhangî 21
 Mallâh 3
 Kharchurwa—Khatwâr 2
 Kharêbind } Beldâr, 2 :
 Kharêbindi } Dhuniya 4 :
 Kewat 2 : Kurmi 5 : Mallâh 3 : Musahar 11
 Kharêwâl—Patwa 3.
 Khargbansi—Lodha 2
 Khargotiya—Khangâr 3.
 Kharidâha—Kalwâr 4.
 Khariha—Kâchhi 2 : Rauni-
 yâr 2.
 Khariya—Bhangî 28 : Dusâdh
 5.

Kharkhari—Ahîr 5.
 Kharkhiya—Madâri 1.
 Kharluniya—Khâgi 2.
 Kharmona—Kahâr 6.
 Kharomorha—Kahâr 6.
 *Kharot—Beldâr 2 : Kewat 2.
 *Kharwâr } Barai 3 : Bhar
 Kharwâra } 4 : Bind 2 ;
 Darzi 2 : Kahâr 5 : Kewat
 2 : Musahar 10 : Patwa 3 :
 Tamboli 2.
 Kharya—Bhând.
 Khas—Kanet : Mallâh 3.
 *Khasiya—Kanet.
 Khaspuri—Sunâr 7.
 Khatak—Pathân 20.
 Khatak-wâla—Tawâif 4.
 Khatana—Gôjar 6.
 Khatanga—Sunâr 7.
 Khatangiya—Ghasiya 2
 Khataniya—Kanjâr 3.
 Khatâri—Kamboh 3.
 Khâti—Barhai 2.
 Khâti Bishnoi—Barhai 2
 Khatik—Balâhar 1 : Dusâdh
 5 : Pâsi 8
 Khatiya—Kori 2 : Mâli 3
 Râdha 1
 Khatkariha—Bbuiyâr 2.
 Khatkul—Kanauiya.
 *Khatri—Bhând : Bharbhânja 1 : Kathak 3 : Khatik 1 ;
 Mâli 3 : Manihâr 2 :
 Musahar 11 : Nat 8 : Rangrez 1 : Sunâr 6.
 Khatwatiya—Banarwâr.
 Khanna—Hâbûra 3.
 Khawâni—Bhât 7.
 Khawar—Kahâr 5.

- Khawās—Kurmi 6 : Nāi.
 Khelaniya—Banarwār.
 Khemka—Mārwarī 6.
 Khemkarani—Luniya 3.
 Khetgariyār—Kapariya 2.
 Kheti—Bhând.
 Khetwāl—Boriya.
 *Khichi—Ror 1.
 Khidmatiya—Arakh 3.
 Khilji—Banjāra 12.
 Khodari—Gandharb 2.
 Khohli—Parwāl 1.
 Khokhar } Khatik 1 :
 Khokhara } Banjāra 12.
 Khokhata—Mahesri 2.
 Khokhrân—Khatrī 13.
 Kholi—Bhangī 30.
 Khon—Thāru 12.
 Khorô—Ahîr 5.
 Khosiya—Ahîr 5.
 Khubar—Gûjar 6.
 Khumbani—Kachhwāha 2.
 Khumbāwat—Kachhwāha 2.
 Khun—Thāru 13.
 Khunkhuniya—Ahîr 5.
 Khuntait—Bhar 5.
 Khuntkarha—Nat 36.
 Khurasāni—Būhishtil : Hal-wāi 2 : Shaikh 2.
 Khurankh—Dhāngar 1.
 Khushbûsâz—Gandhi 1.
 Khushhâliya—Nat 30.
 Khusiya—Thāru 12.
 Khutant—Bhar 4.
 Khutel—Jât 21.
 Khutkara—Nat 36.
 Khwāja—Hijra 2.
 Khwāja Mahar—Dhuniya 4.
 Khwāja Mansûri—Dhuniya
 4 : Nat 8.
 Khwāja Miyân—Nat 8.
 Khwāja Muhammadi—
 Dhuniya 4.
 Khwāja Sarâi—Dhuniya 4 :
 Hijra 2.
 Khwâjazâd—Hijra 2.
 Khyâliya—Mahesri 2.
 Kichar—Kachhi 2.
 Kidwai—Shaikh 2.
 Kingariya }
 Kingriha } Dhârhi 1 :
 *Kingriya } Nat 9.
 Kinnarâmi—Aghori.
 *Kinwâr—Bhangī 20 : Bhar
 4 : Bhuinhâr 11.
 Kira—Kahâr 5.
 *Kirâr.
 Kiratâ—Ahîr 3.
 Kiri—Banjāra 12.
 Kirtaniya—Gaur 2.
 Kirtiya—Bhangī 26.
 *Kisân—Boriya.
 Kishnaut—Ahîr 5, 10.
 Kistwâr—Bhuinhâr 11.
 Kith—Sunâr 7.
 Koâichl—Majhwâr 3.
 Kochar—Khatrī 15.
 Kodiyāra—Bāwariya 12.
 Kodokhânê—Khatrī 14.
 Kodoriya—Sahariya 2.
 Koeri—Koiri.
 Kohali—Khatrī 15.
 Kohâr—Kumbhâr 1.
 Kohil—Parwāl 1.
 Koikopâl—Gond 2.
 Koilabhutâl—Gond 2.
 Koireriya—Baheliya 2.

*Koiri
 Koitor—Gond 2
 Koiya—Ghasiya 2
 Kokapāsi—Chamār 3
 Kokās—Barhai 3 Kathiyāra 1
 Kokāsbanśi—Barhāi 2
 *Kol—Chero 6
 Kolaha—Bhuinhār 11
 Kolām—Gond 2
 Kolapur—Kunjra 2
 Kolhaniya—Bhuinhār 11
 Kolhāti—Bhintu Nat 2
 Koli—Biwariya 6 • Darzi 2
 Dom 41, 42 Julāha 2
 Kolipanwār—Jhojha 1
 Kolwāla—Dhālgar
 Koliya—Chhipi 3 • Kathak 3
 Konhār—Kumhār 1
 Kor—Ahir 5
 Kora—Banjāra 12, 15
 Korāku—Korwa 2
 Korām—Gond 3 Majhwār
 3
 Korānch—Kāndn
 Korbīyār—Biwariya 12
 Korchamra—Chamār 4
 Kadhera • Kori 2.
 Korcho—Majhwār 3
 *Kori—Bawariya 7 • Chamār
 1 Chhipi 3 Dhānuk 2
 Gaddi 2 • Kori 2 Meo 4
 Mochi 3 • Nat 8.
 Korichhpaparband—Dom
 39
 Koriya—Kewat 2
 *Kormangta—Nat 8
 *Korwa—Nat 8
 Koshta—Kori 5

Kosi Thāru—Thāru 11
 Kota—Māli 8.
 Kotāha—Bhuinhār 11
 Kothāri—Mahesri 2
 Kothiwāl—Bhangī 32
 Kothiha—Baheliya 2
 Kothiya—Bhangī 21 • Dus-ādh 5
 Kotrāha—Bhuinhār 11
 *Kotwār—Banjāra 12 Panka
 1
 Kotyāl—Gangari
 Krim—Nat 9
 Kuchaniya—Dusādh 5
 Kuchbandhawa—Musahar
 10 Kuchbandhiya } Beriya 3
 Kuchbandiya } Kanjar 1:
 Lamiya 3.
 Kuchhila—Thāru 13
 Kudkāha—Balāhar 1
 Kujar—Dhāngar 2.
 Kujra—Dusādh 5.
 Kûkapanthi—Nānakpanthi
 4
 Kûkarkhauwa—Sunār 8
 Kufasresh ta—Kāyasth 15
 Kulha—Chamār 3
 Kulhar—Khatri 15
 Kulhiya—Bhadauriya.
 Kulīn—Bhit 4
 Kulpariya—Basor 1
 Kulsreshtha—Kāyasth 15.
 Kulwant } Mallāh 3
 Kulwat }
 Kumbhār—Kumbhār 1
 Kumbhilak—Mallāh 1.
 *Kumhār—Thāru 13.
 Kumhra—Nāi 2
 Kunbi—Kurmi 1

Kûnchband } Bânsphor
Kûnchbandh } 2: Kan-
Kûnchbandhiya } jar 3.

Kundaher—Dom 7.

Kundal—Bohra 4

Kundera—Barhai 2: Kunera.

Kundliwâl—Sayyid 6.

Kuner }
*Kunera } Barhai 2.

*Kunjra—Manihâr 2.

Kuntel—Bhar 4.

Kupaliha—Thâru 11.

Kupendiya—Chhîpi 2.

Kuppêsâz—Dabgar 1.

Kur—Ahîr 5: Korwa 1.

Kurariya—Khangâr 3.

Kuri—Banjâra 12.

Kuril—Chamâr 4.

Kuriya—Patwa 3.

*Kurmi—Beldâr 2.

Kursenya—Majhwâr 3.

*Kurwar.

Kurwariya—Sahariya 2.

Kusbandhiya—Kanjara 5.

Kusha—Kâchhi 2.

Kushta—Kori 2, 5.

Kusmaha—Thâru 12.

Kusmoriya—Sahariya 2.

Kûsro—Majhwâr 3.

Kusumgotiya—Khangâr 3.

*Kûta.

Kutâha—Bhât 4: Chero 6.

Kûtamâll—Kûta.

Kutichâr—Gusâin 7.

L

Labâna—Banjâra 2, 12.

Lachauli—Kâyasth 13.

Laddha—Mahesri 2.

Lahariwâl—Bhât 4.

Lâhauri—Barhai 2: Bhât 3:

Lohâr 4: Nat 8: Teli 3.

Lahera—Patwa 3.

Lakara—Dhangar 2.

Lakarbâz—Nat 9.

Lakarha—Manihâr 2.

Lakarhâr—Kanjara 3.

Lakariha—Dhânuk 2.

Lakariya—Kurmi 5.

Lakarkata—Barhai 1.

Lakhauna—Kahâr 6.

Lakhauriya—Bhât 3.

Lakhautiya—Bharbhûnja

1: Mahesri 2.

*Lakhera } Chûrihâr 1: Lakheri } Manihâr 2.
Lakhiya }

Lakhmi—Agrahari 2.

Lakhnawa } Halwâi 2

Lakhnawi } Harjala.

Lakshmana—Kanhata 2.

Lâl—Sunâr 7.

Lâla—Ghosi 1.

Lâlbegi—Bhangi 1, 19:

Kanjara 5.

*Lâlkhâni.

Lâlkurti—Bhangî 32
 Lâlman—Chamâr 3
 Lalwané—Khatrî 14
 Langotiya—Dom 7
 Langra—Qalandar 3
 Lapsi—Chaubê 2
 Lathor—Jat 21
 Laukiya Chauhân—Kalwâr 2
 Laungbarsa } Balahar 1
 Laungbasa } Dhâmuk 2
 Laungbasta } Lohâr 4
 *Lantamiya
 Lawaniya—Sunâr 7
 Lilar—Ghosi 1
 Lingadhâri—Jangam 3.
 Lingâyat—Jangam 1
 Litta—Dom 7, 19
 Lodh } Bharbhânja 1
 *Lodha } Domar Habûra
 Lodhi } 3 Harjala Kadhara Kanjar 5 Katbak
 3 Khâgi 2 Khatrî 11
 Kunjra 2 Luniya 3
 Thathera 3

Lodi—Dafah 2 Nat 8:
 Pathân 21
 Logvarsha—Lohâr 4
 Lohangi—Nat 33
 *Lohâr—Dom 41 Gôjar 6
 Lohâr Barhal—Barhai 2
 Lohat—Knrmi 6
 *Lohiya—Kanjar 3 Mahe-ri
 2
 Lokhariya—Banarwâr
 Loleri—Basor 1
 Loniwâl—Khîr 5
 Loniyan—Chamâr 3
 *Lorha
 Lota—Barhai 2 Lohâr 1
 Lundâvat—Meo 1
 Lungtaya—Dom 7
 *Luniya—Beldar 2 Boriya
 Dangi 2 Kadhera Kan-jar 5 Kewat 2 Tamboli
 2
 Lurkaji—Kamboli 3

M

Machal—Bhangî 21
 Machhar—Mallâh 3
 Machhmâra—Kahâr 1.
 *Madâri } Bhathiyâra 2
 Madariya } Dafah 2
 Dhuniya 4 Gadariya 2
 Julaha 2
 Madhavacharya—Barrâgi 2
 Madhesiya—Dharin 2
 Dusâdh 5 Halwai 2

Kându Kori 2 Tamboli
 2 Telî 3
 Madhpuriya—Dîngî 2
 Madhubansi—Halwai 2
 Madhupuriya—Kathak 3
 Madhuriya—Bhât 3
 Madhyasreni—Bangali
 Madkul—Bhatiya 6
 Madyal—Gond 2

Magadhiya } Bānsphor 1 :
 Magahi } Barai 4 :
 Magahiya } Barhai 2 :
 Bhuiya 4 : Dhānuk 2 :
 Dhobi 2 : Dom 7 : Dusādh
 5 : Kāndu : Kewat 2 :
 Koiri 2 : Lohār 4 : Luniya
 3 : Nāi 2 : Sunār 9 :
 Tawāif 6.

Magar—Gadariya 2 : Gurkha.
 Magarāha—Dhobi 2 : Kalwār
 4.

Magariha—Bānsphor 2.
 Magarwār—Joshi 4.
 Maghariya—Arakh 3 : Ghosi
 1.

Mahābādī—Halwāi 2.
 Mahabirīya—Teli 3.

*Mahābrāhman.

Mahāduār—Dhobi 2.

*Mahājan—Banya 1 : Kalwār
 4.

Mahālodhi—Lodha 2.
 Mahalua—Ahīr 10.
 Mahalwār—Bhuiya 4.
 Mahāpachar—Ahar 2.
 Mahāpātr—Bhāt 3, 4 : Mahā-
 brāhman.

Mahar—Ahar 2 : Kahār 5 :
 Kumbār 2 : Lodha 2.

*Mahātāshtra.

Maharua—Ahīr 10 : Barui 3.
 Mahatiya—Kisān 1.
 Mahāwar—Kahār 5.
 Mahāwat—Nāi 6 : Nat 6, 33.
 Mahāwati—Bānsphor 2.
 Mahendra—Khatik 13.
 Maherē—Khatrī 13.
 *Mahesri—Kurmi 6.

Maheswari—Bhatiya 6 :
 Bohra 4 : Mahesri.
 Mahīgir—Bhatiyāra 5.
 Mahista—Beriya 3.
 Mahobiya—Barai 3 : Boriya.
 Mahohar—Mallāh 3.
 Mahpē—Khatrī 15.
 Mahra—Bhoksa 5 : Kahār 1 :
 Lodha 2.

*Mahror.

Mahrora—Baidguār.
 Mahtam—Thāru 12.
 Mahtama—Dom 7.
 Mahteh—Bhuiya 4.
 Mahtiya—Kol 4 : Pāsi 8.
 Mahto } Biyār 1 : Chero 6 :
 Mahton } Luniya 3 :
 Pauka 1.

Mahuār—Kharot.
 Mahuāri—Kathak 3.
 Mahul—Beldār 2 : Lohār 4 :
 Mahuli—Agrahari 2.
 Mahur—Barhai 2 : Dhūsar 2 :
 Kisān 1 : Kori 2 : Māli 3 :
 Sunār 9 : Teli 3.

Mahuriya—Lodha 2.
 Mahwariya—Korwa 1.

Maila—Ahīr 5.

Maini—Jāt 21.

Mainpuri—Bhangī 20.

Mainpuri—Chanhān, Musahar 11 : Nat 8.

Mainpurikā Bhātra—Blāt
 4.

Mainpuriwāla—Bhāt 3.

Mainpuriya—Beriya 3 : Hal-wāi 2 : Kanjar 5 : Kasera
 2.

Mainu—Bhadauriya.

Maipia—Ror 1
 Mair—Sunâr 6
 Maithani—Gangîri
 *Maithila
 Maitreya—Agarwala 1
 Maiwarha—Bind 1
 Majhganwîya—Bhit 4
 Majhurâya—Bhû 1
 *Majhwâr
 Majnûn—Ahîr 10
 Majraut—Ahîr 10
 Makhanpuri } Chûrûri
 Makhanpuriya }
 2 Kahîr 6 Tîh 3
 Makhdûmpuriya—Halwat 2
 Makotri—Kambol 3
 Makriyâna—Nat 11
 Mal—Benya 1 Kurmi 6
 Mahesri 2
 Mâl—Kambol 3
 Malaguri—Gangari
 Malak—Jât 14
 Malakâna—Malkâna
 Malakpuriya—Meo 4
 *Malang.
 Malar—Nat 9, 45
 Malavi—Kahîr 5
 Mâlavi Gaur—Joshî 7
 Malhan—Banarwar
 *Mâlî
 Malik—Domar Kathak 3
 Lohar 4
 Malikpuri—Murâo 2
 *Malkâna
 Malla—Sânsîya 2
 *Mallah—Bind 2 Dalera 2
 Dom 42 Kadhera Kahar
 5 Kewat 2 Luniya 3
 Malpânârê—Mahesri 2
 Maltiya—Khangar 3
 Vol. IV

Mâlû—Mahesri 2
 Malua—Jât 19
 *Malûkdâsi.
 Mâlwar—Bhangî 29
 Malwariya—Banjara 11 -
 Thîru 10
 Manchaura—Bhuînâr 11.
 Mandaha—Thîru 13
 *Mandahâr
 *Mandarkiya
 Mandavaya—Agarwala
 Mandik—Kathak 3
 Mandniyâriya—Bawariya 7.
 Mangaiyân—Sunar 9
 Mangal—Khatrî 15
 Mangali—Kathak 3
 Mangalpuriya—Halwa 2
 Mangarâha—Dholi 2 - Lunya 3
 Mangasha—Dholi 2
 Manglauri—Bhangî 20
 Mangta—Dânsphor 2 Nat
 8 Pasi 8 Tawâif 2
 Manho—Gandharb 2
 Manhpachhar—Ahîr 10
 *Manhâr—Chûrîhâr 1
 Manthariya—Banarwar
 Manik—Sunâr 7
 Manikpuri } Bhangî 20
 Manikpurîha } Sunâr 7
 Manipuriya—Banarwar
 *Mânjhi—Gurkha Majhwar
 1 Mallah 1
 Mânjhi Musahara—Thîru
 10
 Mansûri—Dhuniya 3
 Mantri—Mahesri 2
 Manûri—Gangîri
 Manwa—Kurmi 5
 Manwar—Kori 2

Manwās—Pāsi 8.
 Maqsūdabādi—Halwāi 2.
 Marada—Mahesri 2.
 Marai—Majhwār 3, Nat 37.
 Maraiya—Kanjār 3.
 Marātha—Darzi 2.
 Marauthya—Banjāra 12.
 Marchaha—Thāru 11.
 Mardaniya—Sunār 7.
 Mardārbatti—Hābūra 3.
 Margiya—Sunkar 7.
 Marhotra—Khatrī 13.
 Markām—Agariya 3.
 Ghasiya 2; Majhwār 3;
 Gond 3.
 Marpachi—Majhwār 3.
 Marsi—Gūjar 6.
 Marudharān—Mahesri 2.
 *Mārswār—Hābūra 3.
 *Mārswāri—Bhatiya 6;
 Chhīpi 2; Dhobi 2; Joshi 7;
 Rangrez 2.
 Maskār—Baheliya 2.
 Maskān—Musahar 2.
 Maskhauwa—Beldār 2.
 Masrām—Majhwār 3.
 Mastnāth—Kunphata 2.
 *Matar—Dharkār 1.
 Matēpur—Kathak 3.
 Mathaiwān—Sunār 7.
 Mathapati—Kathak 3.
 Mathdhāri—Gusāin 7.
 Mathesiya—Tamboli 2.
 Mathesri—Kunphata 2.
 Mathil—Parwāl 1.
 Mathiya—Ahīr 10.
 Mathu—Dhobi 2.
 Mathur—Darzi 2; Dhobi 2;
 Kāyasth 13; Kewat 2;
 Māli 3.

Mathurabāsi—Kathak 3.
 Mathuriya—Bandi; Banjāra
 2; Bāri 3; Barhai 2;
 Bhangī 20, 21; Bhar-bhūnja 1; Bhāt 2; Chaubē
 1; Chhīpi 2; Darzi 2;
 Dhānuk 2; Dhobi 2;
 Dhuniya 4; Gaddi 2;
 Golapūrab 3; Jnlāha 2;
 Kahār 6; Khāgi 2;
 Kumhār 2; Lohār 4;
 Manihār 2; Nāi 2; Nat 8;
 Tamboli 2; Teli 3.
 *Mathuriya Ojha—Lohār 5.
 Matiyawār—Kahār 6.
 Mattu—Kanjār 4.
 Mauala—Rangrez.
 *Mauhar.
 Mauhariya—Rastāogi.
 Maula—Jāt 19.
 Mauliha—Lohār 4.
 Mauliya—Lohār 4.
 Maunas—Bhar 4; Bind 2
 Monas.
 Mazhabi—Bhangī 25.
 Meghiya—Māli 3; Nat 9.
 Meharhotra—Khatrī 14.
 Mehra—Kumhār 2.
 Mehtarānpuri—Bhangī 20.
 Mehtariya—Halwāi 2; Kadhera; Kathak 3; Kunjra 2
 *Meo.
 Mertwār—Chhīpi 2.
 Mewafarosh—Khatik 1;
 Kunjra 1.
 Mewār—Ahīr 10; Kurmi 6;
 Murāo 2.
 Mewāra—Bāwariya 12.

Mewâti—Bihishti 1 : Gaddi
2 : Kanjar 5 : Mâli 3 : Meo
1.
Milki—Shaikh 2.
Milku—Châpi 2.
Mina—Meo 1.
Mina Meo—Meo 1.
*Mirâsi—Dafâli 2 : Tawâif 6.
Mirdaha—Chûrikâr 2 : Nat
6.
Mirshikâr—Tawâif 2.
Mirzapuri—Bhûinhâr 11 :
Julâha 2 : Kunjra 2 : Meo
4.
Miskâr—Baheliya 2 : Tawâif
2.
Misra—Chaubê 2 : Kathak 3.
Misrikha—Halwâi 2.
Mistri—Barhai 1.
Mitha—Murâo 2.
Mittal—Agarwâla 1.
*Mochi—Chamâr 3 : Dabgar
1 : Dom 41.
Modiya—Sunâr 9.
Mohâhar—Chamâr 3.
Mohan—Lodha 2.
Mohanmûrat—Bhât 4.
Mohânw—Kathak 3.
Mokha—Gadariya 2.
Molak—Abîr 5.
Momi—Kamboh 1.
Momin—Dhuniya 4 : Julâha
2.
*Monas.
*Mongil.
Monkhra—Bhând.
Morel—Basor 1.
Morha—Kahâr 6.
Motariya—Banarwâr.
Mothi—Arakh 3 : Pâsi 8.
Motipurha—Thâru 18.

Muâsi—Korwal.
Muazzamnagariya—Joshi 4.
Muchhâri—Banjâra 12, 15.
Mudgala—Agarwâla 1.
Mughal—Banjâra 12 : Bili-shti 1 : Bisâti : Mughul :
Nat 8.
Mughal—Bharsawa—Gâra.
Mughra—Musabar 11.
*Mughul.
Mugm—Bâwariya 6.
Muhammadâbâdi—Halwâi
2.
Muhammad Hanafi—Dhu-
niya 4.
Muhammadi—Dhuniya 4 :
Gâra : Julâha 2.
Mujâwir—Dafâli 2.
Mujhar—Banjâra 12.
Mujwâr—Abîr 5.
*Mukeri—Banjâra 12, 14 :
Bhathiyâra 2 : Bihishti 1 :
Darzi 2 : Dhuniya 4 :
Manihâr 2 : Teli.
Mukhannas—Hijra.
Muki—Kamboh 3.
Mukund—Jâdon 2.
Mukundpuri—Bhangî 20.
Mulâna—Mâli 3.
Multâni—Barhai 2 : Bhangî
20, 21 : Gâra : Julâha 2 :
Rangrez 1.
Multânwâri—Beriya 3.
Muna—Nânakpauthi 3.
Munaharbhâl—Bhil 1.
Munda—Kol 1 : Nânakpanthi 3.
Munderiya—Kahâr 5.
Mundhara—Mahesr 2.
Mundiya—Ahar 2.
Mungariya—Dom 7.

Munna Dâsi—Apâpanthi.
 Munwar—Kâchhi 2.
 Murâbâdi—Halwâi 2.
 Murâi—Kâchhi 2 : Manihâr 2.
 *Murâo—Bâglbân : Kâchhi 2.
 Murarkha—Ahar 2.
 Murhâwat—Banjâra 12.
 *Muriya—Mallâh 3.
 Muriyâna—Ahîr 10.

Muriyâri—Kewat 2 : Mallâh 3 : Muriya.
 Murli—Kamboh 3.
 *Musahar—Bhuiya 4 : Luniya 3 : Thârû 12, 13.
 Musalli—Bhangî 1.
 Musalmâni—Bhând : Nâi 2.
 Musarma—Sunâr 9.
 Mushera—Musahar 1.

N

Nabinagar kâ langota—
 Bhât 4.
 Naddâf—Dhuniya 1 : Kadhe-
 ra.
 Nâga—Dâdupanthi 2.
 Nâgar—Barhai 2 : Bohra 4 :
 Chamâr 3 : Gujarâti Brâh-man 10 : Maithila 2.
 Nagarband—Dom 7.
 Nagarha—Dharkâr 1.
 Nagarj—Gûjar 6.
 Nagariha—Kalwâr 4.
 Nagas—Agarwâla 1.
 Nagauri—Ahar 2 : Bhât 3.
 Nagauwa—Ahîr 5.
 Nâgbansi—Barai 3 : Barhai 2 : Chero 6 : Tamboli
 2.
 Nagendra—Agarwâla 1.
 Nâggotiya—Khangâr 3.
 Nagraniyân—Bhât 4.
 Nahali—Hâbûra 3.
 Nahar—Bânsphor 2 : Baidguâr.
 Nahargotiya—Khangâr 3.
 Naharkarai—Dom 7.
 *Nâi—Meo 4.

Naihatha—Bais 7.
 Nâik—Banjâra 13 : Tawâif
 2, 3.
 Nâika—Tawâif 2.
 Naikan—Kathak 3.
 Naikanpuriya—Chêribâr 2.
 Nainhan—Sunâr 9.
 Naipâli } Halwâi 2.
 Naipaliya }
 Naipariya } Kurmi 6.
 Naipbiriya—Banarwâr.
 *Naithâna.
 Nakchhikna—Chamâr 3.
 Nakhatiya—Bhând.
 *Nakhi.
 Nakhsikhana.—Khatri 14.
 Naktharia—Banarwâr.
 Naktunâik—Sunâr 7.
 *Nalband.
 Namahrin—Gandharb 2.
 Nâma sûdra—Bhangî 1.
 Namdawâla—Gadariya 3.
 Nâmdeo—Daizi 2.
 *Namni—Gandharb 2.
 *Nânakpanthi.
 Nânakpuri—Bhangî 20.

Nānakshāhi.—Barai 3 :
 Bhangi 21 : Kādhera.
 Nānakpanthi.
 Nanauliya.—Bhūinhār 11.
 Nānba } Bhathiyāra 2.
 *Nānbāi }
 Nandak.—Hābūra 3.
 Nandbans } Ahir 5, 7 :
 Nandbansi } Banjāra 12 :
 Tamboli 2.
 Nandē—Khatri 15.
 Nandiya—Jogi 3.
 *Nandwāni.
 Nanet—Dom 7.
 Nānpaz—Nānbāi.
 Nanwag—Bais 7.
 Nāo—Nāi.
 Nāpan—Bhuiyār 2.
 Naqqāl—Bhānd.
 *Naqshbandi }
 Naqshbandiya }
 Naqwi—Sayyid 2.
 Nara—Jādon 2.
 Narai—Kahār 5.
 Naraigana—Koīri 2.
 *Narauliya.
 Narayaniha—Bind 1.
 Narhanrha—Sunār 7.
 Nariniya—Banarwār.
 Nāritor—Beriya 3.
 Nariyarha—Agrahari 2.
 Narūka—Kachhwāha 2.
 Nasalkhāni—Barai 4.
 Nasaniyān—Patwa 3.
 Nasarkhāni—Barai 4 : Tamboli 2.
 *Nat—Beriya 3 : Kanjar 1, 3.
 Nātak—Bānsphor 2.
 Nāth—Dom 41.
 Nathamir—Banjira 12

Natharin—Mahesri 2.
 Nathāwat—Kachhwāha 2.
 Nathu—Kahār 6 : Mallāh 3.
 Natkholi—Khatri 14.
 Nāu—Nāi.
 Naubariya—Sunār 7.
 Nauchhirak—Chhāpi 2.
 Naugiriha } Sunār 7.
 Naugiriya }
 *Naumuslim—Bhānd : Lālkhāni 2 : Nat 8.
 Nauni—Gangāri.
 Naurangābādi—Halwāi 2.
 Naurangi—Tawāif 6.
 Nauratan—Bhangi 21.
 Nautakiya—Sunār 7.
 Nautiyāl—Gangāri.
 Nawāb—Nat 8.
 Nawalpurha } Tharā 11, 13.
 Nawalpuriya }
 Nawandiya—Sūd 2.
 Nawar—Kahār 5.
 Nāyak—Jhijhotiya 2.
 Nayapura—Chaubē 2.
 Negauriya—Bhoksa 4.
 Negiwāla—Bengālī 2.
 Negpātar—Tawāif 2.
 Neoriya—Basor 1 : Dharkār
 1.
 Neta—Nat 37.
 Netām—Majhwār 3 : Nat 37.
 Neti—Majhwār 3.
 Newar—Dom 41 : Gurkha.
 Nich—Audhiya 1.
 Nigoti—Chamār 4.
 Nihang—Akālī.
 Nikhād—Gadariya 2 : Ka-hār 6 : Kewat 2 : Mallāh 1.
 Nikhar—Gadariya 2.

*Panwâr—Banjâra 11, 12;
15: Bâwariya 7: Bhoksa
4: Bihishti 1: Chamâr 3:
Darzi 2: Dhângar 2:
Dhuniya 4: Dusâdh 5:
Gadariya 2: Golapûrab 3:
Hâbûra 3: Jât 19, 21:
Kahâr 6: Kathak 3: Kâthi
4: Mâli 3: Manihâr 2:
Nat 8.

Panwâri—Bhangi 21.

Panwariya—Barai 3.

Papankh—Kanphata 2.

*Parahiya.

*Paramhansa.

Paramtâri—Luniya 3.

Parâsara—Bhatiya 5: Bhuinhâr 11: Joshi 4.

Parasbâdi—Nat 37.

Parasiya—Bhuinhâr 11.

Parasrâmi—Boriya: Pâsi 8.

Paraswân—Agariya 3.

Parauniya—Basor 1.

Parchhatti—Dom 39.

*Pardesi—Kadhera.

Paretiya—Barhai 2.

Parhaiya—Parahiya.

Pari—Dasnâmi.

Paribais Chhattri—Kascra
2.

*Parihâr.

Parikha—Gaur 3.

Parinmalot—Kachhwâha 2.

Pariya—Chhîpi 2: Dângi 2.

Parnâmi—Kâchhi 2: Teli 3.

Parodiya—Kumbâr 2.

Parsaniya—Khangâr 3.

Parsariya—Hais 7.

Parsotiya } Julâha 1:
Parsutiya } Kori 12.

Partâbgârhi—Barai 4.

*Partâni—Mahesri 2.

Partiya—Bhoksa 4.

Pârvata—Dasnâmi.

*Parwal } Mahesri 2.
Parwar }

*Pâsi—Baheliya 2: Boriya:
Dusâdh 5.

Pasiwân.—Pâsi 8.

Pasiya—Baheliya 2.

Paskauta } Kahâr 6 Lu-
Paskewata } niya 3.

Pasmangta—Pâsi 8.

Passi—Pâsi 1.

*Patait—Bhar 5.

Patanwâr—Kurmi 5.

Pâtar—Tawâif 1.

*Patâri.

Patariha—Kâchhi 2: Kurmi
5: Lodha 2.

Patariya—Jhijhotiya 2: Kis-ân 1: Tawâif 1.

Pataun—Bhar 4.

Patbandhi—Kharwâr 2.

Pâtha—Bhât 4.

Pâthak—Ahîr 5: Bhuinhâr
11: Chaubô 2: Dhobi 2:
Jhijhotiya 2.

Pathân—Banjâra 12: Bhând:
Bihishti 1: Dhuniya 4:
Gaddi 2: Ghosi 1: Hîjra
2: Jhojha 1: Julâha 2:
Nat 8: Rangrez 1.

Pathrauta—Bhangi 21.

Patiwân—Bhar 5.

Patlê—Kapariya 2.

Patolbans—Bhar 4.

Patra—Dângi 2: Kori 2.

Patsariya—Bais 7: Banar-wâr.

Pattari—Kanjari 4.
 Pattariha—Bâri 3.
 Pattharâha—Bhangî 23.
 Patthargoti—Bhangî 21 :
 Chamâr 4.
 Patthariha—Kurmi 5.
 Pattharkat—Kanjari 35.
 Pattharphor—Bhangî 19.
 Pattharwâr—Bhangî 21.
 Patua—Bhând : Patwa.
 Pâtur—Tawâif 1.
 Paturiya—Beriya 3; Huk-iya : Kathak 3 : Nat 8 : Ta-
 wâif 1.
 *Patwa.
 Pâuhâri.
 Pawalê—Majhwâr 3.
 Pâwanriya }
 Pâwariya } Dhârhi 1.
 Payâgwâr—Agrahari 2
 Payâsi Mîsr—Bhuînâr 11
 Pemanlyân—Mâli 3.
 Pesadeli—Dom 7.
 Phagil—Palwâr 1.
 Phankê—Sunâr 7.
 Phanswâr—Kanjari 5
 Pharli—Hâbûra 3.
 Phokha—Jât 21.
 Phuhihâra—Barai 4.
 Phûl—Sunâr 7.
 Phûl-mâli—Mâli 3 : Sâini.
 Phulmati—Murâo 3.
 Phûl-panwâr—Bhangî 21.
 Phûl-sâhib—Udâsi 2.
 Phûl-singhiya—Gadariya 2.
 Phulwariya—Bhât 4.
 Pichhauriha—Dhânuk 2.
 Pihâna ka Tândan—
 Khatrî 14.
 Pihâniwâl—Bhât 4.

Pipalayân—Gaur 4.
 Piparâha—Barwâr 2.
 Pipariha } Bhât 4.
 Pipariya } Khangâr 3.
 Pîrzâda—Nâi 2 : Sayyid 2 :
 Shaikh 2.
 Pitarhanda—Bhând.
 Pitarpuri—Bhât 4.
 Piyâzi—Kâchhi 2.
 Poiya—Majhwâr 3.
 *Pokharna.
 Pomâr—Gûjar 6.
 Portê—Majhwâr 3.
 Posâm—Gond 3 : Majhwâr
 3.
 *Potgar.
 Pradhân—Ghosi 1 : Khar-
 wâr 2.
 Prâgwâr—Agrahari 2.
 *Prânnâthi.
 Prâyagâha } Gangaputra 2.
 Prayâgwâl } Koiî 2.
 Pundelot—Meo 4.
 *Pundîr—Gâra : Kadhera :
 Kumbâr 2 : Sânsiya 2.
 Pundpaliya—Mahesri 2.
 Puniya—Kâchhi 2
 Purâbi }
 Pûraba- } Agrahari 2 : yia } Baheliya 2 : Balâh-
 } bar 1 : Banjara 14 :
 Purbiha }
 Purbiya } Bathai 2 : Basor
 1 : Beldâr 2 : Bhând :
 Bharbhûnja 1 : Bhoksa 1 :
 Chamâr 4 : Chhîpi 3 :
 Chûrihâr 2 : Dhuniya 4 :
 Dhobi 2 : Gaddi 2 : Ghosi
 1 : Halwâi 2 : Hurkiya :
 Jnlâha 2 : Kâchhi 2 :
 Kalwâr : 4 Kasarwâni 1 :

*Nikumbh—Kamkar².
 Nilgar—Rangrez 1.
 Nimāwat—Bairāgi 2.
 *Nimbārak—Bairāgi 4.
 Nimgotliya—Khangir 3.
 Nimkharak Swāmi—Bairāgi 2.
 Nimkhar—Halwāi 2.
 Nirambh—Dasmāmi.
 *Niranjanī.
 Nirbān—Ahir 3, 10.
 Nirbānī—Bhangī 21.
 Nirmala—Nanakyanthi 1.
 *Nirola.
 Nirveriya—Dāngī 2.
 Nishāda—Kewat 2 : Mallik 2.

Niskhalank—Mahesri 2.
 *Niyāriya—Dāngī 2 : Kathak 5 : Sanir 7.
 Nizāmābādī—Kanjār 5.
 Nolban—Kahār 6.
 Nomāln—Ramaiya 2.
 Nona—Chamār 3.
 Nonela—Bhānd.
 Noriya—Kahār 5.
 Nujariya—Sunir 7.
 Nunera—Chamār 3.
 Nunliya—Kadhara : Luniya 1.
 Nūrbāf—Chūrihār 2 : Julila 3.
 Nyakotliya—Kāchhi 2.

O

Odh—Kori² : Orh
 Odrafn—Bandi.
 Oghar—Aghori 4.
 Oika—Majhwār 3 : Nat 37.
 Oima—Majhwār 3.
 Ojha—Darzi 2 : Kadhara : Lohār 4.
 Ojha Gaur—Barhai 2.
 Ojhyāl—Gond 2.

Olku—Majhwār 3.
 Ora—Ahar 2.
 Orāon—Dhāngar 1.
 Orh—Beldār 2 : Dom 42 : Jhojha 1 : Kori 2 : Luniya 3.
 Oswāl—Bhatiya 6.
 Otā—Majhwār 3.

P

Pāb—Panka 1.
 Pachauri—Sejwāri 1.
 Pachbhaliya—Gandharb 2.

Pachhāda—Bāwariya 7 : Gadariya 2 : Jāt 11 : Kahār 5 : Sunār 9.

Pachhain } Chhipi 2 : Ka-Pachhainiya } saundhan 1 :
 Pachhainwa } Khatri 15 :
 Pachhaiyân } Sunâr 8.
 Pachhami—Bhoksa 1.
 Pachhar—Pâsi 8.
 Pachhayanaut—Kachhwâha
 2.
 Pachhiwâha—Agrahari 2 :
 Banjâra 12 : Kasera 2 :
 Rastâogi : Teli 3.
 *Pachhtoriya.
 Pachhwâhân—Barai 3 :
 Bharbhûnja 1 : Chamâr 3 :
 Dhârhi 2 : Halwâi 2 : Kal-wâr 4 : Kasarwâni 1 :
 Kasera 2 : Kathak 3 :
 Kewat 2 : Murâo 2 :
 Pachkauta }
 Pachkewata } Luniya 3. -
 Pachpiriya—Halwâi 2 : Teli
 3.
 Pachrauliya—Joshi 4.
 Padal—Goud 2.
 Padar—Banjâra 12.
 Padhân—Ghosi 1.
 Pagahiya—Dhobi 2.
 *Pahâri—Musahar 10.
 Pahari } Bâwariya 7 : Dom
 Pahariya } 41 : Kol 4 :
 Kumbâr 2.
 Pahlwân—Kanjar 5 : Nat 3.
 Pahri—Dom 42 : Dusâdh 5 :
 Pâsi 8.
 *Pahriya—Dângi 2.
 Paihwar—Gadariya 2.
 Pajai—Kumbâr 6.
 Pajhasiya—Chamâr 3.
 Pakhâwaji—Mirâsi.
 Palakra—Meo 1.

Palauta—Lohâr 4.
 Palhariya—Chhîpi 2.
 Paliwâr—Palwâr.
 Paliya—Chaubê 1.
 *Palliawâl—Bhatiya 6.
 *Palwâr—Dusâdh 5 : Musa-
 har 11.
 Pân—Panka 1.
 Panariha—Chero 6.
 Panchadari—Kanauiya
 Panchmakâri—Ojha 2.
 Panchambar—'Irâqi 3.
 Panchapiriha—Bind 1.
 Panchauli—Kâyasth 13.
 Panchhiya—Nat 32.
 Panchlatiya—Banarwâr.
 Pandaru—Majhwâr 3.
 Pandobansi—Chero 6.
 Pandûbl—Mallâh 3.
 Panika—Panka 1.
 Panisap—Chhîpi 2.
 Panjâbi—Chhîpi 3 : Dabga
 1 : Darzi 2 : Kanjar 5 :
 Nat 8.
 Panjati—Saraswata 2.
 Panjibaddh—Maithila 2.
 Panjtakya—Banjâra 12.
 Panjzâti—Khatri 13.
 *Panka.
 *Pankhiya.
 Pankiya—Panka 1.
 Panot—Banjâra 12.
 Panr.—Panka 1.
 Pânrrê.—Bhoinhâr 11 :
 Chaubê 2.
 Pansariya—Barai 3
 *Pant Panth—Pant.
 Pantiha—Sarwariya 3.
 Panua.—Panka 1.

Kasaundhan 1: Kavera 2;
 Kathak 3: Khatri 13;
 Koiri 2: Kumbhar 2;
 Kunja 2: Lalla 2;
 Lohar 4: Manihar 2;
 Muria 2: Musahar 11: Nai
 2: Rastogi: Sunar 7,
 8: Thiru 10.

Purhiya—Sunar 7.
 Puri—Dasmiri: Khatri 15.
 Puriya—Banarwar.
 Purkela—Majhwar 3.
 *Purohit.
 *Purwal } Banarwar; Purwar } Bhulhar 11.

Q

Qadiri } Sayyid 2.
 Qadiriya }
 *Qala'igar.
 *Qalandar—Kanjhar 1.
 Manihar 2.
 *Qassab. } Qasai. }

Qawwal—Bhand.
 Qazalbash—Mughul 2.
 Pathan 15.
 Qazipuriya—Sunar 7.
 Quralshi—Bilashiti 1.
 Dafali 2: 'Iraqi 3;
 Rangrez 1: Shaikh 2.

R

Rabisi—Gandharb 2.
 Rächhband—Kanjhar 3
 *Rādha.
 *Rādha-swāmi.
 *Rādha-vallabbi.
 Rādi—Ramaiya 2.
 Rāē—Bhāt 3: Bhuiyār 2:
 Gadariya 2: Kalwar 4:
 Ramaiya 2.
 Rāē Anghar }
 Rāē Asar } Bhatiya 6.
 Rāē Badhūcha }
 Rāē Balaya }

Rāē Bhudariya }
 Rāē Bilbar }
 Rāē Bora }
 Rāē Chamuja } Bhatiya 5.
 Rāē Chandan }
 Rāē Dalya }
 Rāē Danda }
 Rāēdās—Bhar 4: Kadhera.
 Rāēdās—Chamār 4.
 Rāē Degchanda }
 Rāē Dhadhāl } Bhatiya 5.
 Rāē Dhadhār }
 Rāē Dhaga }

Râô Dhakkar
 Râô Dhara
 Râô Dhavan
 Râô Dhiran
 Râô Dutaya
 Râô Gagla
 Râô Gujarīya
 Râô Ghaga
 Râô Gugalgandhi
 Râô Gurugulâb
 Râô Hariya
 Râô Jabba
 Râô Jagta
 Râô Jaydhan
 Râô Jiya
 Râô Jiyala
 Râô Jujargandhi
 Râô Kajariya
 Râô Kandhiya
 Râô Kapûr
 Râô Karangona
 Râô Kartari
 Râô Khiyara
 Râô Korhaiya
 Râô Koya
 Râô Kukanr
 Râô Lakhanbanta
 Râô Maidaya
 Râô Malan
 Râô Mochha
 Râô Mogaya
 Râô Mota
 Râô Multâni
 Râô Naëgandhi
 Râô Nagobabla
 Râô Nisat
 Râô Padamshi
 Râô Paliya
 Râô Panchal
 Râô Panchloriya

Bhatiya 5.

Râô Paregndhi
 Râô Parijiya
 Râô Pawar
 Râô Phurasgandhi
 Râô Povar
 Râô Pralma
 Râô Râja
 Râô Ramaiya
 Râô Rariya
 Râô Rika
 Râô Saraki
 Râô Sijballa
 Râô Sodhiya
 Râô Soni
 Râô Suara
 Râô Suphla
 Râô Sûrya
 Râô Tambol
 Râô Thula
 Râô Udesi
 Râô Ved
 Râôwari—Rahwâri.
 Rafki—'Irâqi 3.
 Rafugar—Darzi 1.
 Raghubansi—Ahîr 10 : Baheliya 2 : Beriya 3 : Darzi 2 : Joshi 4 : Kamboh 3 : Khâgi 2 : Kathak 3 : Neo 4 : Musahar 11 : Tamboli, 2 : Thâru 13.
 Raghuwâl—Gond 2.
 Ragreti—Nânakpanthi 4.
 Raha—Banjâra 12.
 Rahti—Bohra 1.
 Rahtu—Bhatiya 6.
 *Rahwâri.
 *Raikwâr—Bhuinhâr 11 : Gadariya 2 : Kahâr 5 : Kanjar 6 : Kathak 3 : Khâgi 2. Manihâr 2.

Bhatiya 5.

Râin.
 Râj—Kadhêra.
 Rajaipur—Kathak 3.
 Rajar—Dusâdh 5.
 Rajauliya } Ahar 2: Ahir 5:
 Rajauriya } Bhangi 21:
 Halwâi 2: Khatik 1:
 Sahariya 2.
 Rajâwat—Kachhwâha 2.
 Râjbansi—Ahir 10: Barai
 3: Bhoksa 4: Kanjar 5.
 Râjbatâr—Thâru 13.
 Râjbhar—Bhar, 1, 4.
 Râjbhât—Bhât 3.
 Rajghatiya—Mallâh 3:
 Sunâr 7.
 Râj Gond—Gond 2.
 *Râji—Thâru 12.
 Rajkanya—Tawâif 5.
 *Râjkumâr—Kanjar 5:
 Chamâr 3.
 Râjmistri—Râj.
 Râj Nat—Beriya 3: Nat 9.
 Râjpâsi—Boriya: Pâsi 3.
 Râjpuriya—Mâli 3.
 *Râjpût—Banjâra 12: Bâwa-riya 7: Beldâr 2: Bisâti:
 Chhipi 3: Dafâli 2:
 Darzi 2: Dhobi 2: Dhuniya 4: Gâra: Ghosi 1:
 Golapûrah 3: Jhojha 1:
 Joshi 4: Julâha 2: Ka-dhera: Kamboh 3: Kanjar
 5: Khâgi 2: Kunjra 2:
 Manihâr 2: Mochi 3: Nat
 8: Ramaiya 2: Tamboli 2.
 Rajwariya—Kol 4.
 Râjya—Kirâta—Râji 2.
 Rakhîha—Musahar 10.

Rakhpâsi—Boriya.
 Râki—'Irâqi 1.
 Râma—Bhil 1.
 Ramal—Ramaiya 2.
 *Ramaiya. {
 Râmanandi—Bairâgi 2:
 Chamâr 3: Manihâr 2.
 Ramâni—Kahâr 5.
 Ramânuja—Bairâgi 2.
 Râmjani—Kanjar 5: Tawâif
 1.
 Râmnagar } Bhangi 32:
 Râmnagari } Halwâi 2.
 Ramasiya—Mochi 3.
 Râmpura } Chaudh 2:
 Râmpuriya } Kumhâr 2:
 Nat 8.
 Ramsan } Gandharh 2.
 Ramsi }
 Ramtut—Sunâr 7.
 Râna—Ahir 10: Bhât 3:
 Kaphata 2: Thâru 13.
 Ranaiya—Jhijhotiya 2.
 Randi—Nat 8: Tawâif 1.
 Rângar } Dafâli 2.
 *Ranghar }
 Rangi—'Irâqi 3.
 Rangiya—Chamâr 3.
 Rangreta—Bhangî 25.
 *Rangrez—Meo 4.
 *Rângsâz—Kadhêra.
 Râniji kâ Tândan—Khatri 14.
 Rânipâri—Ramaiya 2.
 Rânki—'Irâqi 1: Kalwâr 4.
 Râo—Bais 7: Kanet.
 Râontra—Jâdon 2.
 Râra—Kanjar 3.
 Rârh—Kurmi 5.

Rārhi—Bangālī.

Rāsdhāri—Tawāif 1.

Rāsmel—Basor 1.

*Rastāogi } Sunār 6.
Rastāugi }

Rasūlpuriya—Halwāi 2.

Ratanjāt—Arakh 3.

Ratha—Patwa 3.

*Rāthaur—Banjāra 11, 12, 15:

Bāwariya 12: Bharbhūnja

1: Bhāt 2: Bhokta 4:

Chhīpi 3: Darzi 2: Dhu-

niya 4: Gadariya 2: Gaddi

2: Gāra: Hābūra 3: Kan-

jar 5: Kathak 3: Khāgi

2: Koiri 2: Nai 2: Nat 6,

8: Ramaiya 2: Tamboli 2:

Teli 3.

Rāthauriya—Gaur Rājput
2: Meo 4.

Rāthi—Bhangī 21: Gūjar 6:

Jāt 19: Mahesri 2.

Rattāvat—Meo 4.

Rattu—Beriya 3.

Ratūri—Gangāri.

*Rauniyār.

Rautār—Luniya 3: Thāru
12.

Rautel } Ahir 10: Barai
Rautela } 3: Gadariya
Rauteli }
2: Kol 4.

Rautiha } Baiswār 2: Ka-

Rautiya } hār 6: Khan-gār 3: Kol 4.

Rauwa—Bhāt 1.

*Rawā.

Rāwal—Gūjar 6.

Rawāni—Kahār 5: Kāndu.

Rāwat—Ahir 5: Bais 7: Bari

3: Beriya 3: Bhadauriya:

Bhānd: Bhangī 21: Bhāl

1: Bind 2: Chhīpi 3:

Dhānk 2: Dhuniya 4:

Ghandharb 2: Jāt 21: Ka-hār 6: Kathak 3: Kurmi

6: Lohār 4: Manihār 2:

Meo 4: Musahar 11: Rājī

4: Sahariya 1: Tamboli 2:

Thāru: 12, 13.

Regwa—Manihār 2.

Reli—Chhīpi 2.

Renrkūta—Bharbhūnja 1.

Rethi—Teli 3.

Rewar—Patwa 3

Richhatiya—Jhijhotiya 2.

Rikhbans—Jāt 19.

Rikhpuriya—Manihār 2.

Rishivans—Bhatiya 5.

Riswi—Sayyid 2.

Riwāri—Rahwāri.

Rohendi—Ahir 10.

Rohilla—Pathāu.

Rohingar—Gadariya 2.

*Rohtaki.

Rolapāl—Bhangī 21.

Ronida—Kahār 6.

Roniya—Rauniyār.

*Ror } Jhojha 1: Khatri
Rora } 13.

Rotiha—Kāchhi 2.

Ruhela—Chhīpi 3.

Rukmaiya—Baholiya 2.

Runiya—Dom 51.

Rupiya—Banarwār.

Ruriha—Dhānk 2.

Ruriya—Dom 42.

Rustamnagariya—Halwāi 2.

S

Sabhu—Mahesri 2.
 Sabrwâl—Khatrî 15.
 Sâbungar—Chûrikâr 2.
 Sabzwâri—Sayyid 2.
 Sabzfarosh }
 Sabzifarosh } Kunjra 1.
 Sachân—Kurmi 5.
 Sadar—Bhangî 32.
 Sâdât-l-Bârha—Sayyid 5.
 *Sadgop.
 *Sâdh—Chhipi 2.
 Sadiqi—Baidguâr; Bhind:
 Bhathiyâra 2; Bihishti
 1; Dafâli 2; Gandhi 1;
 Ghosi 1; Irâqi 3; Jhojha 1; Julâha 2; Nat
 8; Rangrez 1; Sayyid 1;
 Shaikh 2.
 Safed-bâf—Julâha 3.
 Sagahiya—Chamâr 3; Kha-
 tik 1.
 Sagar—Gadariya 2; Mani-
 hâr 2.
 Sâgara—Dasnâmi.
 Sagiya—Baheliya 2.
 Sagwâi—Ror 1.
 Sahani—Khatrî 15.
 Saharbadiya—Sunâr 7.
 *Sahariya.
 Sahasri—Bhatiya 6.
 Sahiya—Dom 41.
 Sahjâd—Majhwâr 3.
 Sahjan—Kurmi 6.
 Sahla—Gadariya 2.
 Sahmal—Gandharb 2.
 Sahrâwat—Jât 16.
 Sahrwârdiya—Madâri 1.
 Saigal—Khatrî 15.

Saljâd—Domar.
 Salliya—Gadariya 2.
 *Sâin—Kadhera.
 Saina—Basor 1.
 Sainbansl—Bais 7.
 Sainbhagat—Nâi 2.
 Saingala—Agarwâla 9.
 *Saini—Mâli 3.
 Sainikhor—Khâgi 2.
 Sainthwâr—Kurmi 5.
 Saigalgar—Lohâr 3.
 Saithwâr—Kurmi 5; Teli
 3.
 Sajhdari—Nânakpanthi 3.
 *Sâka.
 *Sakadwipi } Sakaldwipi }
 Sakarwâr—Ahir 10; Basor
 1; Bhât 2; Bhangî 20;
 Bhuinhar 11; Chamâr 4;
 Chhipi 3; Darzi 2;
 Dhobi 2; Jât 21; Kori
 2; Kurmi 6; Mochi 3;
 Nat 8; Sunâr 9.
 Sakatiya—Koiri 2.
 Sakauriya—Kachhi 2.
 *Saknyâni.
 Sakoriya—Kathiyâra 1.
 Saksena—Bharbhûnja 9.
 Gaddi 2; Halwâi 2; Joshi 4; Kâchhi 2; Kadhera; Kanjar 5; Kây-asth 9; Kisân 1; Koiri
 2; Lodha 2; Mochi 3;
 Murâo 3.
 Sakt. }
 Sâkta } Chamâr 3; Kâchhi
 2; Kahâr 6; Murâo 3.

Salām—Majhwār 3
 Salim-shâhī—Bhatluyāra 2
 Saliyālī—Gandlār 2
 Saloriya—Kāchhu 2
 Solotari—Na'llanī 2
 Samaiya—Dom 25
 Samāna—Kurmi 6
 Samand—Dom 7
 Samangot—Basor 1
 Samanya—Jangam 2
 Samariha—Rauniyar
 Samariha—Ahr 6
 Samel—Bohra 1
 Samhār—Sānsiya 2
 Samri—Māhī 3 Rauniyar
 Samsol—Kurmi 6
 Samudra—Bānsphor 2
 Samudraphen—Kajariya 2
 Sana—Chāubē 2 'Itāqī 2
 *Sanādī—Belwār Tagī 6
 Sanādhiya—Gaur
 Sanaulīya—Sahariya 2
 *Sanaurhiya—Kahīr 6 Lodha 2 Sahariya 2 Sanādī 9
 Sanāwar—Manikar 2
 Sanbhariya—Banarwār
 Rauniyar
 Sandhanī—Mahesri 2
 Sandhara—Saiqalgar
 Sandhauwa—Kurmi 5
 Sandil } Barai 3 Bhat 2
 Sandilya } Bhuinbār 11
 Kanaupya.
 Sanganeri—Chhāpi
 Sangat Sāhib—Udāsī 2
 Sangeriyān—Jāt 21
 Sanghār—Sengar 1
 Sangotiya—Khangār 3
 Sānī—Bāghbān Sāin Seywari 1

Sānīn—Sāin
 *Sanjogi
 Sankarpuriya—Chūnkār 2
 Sankat }
 Sinkata } Kanjar 3 Kurmi
 Sankatua } 5 Luniya 3
 Sinkhwār—Kori 2 Kurmi 6
 Lolha 2
 Sinkla—Kambeli 4
 Sankrita—Kanaupya
 *Sannyāsī—Atī
 Sanpaneriya—Nat 11
 Sānpwīla—Nat 4
 Sanrat—Bhatiya 5
 *Sānsiya—Kālhera Kanjar
 1.
 Santi—Kahwār 1
 Santāl—Kharwar 1
 Santoriya—Ahr 6
 Sanwāla—Saiqalgar
 Sanwan—Agariya 3
 Sanwariya—Khatik 1
 Sinwat—Nat 7.
 Sapahar—Bhāt 3
 Sapera—Kanjar 5 Nat
 6, 18
 Saptasati—Bangāh
 Saqqa—Bihushtī 1
 Sarai—Nat 32
 Sarāmat—Jāt 21
 Saranpuriya—Kathak 3
 Sarāogi—Banya 1 Mārwarī
 6
 Saraswār—Gadariya 2
 Saraswata—Bhāt 2
 Saraswatī—Dasnamī Kadhara
 Sarāwat—Jāt 19
 *Sarbhanga
 Sardiha—Bānsphor 2

Shaikhâwat—Bhangi 21.
 Shaikh Haidar—Gîra.
 Shaikhपुरिया—Chûrîhâr 2
 Shaikhra—Bhangi 27.
 Shaknyâni—Saknyâni
 Shekh—Shaukh
 Shenavi—Saraswata 0
 Shiah—Dhuniya 1
 Shikchi—Maheeri 2
 Shirâzi—Bhathiyâra 2. Mochi 3
 Shirshâhi—Bhathiyâra 2
 Shukl—Bhuinîhâr 11
 Shuklbans—Harai 3
 Siddh—Gaur 3
 Sihor—Kalwâr 4
 Sihoriya—Gujarâti Brâhman
 7
 Sikandarpuriya—Chûrîhâr 2
 Sunâr 9
 Sikarwâl—Bargûjar 6
 Sikarwâr—Patwa 3
 Sikatपुरिया—Bhât 3
 Sikhariya—Sejwari 1
 Sikhrî—Gandhu 1
 Sikligar—Saqalgar
 Sikrauriya—Joshu 4
 Silauta—Joshu 1
 Silwâl—Joshu 8
 Simariya } Ghasiya 2
 Simarloka }
 Simli Chauhan—Banjâra 12
 Simmal—Kurmi 6
 Simwâl—Gangâri
 Sindrâm—Majhwâr 3
 Sindurâha—Chero 6
 Singal—Meo 4
 Singha—Bhangi 28
 Singhâl—Agarwâl 1
 Singhaniya—Marwâri 6

Singhariya—Kâhâr 5
 Singiwâla—Bangi's Kanjar
 3
 Singraul } Kurmi 5, 6
 Singraur }
 Singrauriya—Kachhi 2
 Sinha—Rama'ya 2
 Sinh Tarora—Sunâr 7.
 Sinmar—Jât 19
 Sinsiniwâl } Jadon: Jât 21
 Sinsiniwâr }
 Siphmatua—Rama'ya 2
 Siqligar—Saqalgar
 Siqtuya—Maulin 1
 Siransiya—Sahanya 2
 Siryâr—Blângi 30
 Sirkiband—Kurmi 4
 Sirkiwâla—Kanjar 3
 Sirmaur—Kajanya 2
 *Sirmot.
 Sirohiwâl—Bhât 1
 Sirsa—Jhujhotiya 2
 Sirawâl—Bhangi 30 Chv-mar 3
 Sirso—Majhwâr 3
 Sisariya—Ahir 10
 Sisgar—Manîhâr 2
 Sisl—Bhuinîhâr 2
 Sisodiya—Gahlot 1
 Sital—Gandharî 2
 Sitalपुरिया—Chûrîhâr 2.
 Sitoliya—Ahir 5
 Subaranpota—Kachhwâla
 2
 Sudâs—Chamâr 3
 Sunârâyani—Chamâr 18
 Supuriya—Halwâl 2
 Surâjपुरिया—Halwâl 2
 Sunâr 9
 Siyâhmaliya—Dohar 4
 Siyarê—Ahir 10

Siyârmâr—Ahar 2.
 Sobraniyân—Bhuinhâr 11.
 Soda—Bhangî 21 : Kanjar 3.
 Sodhi—Khatri 13.
 *Soeri—Kadhara.
 Sohâgpurîha—Baiswâr 2.
 Sohâm—Gond 3.
 Sohar—Ahîr 10.
 Soharê—Kalwâr 4.
 Soharki—Bawariya 6.
 Soima—Majhwâr 3.
 Soiri—Soeri.
 Soiâm—Majhwâr 3.
 Sokhwa—Barai 4.
 *Solankhi } Bawariya 7.
 Solanki }
 Darzi 2 : Hâbûra 3.
 Solasinghi—Chûrihâr 2.
 Somal—Gandharb 2.
 Somalti—Gangâri.
 Somânî—Mahesri 2.
 *Sombansi—Boriya : Kasera
 2 : Kewat 2 : Khâgi 2.
 Son—Kanjar 3.
 Sonach—Basor 1.
 Sonakiya—Jhijhotiyâ 2.
 Sonâr—Sunar.
 Sondeli Misra—Jhijhotiyâ 2
 Sondi—Barhai 2.
 Sonhar—Mallâh 3.
 Soni—Mahesri 2.
 Sonmukhiya—Banarwâr.
 Sonra—Kanjar 3.
 Sonwan—Agrahari Ghasiya
 2.
 Sonwar—Bhuinhâr 11.
 *Sorahiya—Chamâr 3 : Kabâr
 6 : Kewat 2 : Mallâh 3.
 Sorhaniya—Bhuinhâr 11.
 Sosaniya—Barhai 2.

Sôthiyân—Banarwâr.
 Soti—Chaubê 2 : Jhijhotiyâ
 2 : Maithila 2.
 Sowâti—Khatri 15.
 Sravanriya—Gangaputra 3 :
 Sunâr 7.
 Sri—Gaur.
 Sribâstab } Baheliya 2 :
 Sribâstam } Barai 3 :
 Sribâstav } Bharbhânja
 Sribâtham } 1 : Chhipî 3 :
 Srivâstavya } Chûrihâr 2 :
 Dabgar 1 : Darzi 2 : Dhâl-gar : Dhângar : Dhobi 2 : Halwâi 2 : Joshi 4 : Kan-jar 1 : Kâyasth 7 : Kewat
 2 : Lohâr 4 : Mallâh 2 :
 Mochi 3 : Nâi 2 : Nat 8 :
 Tamboli 2 : Teli 3.
 Srinârâyani—Chamâr 18.
 Sripat—Dabgar 1.
 Sri Vaishnava—Bairâgi 3.
 Sriwâr—Teli 3.
 Srotiya—Maithila 2.
 Suador—Dom 7.
 Suariha } Kumbhâr 2.
 Suariya }
 Subbhn—Gurchha 2.
 *Sûd.
 Sudarvans—Bhatiya 2.
 Sudhara—Mahesri 2.
 Suganâik—Nat 11.
 Sugawabair } Sunâr 7.
 Sugawahair }
 Suhaniya—Thâru 12.
 Suidaha—Bhuiyâr 2.
 Suiri—Soeri.
 Sûji—Chamâr 3 : Dom 43.
 Sukl—Gaur 2.
 Suklpuriya—Chûrihâr 2.

Suklwāla—Gaur
 Sulaimāni—Bhatthiyāra 2:
 Nāi 2 · Shaikh 2
 Sulankhi—Kadhera
 Sultānaut—Kachhwāha 2
 Sultānpuriya—Meo 4
 Sumer—Majhwār 3
 *Sunnār.
 Sunarha—Halwāi 2
 Sunāri—Joshī 1
 Sunāwar—Chhīpi 2
 Sundar—Bari 3
 Sundi—Bohra 4
 Sungha—Kalwār 4 Sunār 9
 *Sunkar.
 Sunkhar—Khatik 1
 Sunni—Dafāli 2 · Dhuniya
 4 · Julāha 2
 Sūnri—Kalwār 4
 Sunwān } Ghasiya 2 Kori
 Sunwāni } 2 · Kurmi 2
 Sūpabhagat—Bhangī 21
 Domar
 Supach—Dom 1
 Sūpwāla—Kanjai 3
 Surab—Māhi 3

Surahiya—Mallāh 3 · Sora-
 hiya
 Suraltwāl—Khatrī 14.
 *Sūrajbans } Baheliya 2.
 Sūrajbansi } Chero 6:
 Chhīpi 2: Darzi 2 · Hal-wāi 2 · Kamboh 3 · Kanjar
 5: Kathak 3: Kharwār 2:
 Koiri 2: Soeri 6
 Sūrajpuriya—Chūribār 2
 Suraya—Sorahiya
 Suri—Khatrī 15
 Surin—Khatrī 13.
 Surohan—Bhuinhār 11
 Sūradhwaja—Kāyasth 14
 Sutaha—Sunār 7.
 *Suthra-shāhi—Nanakpantlu
 4
 Suvarna—Barwār 2
 Suyador—Balāhar 1
 *Swāmi Sādhn—Dadupantli?
 2
 Swāng—Barwār 2
 Syāmi—Bohra 4
 Syāmkrishna—Sunai 9
 Syāmpuriya—Halwāi 2

T

Tabāri—Bhoksa 4
 Tachariya—Kāndu
 Tafuriya—Madāri 1
 *Taga—Darzi 2.
 Tageli—Bhadauriya
 Tahakhiya—Sunār 7
 Tahala } Barwār 2 Hābūra
 Tahla } 3
 Tahelē—Dhānnik 2

Tairan—Agarwāla 1.
 Tatariya—Agarwāla 1.
 Tajik—Mughul 3
 Tājpurīya—Chūnbār 2:
 Halwāi 2
 Takka—Tānk 1.
 Talām—Barwār 2
 *Tambākūgar.
 Tambakūwāla—Kunjar 2.

*Tamboli—Barai 1: Dom
41: Julāha 2: Kadhera.
Tamkhera—Tambākūgar.
Tamoli—Tamboli.
Tamota—Dom 42: Kasera
2.
Tamta—Dom 41: Kasera 2.
Tanbara—Manihār 2.
Tanbina—Khatik 1.
Tanbuna—Chamār 3.
Tanchara—Agrabari 2: Dar-zi 2: Kandu: Kasera 2.
Tandan—Khatri 13, 14.
Tandar—Banjara 12.
Tandeya—Agarwāla 1.
Tanganol—Tānk 1.
Tānk—Barhai 2: Bhangī 20,
21: Chhīpi 2: Darzi 2:
Dhāngar 1: Gaddi 2:
Kalwār 4: Kasera 2:
Sunār 6.
Tankiya—Sunār 7.
Tanraha—Murāo 2.
Tānti—Panka 1: Patwa 3:
Sunār 7.
Tantua—Chamār 4.
Tapariya—Mahesri 2.
Taqwi—Sayyid 2.
Tarakiya—Bhand.
Tarela—Patwa 3.
Tārēmūk—Lohār 3.
Tarīn—Pathān 24.
Tarīn Pathān—Banjāra 12.
*Tarkihār—Chūrihār 2.
Tarkiharya—Bhaugī 21.
Tarkiya—Dom 7.
Tarboiyi—Barhāt 2.
Tarmala—Kurmi 6.
*Tarmāli—Pāsi 8.
Tarwariya—Lodha 2.

Tasalha—Gadariya 2.
Tasiha—Bānsphor 2.
Tasmabāz—Nat 50.
Tauhar—Banjāra 12.
Tayal—Agarwāla 1.
*Tawāif—Beriya 3: Nat 8.
Tekbara—Gaur.
Tekma—Majhwār 3.
*Teli—Banjāra 12: Bangālī 2:
Beriya 3: Dom 41: Gaddi
2: Julāha 2: Nat 8.
Teliya—Bharbhūnja 1:
Sunār 7.
Teliyabans—Bharbhūnja 1.
Tenduhāra—Tamboli 2.
Tengariya—Ahir 5.
Tenkalai—Bairāgi 3.
Teraha—Sunār 7.
Terah—Hazār—Chero 6.
Teshan—Bhangī 32.
Thadu—Dhālgar.
Thagwariya—Banarwār.
Thail—Domar.
Thākur—Beldār 2: Beriya
3: Golapūrah 3: Kanjar 5:
Rājput 1: Sunār 7.
Tamboli 2.
Thakurāhān—Kathak 3.
Thākur Bais—Bhangī 20.
Thakurel—Jāt 22.
Thakuriya—Barwār 2:
Kāchhi 2: Kol 4: Kurmi 5:
Murāo 2.
Thāna—Sunār 7.
Thapalyāl—Gangāri.
Thapri—Kamboh 3.
Thār—Thāru 12.
Tharepāra—Kahār 5.
Tharjogi—Thāru 12.

Tharkari—Domar
 Tharkomahra—Tharu 10
 *Tharu
 *Thathera—Kāndu Kāsera
 5 Thaval—Raj
 Thegotiya—Salaniya 2
 Thengar—Gadaniya 2
 Thenwān—Jāt 22
 Thenwar—Jāt 21
 Thingal—Agarwala 1
 Thohiya—Mahi 3
 Thotyal—Gond 2
 Tiar—Tiyar
 Tibaiya—Chaub 2
 Tiga—Dhāngar 2
 Tihanpurī—Sayyid 6
 Tihara—Halwāi 2
 Tikaitganji—Halwāi 2
 Tikhām—Majwār 3
 Tikuhiya—Kumhar 2
 Tillam—Barwār 2
 Tilbhunja—Halwāi 2
 Tilbhunjua—Bharbhūnja 1
 Tilbhurjiya—Tel 3
 Tilgarh—Kamāngar
 Tilokbans—Hijra 2
 Tilokchandi—Bais 1
 Tilokchandi Bais—Nāg
 bansi
 Tilokpuriya—Halwāi 2
 Tilsari—Bais 7
 Tilummar—Ummar 1
 Tingal—Agarwāla 1
 Tingar—Chamār 3
 Tiratha—Dasnam
 Tirgar—Kamāngar
 Tirhūtiya—Dasādhi 5
 Tirik } Dhāngar 2
 Tirkī }
 Tirmizi—Sayyid 2

Tirsuliya—Pasi 6
 Tirua—Dom 44
 Tirvāh—Bhuiya 4
 Titar—Banjara 12
 Titiha—Bhuihar 11
 Tittal—Agarwala 1
 Tivāri—Bhuihar 11 Chau
 lā 2 Jhujhoiya 2
 *Tiyar—Bhar 5 Kewat 2
 Mallāh 3
 Todarmali—Chunhār 2
 Tolakliya—Gujarati Brāhman 7
 *Tomar—Baidgūar Banjara
 12 Bhishti 1 Chhijī
 3 Darzi 2 Gaddi 2
 Ghosi 1 Gōjar 6 Jat 20.
 Julaha 2 Kadhera Kahr
 6 Khagi 2 Khatik 1
 Meo 1 Mochi 3 Nat 8
 Tomra—Kathak 3
 Topiwāl—Bawariya 7
 Tori—Banjara 12
 Torikoriya—Koiri 2
 Tosaniwal—Mahesri 2
 Totala—Mahesri 2
 Tuar—Joshī 1
 Tulasī—Ahir 10
 Tumariya—Lohār 1
 Tumariwāl Madārī—Nat
 37.
 Tundal—Agarwāla 1
 Tunwar—Banjara 11
 Bawariya 6 Bhokas 4
 Tomar
 *Turk—Ghosi 1 Mughal 3
 Tamboli 2
 Turah—Kahār 5
 Turāi—Bawariya 7 Tabār 5
 Turaiha—Bhangī 21 Mal
 Kh 3

V

Vadakalai—Bairāgi 3.	Vasishtha—Agarwāl 1 :
Vaidik—Bangālī.	Bhuihār 11 : Taga 6
Vaikarta—Qasīb.	Vastradhārī—Dīdupanthī 2.
*Vallabhāchārya—Bairāgi 2.	Vatsya—Bhuihār 11.
Vālmiki—Kāyasth 12.	Vij—Khatri 15.
Vana—Dasnāmi.	Virakta—Dīdupanthī 2.
Vaneli—Gadariya 2.	Vira Saiva—Jangam 3.
Vasala—Agarwāla 1.	Vishnuswāmī—Bairāgi 2.
	Visvakarma—Lohār 4.

W

Waika—Majhwār 3.	Walariya—Majhwār 3.
Waziri—Pathān 20

Y

Yār Muhammad—Gāra	Yunglot—Meo 1.
Yuchi—Gūjar 1.	Yūsufzāl—Nat 8 : Pathān 27.

Z

Zadiya—Madārī 1.	Zāldī—Sayyid 2.
Zangl—Irāqī 3.

SUBJECT INDEX.¹

A

Adhajatiya rite—Kâchhi 8.

Adoption,—Aheriya 7: Ahîr

17: Audhiya 6: Bhuiya 9;

12: Bhuiyâr 9: Biyâr 6:

Chamâr 10: Dusâdh 10:

Ghasiya 8: 'Irâqi 5: Jât

23: Kharwâr 8: Kol 8:

Majhwâr 33: Thârû 24.

After birth, disposal of—,

Majhwâr 35.

Aghornâth, worship of—,

Lohâr 11: Mâli 4.

Agarsen } legend of—, Agar-

Agrasen } wâlâ 1.

Agricultural beliefs and rites,—Golapûrab 16: Kol

23: Korwa 12: Majhwâr

56.

Agwân Deva, worship of—,

Bhar 6; 9: Luniya 5:

Pâsi 12.

Ahay Pâl, worship of—,

Sahariya 7.

Ahîr, worship of—, Musahar

23.

Ahorbahor rite,—Tamboli 3.

Airi, worship of—, Dom 51.

'Alî, worship of—, Gandhi 2.

Amar Sinh, worship of—,

Goriya: Sorahiya.

Ambika, worship of—, Su-

nâr 16.

Amina Devi, worship of—,

Biyâr 16: Dharkâr 6: see Panchpîr.

Amma, worship of—, Soeri

9.

Amulets,—Aheriya 6: Kol 21.

Ancestor worship,—Agariya

18: Audhiya 9: Baiswât 4:

Bânsphor 7: Basor 7: Bhan-

gi 57: Bhuiya 26: Bhuiyâr

14: Biyâr 15: Chamâr 17:

Chero 15: Chûribâr 4:

Dhângar 14: Dhânuk 6:

Dharkâr 6; 8: Gandhi 2:

Ghasiya 17: Jât 31: Kan-jar 15: Khangâr 6: Khar-wâr 14: Kol 16: Korwa

12: Luniya 5: Majhwâr

33: Nat 23: Parahiya 13:

Râji 8: Sânsiya 6: Taga

8.

Angârmati Bhawâni, worship of—, Dharkâr 9.

Annaprâsana, rite of—, Bar-

anwâl 2: Brâhman 20:

Gujarâti Brâhman 18.

Anointing rite,—Aheriya 3:

Ahîr 20: Bhar 6: Nat 23.

Anthropometry,—Introduction, Chapter II.

Aonla tree, sacred—, Aheriya

13.

Arlhat, worship of—, Oawāl 5.
 Articles for the use of the dead,—Iraji 10.
 Atan, worship of—, Kianlehwāl 4.

Athlā, worship of—, Kalwār
 11 : see Hathila, Panchpir.
 Athmāsa } rite,—Baranwāl
 Athwānsa } 2 : Halwāl 4.

B

Bāba Ibrahim, worship of —, Thawai.
 Bāba Nahuk, worship of—,
 Gautam 3.
 Bāba Sabharām, worship of —, Gōjar 11.
 Bābhan, worship of—, Kian-
 tik 7.
 Bābi Pir, worship of—,
 Kurmi 12.
 Baburi, worship of—, Kian-
 delwāl 4.
 Bachelors, — Introduction,
 VI., 14.
 Bachelor's hall,—Dhāngar 6 :
 Dom 45. :
 Bachhrāj Kunwar, worship
 of—, Majhwār 42.
 Badhan, worship of—, Dom
 51.
 Baghaut, worship of—,
 Bhuiya 25 : Kol 15 : Mu-
 sahar 20.
 Bāgheswari, worship of—
 Majhwār 6.
 Bāghnāth, worship of—
 Rāji 4.
 Bāhak Rishi, legend of—,
 Bāwariya 9.

Bahlrwār, worship of—,
 Pāsi 11.
 Bahura feast—, Harwār 9.
 Baiga, the—, Agariya 19 :
 Korwa 12.
 Balsākhī feast,—Agariya 20.
 Baitsī, a demon,—Rāji 13.
 Bātajī, worship of—, Banjān 5.
 Bālasundari, worship of—,
 Kanphata 5.
 Balchan, worship of—, Dom
 51.
 Bal Rāja, worship of—,
 Bhar 3.
 Bamat, worship of—,
 Khatik 7.
 Bamboo, worship of—,
 Dharkār 1, 11 : unlucky,—
 Bhangī 61.
 Bandē } worship of—, Du-Bandi } sādī 14 : Goriya :
 Kānda 5 : Kasera 4 : Pāsi
 14 : Soeri 9.
 Bangara } worship of—,
 Bangarām } Ahir 25.
 Bangle-making—Chūrihār 5.
 Banhiya Bīr, worship of—,
 Dharkār 9.

Banjāri, worship of—, Kalwār 11.
 Banru Bir, worship of—, Bhar 7: Chamār 17.
 Bansari, worship of—, Thāru 29.
 Banspati } worship of—,
 Bansapti } Bhar 10: Kol 19: Musahar 29.
 Baradeo, worship of—, Gond 10: Kol 17: Majhwār 39.
 Barahi rite,—Agarwāla 1: Bānsphor 5.
 Barahī phirāna rite,—Agarwāla 6.
 Barai, worship of—, Aheriya 11.
 Baram Gusāin, worship of—, Bhangi 60.
 Barē Pir, worship of—, Bhāt 8: Chūrikār 1.
 Barē Purukh, worship of—, Kalwār 11.
 Bariyār Sāh, worship of—, Majhwār 43.
 Barka Itwār feast,—Barwār 9.
 Barkē Bāba, worship of—, Musahar 21.
 Barna Bhawāni, worship of—, Dhāngar 12.
 Barun, worship of—, Mallāh 7.
 Barwaniya pūja,—Goriya
 Barwat, a demon,—Majhwār 40.
 Basandhar chhūna rite,—Bishnoi 11.

Bāwan Ganga, legend of—, Dusādh 2.
 Beena marriage,—Bhuiyār 10: Chero 5: Ghariya 9: Gond 5: Introduction VI., 27: Klarwār 9: Majhwār 12: Parahiya 6.
 Behiya, worship of—, Musahar 5.
 Ber tree, unlucky—, Bhangi 61.
 Betel, cultivation of—, Barai 7: Tamboli 5.
 Betrothal,—Kol 13.
 Bhāgawati, worship of—, Barwār 8: Kāndu 5: Kewat 1: Mallāh 7: Nāi 4: Tarkikār 3: Thatkera 6.
 Bhagwān, worship of—, Ahwāsi 6. Banjāra 19: Sinsiya 6.
 Bhainsāsūr, worship of—, Ghariya 2.
 Bhairava } worship of Bhairon } —, Kalhār
 Bhaironnāth } 11: Kanphata 6: *Musahar 30: Nāi 4: Nat 47: Pāsi 14: Patwa 6: Tawāif 5: Thāru 23.
 Bhairwanand, worship of—, Raikwār 1.
 Bhatwān, rite—Baheliya 6.
 Bhausi, worship of—, Dom 51.
 Bhawāni, worship of—, Baiswār 1: Barai 6: Barwariya 8: Bhāt 8: Chamār 17: Darzi 3: Dom

- 31: Gond 9: 'Irāqi 11:
 Kanjar 14: Khatik 7:
 Kumbhār 5: Sahariya 7:
 Tharu 35.
 Bheliya, worship of—,
 Dom 51.
 Bhitari } worship of—,
 Bhitari } Bāri 6: Tamboli
 4.
 Bholanāth, worship of—,
 Dom 51: Tawāif 5.
 Bhopa, a witch finder,—
 Bhi 7.
 Bhuiyān, worship of—,
 Kanjar 14.
 Bhūmiya, worship of—,
 Dāngi 11: Golapūrah 12:
 Kāchhi 8: Pāsi 13: Ramaiya 7.
 Bhūmsen, worship of—,
 Pāsi 14.
 Bibi Fātima, worship of—,
 Luniya 5.
 Bibiha Deva } worship of—,
 Bibiha Devi } Bāri 6: Barhai
 4.
 Bidur Bhagat, legend of—,
 Luniya 2.
 Bihāi rite—, Kanjar 11.
 Bihāi mātā, worship of—,
 Lohār 6.
 Bihi, worship of—, Lohār 4.
 Birahi, worship of—,
 Kāchhi 8.
 Bird catching,—Baheliya 19.
 Birmha Deva, worship of—,
 Kol 3.
 Birnāth, worship of—, Abār
 25.
- Birth ceremonies, passim.
 Birth fiends,—Kol 12.
 Birtihā } worship of—,
 Birtiya } Abār 23: Bāri 6:
 Bhār 7: Bhāt 8: Chamār
 17: Dharkār 9: Kahār 11:
 Khatik 7: Mallāh 7.
 Bisarl, worship of—,
 Kāchhi 8.
 Blacksmiths, wandering—,
 Lohār 3.
 Blood-covenant—, Dharkār
 7: Kol 13.
 Blood, dread of—, Bhāngi
 54: Bhuiyār 6.
 Boat, worship of—, Kewat
 4.
 Boundaries, god of—,
 Ghasiya 18.
 Boys dressing as women,—
 Khatik 5.
 Brahm, worship of—,
 Khatik 7: Majhwār 47.
 Brahma Deota, worship of—, Kalwār 11.
 Brahman Deva, worship of—, Khatik 7.
 Brahm Gusāin } worship
 Brahma Gusāin } of—,
 Kāchhi 8: Tamboli 4.
 Bride, purchase of—, Agariya 7: Basor 3: Bānsphor
 4: Bhuiya 6: Chamār 7:
 Chero 8: Dhāngar 6:
 Dharkār 3: Dom 25:
 Hābūra 4: Introduction
 VI., 28: Kapariya 5:
 Kharwār 5: Khatik 2:
 Kol 13: Korwa 5:

Maitlûla 3: Majhwâr 15,
24: Nat 22: Thârû 16.
Bride-price, refund of—,
Kol 7.
Buddhi Prasâdi, worship of—, Bhangi 60.
Bûrha Bâba, worship of—,
Aheriya 11.

Bûrha Deo, worship of—,
Majhwâr 6.
Bûrhi mâi } worship of—,
Bûrhi mâta } Nat 43, 47.
Burial rites,—passim.
Burial, position in—, Majh-wâr 37: rules of—, Nat
17.

C

Camel-breeding,—Rahwâri.
Cane work,—Dom 30.
Caste, origin of—, Introduction Chapter I.
Châmar } worship
Châmara } of—,
Chamar Devi } Aheriya
11: Chamâr 17: Chhîpi 5:
Dhuniya 2: Gadariya 8
Gûjar 11: Kâchlu 8.
Chamar chathiya, feast of—, Agarwâla 5.
Chamariya, worship of—,
Kumbâr 5.
Chain worship,—Banarwâr:
Gond 10: Majhwâr 47.
Châmunda Devl, worship of—, Golapûrab 12: Jât
31: Kahâr 13.
Chanda Kartâl, worship of—, Bharbhûnja 3.
Chândika, worship of—,
Thârû 32.
Chand Sinh, worship of—,
Goriya.

Charan ka pâhul rite—,
Nânakpantlu 3.
Chaumu, worship of—,
Dom 51.
Chausathi } worship of—,
Chausati } Kându 5:
Kalwâr 11.
Chawan, worship of—,
Khandelwâl 4.
Chhal, worship of—, Râji
10.
Chhamâsa rite,—Audhiya 5.
Chhath
Chhath Bâba } worship of—, Dusâdh 14, 16:
Ghasiya 13.
Chhathi rite,—Majhwâr 85.
Chhurmal, worship of—
Dom 51.
Children, deities of—,
Lodha 6.
Chithariya Bîr, worship of
—, Kol 18.
Chitragupta, legend of—,
Kâyasth 4.

Cholera, exorcism of—,
Korwa 12.

Circumcision,—Jirāqi 3.

Cities, tribal names derived from—, Introduction IV., 2.

Cohabitation restricted,—
Bhar 7: Bhuiyār 12.

Communal marriage,—Beriya 3: Dom 46: Introduction VI., 1: Thāru 15:
Tiyar.

Confarreatio rite—Agariya
3: Aheriya 3: Ahir 22:
Baiswār 3: Introduction
VI., 30: Kanjar 10:
Kol 14: Majhwār 10, 22:
Mallāh 4: Musahar 18:
Sahariya 3.

Consummation immediate, of marriage—,
Ahir 21: Bānsphor 6:
Dharkār 7: Kanjar 10:
Kol 14: also see Kohabar.

Contemptuous tribal titles—,
Introduction IV., 11.

Cook-house, respect for—,
Majhwār 39.

Corpse, articles left with—,
Majhwār 37: watching of—, Kharwār 13.

Cotton tree, sacred—, Dharkār 6: Dom 29: Thāru 29.

Council, tribal—, Agariya 4:

Aheriya 3: Ahir 14: Ahiwāsi 3: Audhiya 3: Baheliya 3: Baiswār 2: Bānsphor 3: Bhangi 32: Bhar
5: Bhuiya 5: Bhuiyār 5:
Bind 3: Biyār 2: Chamār
6: Dāngi 3: Dhāngar 5:
Dharkār 2: Dom 24: Du-ādāh 5: Ghasiya 3:
Jāt 25: Kāchhi 3: Kahr
7: Kalwār 6: Kapariya 4:
Kharwār 4: Koiri 3: Kol
5: Korwa 4: Majhwār 9:
Nat 12.

Couvade,—Agariya 15:
Baheliya 5: Chamār 9:
Majhwār 36.

Cow, respect for—, Ginda-uriya: Golapūrah 12:
Jāt 31.

Cremation ground, worship of—, Mallāh 7.

Crime, methods of—, Ah-eriya 15: Audhiya 12:
Badhak 2, 3: Banjāra 9,
20: Barwār 13, 15: Bāwa-riya 12: Beriya 7: Biloeh
4: Dalera 4: Dōm 9: Gājar 12: Hābūra 12: Kapariya 11: Khangār 8:
Qalandar 4: Sahariya 3:
Sanaurhiya: Sānsiya 9.

Crows, eating food by—,
Bānsphor 9.

D

Dahya cultivation,—Bhuiyār
22: Majhwār 6, 4: Rāji 14.

Daitya, worship of— Musa-
har 28.

Dal, an Ahir hero—, Ahir 3.
 Dance, of males disguised as women,—Chamâr 12 :
 tribal—, Kharwâr 17 :
 Majhwâr 44 : Thâru 45.
 Dang Diwâli, feast,—Ahir 26.
 Danteswari, worship of—,
 Ahir 25.
 Darya Khân, legend of—,
 Meo 1.
 Dashtaur, rite,—Aheriya 6.
 Dâud, the Saint, Saiqalgar 1.
 Dâûji, worship of—, Alûwâsi
 6 : Hâbûra 8 : Jât 31.
 Dayâl Sinh, worship of—,
 Goriya.
 Death rites, passim.
 Demoniacal possession,—
 Bhar 10.
 Demonology,—Chamâr 24 :
 Dhângar 14 : Dom 33 :
 Golapûrab 14 : Kâchhi 8 :
 Kanjâr 17.
 Deohâr worship,—Dom 34 :
 Majhwâr 39 : Thâru 34 : see Dih.
 Deonâth, worship of—,
 Dharkâr 9.
 Deota, worship of—, Kanjar
 15.
 Depilation—Kol 2.
 Devi, worship of—, Aheriya
 11 : Ahir 23 : Audhiya 10.
 Baiswâr 5 : Bâjgi 7 : Bâns-phor 8 : Barkai 4 : Barwâr
 8 : Beriya, 6 : Bharbhûnja 3 :
 Bhât 8, Bhûl 14 : Bhot 5 :
 Chamâr 17 : Chero 13 :
 Chûpi 5 : Dhânuk 7 : Dhar-kâr 9 : Dhuniya 2 : Gindatriya : Gurchha 5 : Hâbûra

 10 : Khairwa 6 : Khatik 7 :
 Kisân 3 : Kumhâr 5 : Kurmi
 12 : Lodha 5 : Mâli 4 : Orh
 3 : Râdha 1 : Rabwâri 3 :
 Râji 0 : Ramaiya 7 : Sunkar
 2 : Tawâif 5.

Dhamin Deva, worship of—,
 Kanjâr 15.

Dhappu Dhâm, legend of—,
 Janghâra 1.

Dharchandi—worship of—,
 Thâru 33.

Dharm Sinh, worship of—,
 Jât 31.

Dharti mâta, worship of—,
 Bhuiya 21 : Bhuiyâr 16 :
 Biyâr 16 : Dusâdh 17 :
 Kharwâr 15 : Koiri 4 :
 Panka 15 : Parahiya 14 :
 and see Earth worship.

Dhyân Dâs, worship of—,
 Patwa 6.

Digging spud,—Korwa 14.

Dih, worship of—, Bargâh, 3,
 Bhuiya 21 : Chero 13 :
 Kharwâr 15 : Kol 17 :
 Korwa 12 : Kumhâr 5 :
 Majhwâr 39 : Mâl 2 : Mallâh
 7 : Musahar 28 : Parahiya
 14.

Diksha, rite,—Dikshît Brâh-
 man.

Disease, exorcism of—,
 Beriya 7 : demoniacal theory of—, Kharwâr 18.

Divorce—Agariya 9 : Baheliya
 4 : Baiswâr 2 : Bhangî 52 :
 Bhuiya 7 : Bhuiyâr 7 : Biyâr
 4 : Chero 8 : Dângi 4 :

Dhángar 6 : 'Irâqi 3 : Kharwâr 6 : Khatik 2 : Kol 7 : Korwa 6 : Majhwâr 25 : Musahar 13 : Panka 4.
 Dolarohana rite,—Brâhman 18.
 Dowry, marriage with,—Introduction VI., 29.
 Dreams—Kol 20 : Majhwâr 48, 54.
 Drum, worship of,—Chamâr 14 : Kanjar 20 : Kharwâr 17.

Dula Deo } worship of—Dulha Deo }
 Barhai 4 : Bâwariya 11 :
 Dharkâr 9 : Ghâsiya 12, 13 :
 Gond 10 : Kharwâr 15 : Kol 19 : Kumhâr 5 : Majhwâr 21 : Musahar 28.
 Durâsin, worship of,—Dharkâr 9.
 Durga, worship of,—Bâmmargi 2 : Kâchhi 8 : Kamkar 3 : Kapariya 9 : Kasern 4 : Lohâr 8 : Nat 18 : Patwa 6.

E

Earboring rite,—Baranwâl 2 : Bhar 7 : Dharkâr 5 : Ghâsiya 13 : Parahiya 10.
 Earth-worship,—Bhuiya 21 : Thâru 33 : see Dharti Mâi.
 Eclipse demon,—Dom 15.
 Eldest son, rights of,—Kol 10.
 Eponymous tribal titles,—Introduction IV., 5.
 Euphemism,—Kharwâr 17 : Kol 22.
 Evil Eye,—Baiswâr 6 : Beriya

7 : Bhar 10 : Bhuiya 27 : Bhuiyâr 20 : Dângi 12 : Dom 37 : Golapûrab 12 : Hâbûra 10 : Kâchhi 9 : Kharwa 6 : Majhwâr 55 : Râji 11 : Thâru 22, 47.
 Exogamy,—Introduction V : —of gangs,—Kanjar 7 : origin of,—Nâi 3 : Panka 2 : Sânsiya 4.
 Exorcism,—Bhuiya 27 : Kanjar 13.

F

Family, the,—Introduction IV., 13.
 Fan, mystic use of,—Baiswâr 3.

Festivals,—passim.
 Fetishism,—Amethiya : Banarwâr : Barhai 4 : Bihishti 3 : Bind 7 : Chhipi 5 : Darzi

3 : Kandu 5 : Lohār 11 :
Majhwār 47 : Tamboli 6 :
Thāru 31.

Field ghosts,—Dharkār 11 :
Kharwār 17 : Majhwār 17.

Field goddess,—Ghnsiya 18.

Fire offering,—Agariya 19 :
Agnihotri 3.

First cousins, marriage
of—,Majhwār 7.

Food for the dead,—Baheli-ya 7 : Baiswār 4 : Bānsphor
7 : Bhuiya 20 : Bhuiyār 14 :
Dhāngar 11 : Khatik 6 :
Korwa 12 : Nat 17 : Pāsi
13.

Foot washing rite,—Barni
5 : Baiswār 6 : Kharwār
12.

Funeral feast,—Thāru 25.

G

Gāēyon kā deota,—worship of—, Jāt 31.

Gaja Dewat, worship of—,
Chamār 17.

Gajpati Rāē Durga, worship of—, Gautam 2.

Game-catching,—Beriya 2.

Gandak, worship of—,
Dom 28, 31.

Gandharva marriage,—Kol
14.

Ganesa, worship of—, Baiswār 3 : Bind 7 : Koiri 5 :

Mallāh 4 : Ramaiya 7.

Ganganāth, worship of—,
Dom 51.

Ganges, worship of—,

Ahiwāsi 6 : Dafāli 4 :

Basor 7 : Dhuniya 2 :

Gindaurya : Kanjar 10 :

Khatik 7 : Mallāh 7 : Mār-wāri 14 : Rādha 1.

Ganināth, worship of—,

Patwa 6.

Vol. IV.

Gansām, worship of—,
Gond 10 : Kol 17 : Musa-
har 29.

Garar Bir, worship of—,
Thāru 31.

Garbara Devi, worship of—,
Nat 31.

Garlic, prohibited food—,
Agarwāla 10.

Gauna rite,—Agarwāla 6.

Gauri, worship of—, Baiswār
3 : Bind 7 : Kori 8.

Gauripati, worship of—,
Bhāt 8.

Ghantarām, worship of—,
Alūr 25.

Ghāt, worship of—, Mallāh 7.

Ghatoi Bāba, worship of—,
Mallāh 7.

Ghatoriya, worship of—,
Dhobi 7 : Kahār 11.

Ghaus Pir, worship of—,
Chūnhār 4.

Ghâzl Miyân, worship of—

Blând 2: Bhangi 59:
Blathiyâra 4: Chârîkâr 4:
Dafâli 7: Gandhi 2: Kal-wâr 11: Kathak 4: King-riya 6: Kunjra 3: Rangrez 3: Saiqalgar 2.

Ghosts,—Agariya 21: Bhniya
25: Biyâr 18: Dharkâr
10: Dom 37: Gond 8:
Kanjara 13: Kotwa 12:
Majhwâr 40: Thâru 29.

Ghosts, barring of—, Aberiya
9: Baheliya 5: Basor 6:
Bhangi 54: Dom, 30:
Majhwâr 37.

Girl Râj, worship of—, Jât
31.

Gohet, worship of—, Para-
hiya 14.

Gonr, worship of—, Sahariya
7.

Goraiya, worship of—, Dhângar 12: Goriya: Murâo 3:
Sahariya 7.

Gorakhnâth, worship of—,
Udâsi 6.

Goril, worship of—, Dom 51.

Goswâmi, worship of—,
Patwa 6.

Gûga, worship of—, Bhangi
58: Bhil 14: Jât 31: see Zâhir Dîwân.

Guninâth, worship of—,
Kându 5.

Gusâin Bâba, worship of—,
Basor 7.

Gyân, worship of—, Oswâl 8.

Gypsies—Beriya 1: Dom 61:
Jât 10: Kanjar.

H

Hamsâyah, custom—, Pat-hân 1.

Hankwa rite—, Kalwâr 9.

Hanumân, worship of—,
Abiwâsi 6: Balai 3: Dhânuk 8: Kându 5: also see Mahâbir.

Hardaul

Hardaul Lâla

Hardaur

Hardiha

Hardiya

} worship of—, Baheliya 8: Banjâra

18: Barai 6: Bâri 6:

Bharbhânja 3: Chârîkâr 4:
Gond 9: Halwâi 5: Kalâr
11: Kalwâr 11: Kamkar
5: Patwa 6: Rastâogi 1:
Sunâr 18: Tarkihâr 3:
Teli 5.

Harischandra, legend of—,
Bhangi 8: Dom 23: Haris-chandi 1.

Hariyâi mâi

Hariyâli Devi

Hariyâri Devi

} worship of—, Bind

11: Ghasiya 18: Kol 23:
Nat 28.

Haru, worship of—, Dom 51.
 Hatadiya, worship of—,
 Banjara 10.
 Hathila } worship of—,
 Hathili }
 Kalwâr 11 : Nat 35 : and see Pâñch Pir.
 Hathlewa rite,—Mârwarî 12.
 Hazârî Sinh, worship of—,
 Jât 31.
 Hazrat Jilâni, the Saint—,
 'Iraqî 2.
 Hell, theory of—Bhuiyâr 16.
 Holi feast—Agariya 20 :
 Thâru 37.
 Horoscopes, calculation of —, Jyotishi.

Houses,—Chero 18 : Thâru
 41.
 House worship,—Aheriya 13.
 Hulkimâi, worship of—, Nat
 18.
 Human sacrifice,—Banjara
 7 : Bhuiya 26 : Mahârash-tra : Musahar 9 : Tiyar.
 Hunting, modes of—,
 Bâwariya 3.
 Hypergamy,—Bhât 4 : Biyâr
 1 : Dharkâr 1 : Gôjar 6 :
 Jât 24 : Jhijhotiya 2 :
 Kharwâr 2 : Khatri 14 :
 Majhwâr 8 : Nat 39 :
 Patwa 3. Râjput 10.

Iîas, legend of—, Bhangi 12
 Imâm Husain, worship of—,
 Gandhi 2.
 Imâm Sâhib, worship of—,
 Luniya 5.
 Impurity ceremonial—Gola-
 pûrab 11.
 Incest—Musahar 9.
 Infanticide—Jât 8.
 Infidelity, prenuptial—tolerated,—Kol 6.

Initiation,—Agariya 10 :
 Aghori. Bhangi 41 : Bisnoi 6 : Dikhit Brâhman :
 Divâna 2 : Gusâin 7 :
 Hâbûra 8 : Jangam 3, 4 :
 Kalîrpanthi 4 : Nimbârak
 2.
 Inoculation,—Mâli 5.
 Iron manufacture,—Agariya 30.

J

Jagatdeo, worship of—,
 Neo 9.

Jageswar, worship of—,
 Chamâr 17.

Jaina faith—Jati 2 : Oswāl 8.
 Jāk, worship of—, Thāru 35.
 Jakhhai }
 Jakhiya } worship of—,
 Aheriya 11 : Balāhar 5 :
 Gadariya 8 : Kanjar 15 :
 Kathiyāra 5 : Lodha 5 :
 Teli 5.
 Jākni, worship of—, Thāru
 35.
 Jamhua,—A birth demon,
 Koiri 7 : Majhwār 35.
 Jamhuāhi Devi } worship
 Jamuāhi Devi } of—,
 Kachhwāha 2.
 Janta Deo, worship of—,
 Ghasiya 2.
 Jarasandha, legend of—,
 Kahār 3.
 Jata Rohini, worship of—,
 Majhwār 40.
 Jay Sinh, worship of—,
 Goriyo.
 Jhakkar Shāh, a saint—
 Suthrashahi 2.

Jhalai, worship of—, Kachhwāha 4.
 Jhambaji, legend of—,
 Bishnoi.
 Jhiwarni, worship of—,
 Kahār 13.
 Jiwan, legend of—, Bhangi 9.
 Jiwan Shāh Bāba, worship of—, Basor 7.
 Jiyan, worship of—, Khan-
 delwāl 4.
 Jokhaiya, worship of—, See Jakhai. — Juālamukhi Devi, worship of—, Beriya 6 : Kharwār
 1, 15 : Nat 43.
 Jungle, given as a dowry,— Bhar 10 : Kanjar 7 :
 Korwa 10.
 Jus primæ noctis,—Ahir 20 :
 Barwār 3 : Kol 6 : Introduction VI., 3.
 Juthahiya Bhawāni, worship of—, Dom 35.

K

Kabir, legend of—, Kori 1.
 Kāla Deo, worship of—,
 Bānsphor 8 : Baheliya 8 :
 Chamār 17.
 Kāla Mehar }
 Kāla Pīr } worship of—,
 Jāt 31.
 Kalawati Kanya, worship of—, Thathera 6.

Kalbisht }
 Kalchan } worship of—,
 Dom 51.
 Kālê Gora, worship of—,
 Bhangi 60.
 Kālî Bhawāni, worship of—,
 Banjāra 12 : Basor 7 :
 Bāwariya 8 : Beriya 2, 6 :
 Bhuiya 21 : Gadariya 8 :

- Gharûk 2: Hâbûra 8:
 Kamkar 3: Kapariya 9:
 Kewat 4: Kingriya 6:
 Kumbâr 5: Lohâr 11:
 Mal 2: Mâli 4: Mallâh 7:
 Murâo 3: Nat 18, 47:
 Saigalgar 2: Thârû 34.
 Kâlîka
 Kâlîka mâi } worship of—,
 Bânsphor 8: Bhangî 31:
 Bhar 9: Chûrihâr 4:
 Dafâli 7: Darzi 3: Kal-wâr 11: Thâru 32: Tawâif
 5.
 Kalsa, a sacred jar—, Bhuiya
 16.
 Kâlû Bîr, worship of—,
 Baheliya 5, 8.
 Kâlû Deo, worship of—,
 Banjâra 18.
 Kâlû Kahâr, worship of—,
 Kahâr 11: Kâlupanthu.
 Kâlû Sayyid, worship of—,
 Bhoksa 10.
 Kaluwa, worship of—, Dom
 1.
 Kalyâni, worship of—, Khan-
 delwâl 4.
 Kamalaji, worship of—,
 Goriya.
 Kambira, worship of—, Pâsi
 14.
 Kanchhedan rite,—Brâhman
 21.
 Kaneriya Bâba, worship of—, Khangâr 6.
 Kanyâdân rite,—Agarwâla 6.
 Kâra Deo, worship of—, Pâsi
 14.
 Karai, worship of—, Murâo 3.
 Karama, a tribal dance,—
 Kharwâr 20.
 Karâr Bîr, worship of—,
 Khatîk 7.
 Kârê Deo, worship of—,
 Bhar 10.
 Kâshi Bâba, worship of—,
 Bind 9.
 Kâshi Dâs, worship of—,
 Bhar 9.
 Kâshinâth, worship of—,
 Ahîr 21.
 Katiya, worship of—, Saha-
 riya 7.
 Katyûri Râjas, worship of—, Dom 51.
 Kela Devi, worship of—,
 Hâbûra 8.
 Ketu, worship of—, Dusâdh
 14. Joshi 4.
 Kewal, worship of—, Goriya.
 Khabish, worship of—, Dom
 51.
 Khair Mâta, worship of—,
 Gond 10.
 Khanta }
 Khanti } an implement,— Kanjâr 20: Korwa 13.
 Khappar kuchi rite,—Musa-
 har 13.
 Kharag, worship of—, Thâru
 10.
 Khetyâr Devi, worship of—,
 Bhuiyâr 22.
 Khwâja Bali, legend of—,
 Rangrez 1.
 King, selection of—, Gandharb 4.

Kinnarâm, worship of—,
Gandharb 4.
Kohabar rite—Kol 14 : Majhwâr 18.
Koila Bâba, worship of—,
Goriya : Sorahiya.
Kopa Bhagat, worship of—,
Kumbhâr 5.
Korapuri rite—Kalwâr 8.
Korhaniya, worship of—,
Kumbhâr 5.
Korl katori rite,—Dhobi 3.
Koti Râni, worship of—,
Majhwâr 43.
Krichchhra, rite,—Agnihotri 2.
Krishna, worship of—, Gahoi 4 : Gond 9 : Kachhwâha 5 :

Kumbhâr 2 : Mahesri 8 : Sahariya 7 : Sejawari 6.
Kshetrapal, worship of—,
Dom 51 : Pâsi 14.
Kuânwâla, worship of—,
Chamâr 17 : Hâbûra 6 : Kâchhi 8 : Lodha 5 : Orh 3 : Thâru 33.
Kûkarmari, worship of—,
Dom 34, 37.
Kuldeo, worship of—,
Luniya 5.
Kurehna, worship of—, Lohâr 11 : Mâli 4.
Kuri dhakelwâna } rite—
Kuri metna }
Dharkâr 7 : Majhwâr 20.
Kurmundan, rite—Kol 23.

L

Lagan, rite,—Aheriya 8.
Lakhdâta, worship of—, Jât 31.
Lâlbeḡ, legend of—, Bhangî 3.
Lâlmani, worship of—,
Kâchhi 8.
Lata Dhoba, rite,—Lohâr 6
Latu, worship of—, Dom 51.
Levirate, the—, Aberiya 5 :
Barhai 3 : Bâri 3 : Barwâr 3 : Basor 3 : Bhând 2 : Bhar 5 : Bhuiya 8 : Bhuiyâr 8 : Bilishti 2 Bind 4 : Biyâr 5 : Chamâr 8 : Chero 8 : Dhângar 7 : Dhânuk 3 : Dharkâr 3 : Dom 59 :

Gadariya 4 : Ghasiya 7 : Gûjar 8 : Introduction VI., 8—'Isâqî 4 : Kahâr 9 : Kewat 8 : Kharwâr 7 : Khâtîk 3 : Kol 8 : Kori 3 : Korwa 7 : Kurmi 9 : Luniya 4 : Majhwâr 24 : Mallâh 5 : Panka 5. .
Loha, worship of—, Khan-delwâl 4.
Lohâsur Devi, worship of—,
Agariya 10.
Lona Chamârin, . . legend of—, Chamâr 3.
Lorik, legend of—, Ahîr 11.
Lutta, worship of—, Thâru 5.

M

Madain, worship of—, Kalwâr 11 : Musahar 31.

Madâr Sâhib, a saint,— Deriya 6 : Dhîruk 7 : Kâchhi 8.

Mâdho Bâba, worship of—,
Kahâr 11.

Madhu worship of—, Thârû 3.

Maganpâl, worship of—,
Musahar 28.

Mahâbali, worship of—,
Musahar 20.

Mahâbir, worship of—, Banarwâr : Barai 6 : Bargâh 3 : Bâri 6 : Bhasbhûnja 3 : Barhai 4 : Blât 8 : Gond 9 : Kahâr 11 : Kându 5 : Kasarwâni 2 : Kasaundhan 3 : Kewat 4 : Koiri 9 : Kori 2 : Kurmi 12 : Lohâr 11 : Luniya 5 : Mallâh 7 : Murâo 3 : Nâi 4 : Pâsi 14 : Patwa 6 : Rastâogi : Soeri 9 : Tamboli 4 : Telî 5 : Thathera 6 : and see Hanumân.

Mahâdâni, worship of—,
Majhwâr 41.

Mahâdeva, worship of—, Ahîr 23 : Beldâr 4 : Bhasbhûnja 3 : Bhuiyâr 16 : Bind 9 : Biyâr 16 : Gandharb 8 : Ghasiya 18 : Gindauriya : Gond 9 : Gurchha 5 : Halwâi 5 : Jât 31 : Kamkar 3 :

Kapariya 9 : Kharwâr 15 : Majhwâr 39 : Mallâh 7 : Murâo 3 : Râdha 1 : Soeri 9 : Sunâr 10 : Taga 8 : Telî 5.

Mahâ Kâli, worship of—,
Mâli 1.

Mahâ Lakshmi, worship of—, Mallâh 7.

Mahâ Saraswati, worship of—, Mallâh 7.

Maheni, legend of—, Hayolane.

Mahesa Râkshasa, worship of—, Kânhpuriya 1.

Mahton Bâba—, Basor 7.

Makhdûm Shâh, a saint,—
Bhangi 31.

Mainpât, worship of—,
Patârî 1.

Mair, legend of—, Sunar 2.

Mâna } worship of—Mâna Guru }
Kanjâr 2, 14.

Mândar Devî, worship of—,
Kharwâr 17.

Mangan, worship of—, Thârû 35.

Mânro hilaî, rite,—Ahîr 22.

Mantri pûja—, Baiswâr 3 :
Halwâi 3.

Manukh Deva, worship of—,
Dusâdli. 14.

Marang, worship of—Goriya.

Mari, worship of—, Kanjâr 14.

Nat 43 : Thârû 32.

Mari masân, worship of—,
Dom 37.

Marlyâl, worship of—, Banjâra 8.

Marriage, age for—, Introduction VI, 13: by capture, Bhuiya 16: Bhuiyar
13: Dusâdh 12: Gadariya
6: Ghasiya 14. ———

Introduction VI., 16: Kanjar
7: Lobâr 10: Majhwâr 17:
Mârwâri 11: Musahar 15:
Nat 41: Thâru 16, 17:—
by exchange,—Barhai 3:
Bhuiya 19: Dharkâr 1:
Ghasiya 15: Introduction
VI., 26:—Kanauiya: Meo
9: Musahar 15: Tarkihâr
2: ceremonies, passim; run-away—, Gond 6:—Introduction VI., 26; temporary—, Tawâif 8:—time for—, Kol 6.

Masân } worship of—, Ahe-
Masâni } riya 11: Dom 51:
Mallâh 7: Orh 3.

Mâta, { worship of—, Aheriya
11: Bhil 14: Chhipi 5:
Dhuniya 2: Gond 10: Jât
31: Julâha 4: see Sitala.

Maternal uncle, position of—,
Agariya 8: Majhwâr 14

Maternity, recognition of—
Majhwâr 16.

Matmangar, rite,—Agariya 8:
Ahr 19: Baheliya 6: Baiswâr 3: Bânsphor 5: Basor
5: Bhar 6: Bhuiya 15:
Bind 7: Chamâr 12: Dhar-

kâr 6: Dhobi 3: Dhuniya
3: Dom 29: 'Irâqi 9:
Kharwâr 12: Khatik 5:
Koiri 4: Kol 13: Majhwâr
19: Musahar 14: Panka
9.

Matriarchate, the —, Agarwâla 1: Dharkâr 8: Introduction VI., 31: Kol 7:
Musahar 18: Sânsiya 4.

Maurchhat, rite,—Dângi 11.
Mayûra, the Rishi—, Bisen
1: Kâkan: Mal.

Measuring rite,—Majhwâr 20.

Mehar pûja,—Khangâr 6.

Mekhâsur, worship of—,
Aheriya 11.

Milk, prejudice against—,
Kol 22.

Miran
Miran Sâhib } legend of—Kathiyâra 4:— worship of,—Chhipi 5: Dhuniya

2: Kâchhi 8: Khatik 7:
Sunâr 16.

Mirga Râni, worship of—
Majhwâr 43.

Mitthu Bhukhiya, worship of—, Banjâra 8.

Miyân Sâhib, a saint,—Ah-eriya 11: Baheliya 8: Banjâra 15, 18: DhânuK 7:
Kathiyâra 3: Kisân 2:
Koiri 4: Lodha 7: Nâi 4:
Orh 8: Pâsi 14: Râdha 1.

Moon worship,—Baheliya 8:
Bânsphor 8.

Mother, isolation of—,
Majhwâr 35.

Mountain god,—Dharkâr 9.
 Mûchak Râni, worship of—,
 Kharwâr 16.
 Muhammad, worship of—,
 Luniya 5.
 Mukhta, worship of—,
 Khandelwâl 4.

Mûla sânti, rite,—Brâhmau
 17.
 Munh dikhâi, rite,—Aheriya
 4: Khatik 3: Koeri 6.
 Munna Dâs, worship of—
 Sunâr 16.
 Mûnran rite,—Brâhman 21 :
 Gujarâti Brâhman 19.

N

Nâdu Bir, worship of—,
 Bhuiya 22.
 Nâg, worship of—, Kol 13 :
 Majhwâr 40.
 Nâga Bâba, worship of—,
 Khangâr 6.
 Nâgarsen, worship of—,
 Chamâr 17: Kâchhi 8.
 Nâgbeli, worship of—, Bâri
 6.
 Nâgin, worship of—, Khan-
 delwâl 4.
 Nakh katâya —————
 Nail-cutting, rite—,
 Koeri 7.
 Nâmdeo, worship of—,
 Chhîpi 5: Dhuniya 6.
 Names, Contemptuous—,
 Kahâr 12; double—,
 Baheliya 9: Bhar 10. Gola-pûrab 12: selection of—
 Kol 12.
 Naming of children }
 Nâm karm, rite }
 Agarwâla 1: Korwa 9:
 Mallâh 6: Musahar 21.

Nânak, worship of—, Banjâra 8: Kanjar 15.
 Nandi mukh srâddha,—Baranwâl 2: Bhât 6.
 Nârada Muni, legend of—,
 Aheriya 12: Kahâr 4.
 Nara sinha, worship of—,
 Bâri 6: Bhangî 60:
 Lohâr 11: Mâli 4: Saha-riya 7: Tamboli 4.
 Nârâyan Deo, worship of—,
 Gond 10: Sânsiya 6.
 Nârâyana bali, rite, Aud-hiya 9: Mallâh 6.
 Nat, worship of—, Musahar
 28.
 Nathiya, worship of—, Kan-
 jar 15.
 Neg bharna, rite, Panka 9.
 Nihâran, rite—, Kori 3.
 Niman Parihâr, worship of, Baheliya 5.
 Nim tree, respect for—, Gola-pûrab 2: Raikwâr 1.

Ningo.
 Ningo Bāghliya } worship
 of—, Majhwār 6, 30.
 Niyoga, the—, Introduction
 VI. 8.

Nona Chamārīn, legend of—, Chamār 2.
 Nose cutting, Kol 6.
 Nudity, a spell—, Chamār 2.

O

Oaths,—Agariya 20: Aliwasi
 7: Babeliya 9: Baiswār 6:
 Bājgi 9: Bānsphor 9:
 Beriya 7: Bhangī 60:
 Bhar 10: Bhuiya 27:
 Bhuiyār 20: Biyār 20:
 Dāngi 12: Dharkār 11:
 Dom 40. 00: Dasādh 17:
 Golapūrab 13: Hābūra 10:
 Trāqi 12: Jāt 32: Kahār
 12: Kalwār 14: Kharwār
 18: Khatik 8: Kol 21:
 Korwa 12: Majhwār 52:
 Musahar 31: Nat 47:
 Panka 14: Sahariya 7:
 Sānsiya 7: Thāru 48.

Occupation, a basis of caste, Introduction,—
 Chapter III.

Occupational tribal titles
 Introduction IV., 10.

Oil-mill fetish,—Teli 0.

Omens,—Bārwar 10: Bhuiya
 27: Bhuiyār 20: Biyār 20:
 Dom 37: Kahār 12: Kan-jar 18: Kharwār 17: Kol
 20: Korwa 12: Majhwār
 50: Musahar 31: Rāji 11.

Onions, prohibited food,—
 Agarwāla 10.

Ordeals,—Kahār 12: Kanjar
 28: Sānsiya 7.

Ornaments, use of—, Bhangī 61.

Outsider, marriage with—,
 Bhangī 40.

Ox,—worship of—, Banjāra
 10.

P

Pachisi, custom of—, Khatik
 2.

Pahār Pāndo, worship of—,
 Dharkār 9.

Pahlwān, worship of—,
 Kanjar 15: Musahar 20.

Panchdeva, worship of—,
 Nānakpantli 5.

Panch mangari, rite,—Bâri 3.

Pânch Pir, worship of—,
Aheriya 11: Ahîr 23: Banjâra 14: Baheliya 5: Barai
6: Bargâh 3: Barhai 4:
Barwâr 8: Beldâr 4:
Bhând 2: Bhangi 58: Bhar
9: Bharbhûnja 3: Bhatthiyâra 4: Bihishti 3: Bind
1: Chhipi 5: Chûrihâr 4:
Dabgar 3: Darzi 3: Dhar-
kâr 9: Dhobi 7: Dhuniya
3: Ghosi 2: Halwâi 5:
Julâha 4: Kahâr 11:
Kalwâr: 11: Kândn:
Kanjâr 15: Kasarwâni 2:
Kasoundhan 3: Kasera 4:
Koiri 9: Kori 4: Kumbâr
5: Kunnja 3: Lohâr 11:
Luniya 5: Mâli 4: Mallâh
7: Manihâr 1: Pâsi 12:
Patwa 6: Qassâb: Rangrez
3: Rastâogi: Saiqalgar 2:
Sorahiya: Sunâr 18: Tamboli 3: Teli 5: Thathera 6.
Panthwâsa, rite,—Auddhiya
5.
Pânre Bâba, worship of—,
Mâlavi 1.
Pânw pûja—Baheliya 6:
Kalwâr 9.
Parachhan rite,—Baiswâr 3.
Parameswar, worship of—,
Banjâra 15: Bhuiya 21:
Dom 31: Gandhîla 3: Gurchha 5: Kapariya 9: Nat
18: Râdha 1: Sânsiya 6.
Parameswari, worship of—,
Chamâr 17.

Parasurâma legend of—,
Khatri 8.

Parbha, worship of—, Kanjar
14.,

Parihâr, worship of—, Baheliya 8: Kalwâr 11.

Pârvati, worship of—, Gandharb 8: Gindaauriya:
Mnrâo 8.

Pât, worship of—, Patâri 1.

Paternity, admission of—,
Kol 12.

Pâthana, rite,—Brâhman 22.

Pathwârî Devi, worship of —, Golapûrab 2.

Peacock's feathers, influence of—, Musahar 21.

Perfumes, manufacture of —, Gandhi 3.

Personal tribal titles,—Introduction IV., 11.

Petmanganiya rite,—Kanjâr
6.

Phagua feast—Agariya 20:
see Holi.

Phûlmatî Bhawâni, worship of—, Barhai 4: Bhar 9: Kalwâr 11: Kol 18: Mu-
sahar 20: Nâi 4: Pâsi 12:
Sunâr 16.

Pickaxe, worship of—, Pokharna 20.

Pilâi rite,—Ahîr 20.

Pilgrimages,—Majhwâr 45.

Pîpal tree, sacred,—Aheriya
13: Bhar 9.

Pipes of leaves,—Korwa 13.

Piyâla rite,—Dhuniya 3.

Planets, worship—, Gujarâti
Brâhman 15.

- Pole, worship of—, Nat 2.
- Pollution, ceremonial,—Aheriya 10.
- Polyandry—Ahir 15; Gôjar 7; Introduction VI., 4; Jât 26; Lohâr 10.
- Polygamy—Bhar 5, 6; Bhuiyâr 6; Introduction VI., 15; Majhwâr 16;—result of hard labour—Kol 6.
- Prabha, worship of—, Kanjar 14.
- Prajapati, worship of—, Kumhâr 5.
- Prajapatya, rite,—Agnihotri 2.
- Priests, tribal—, Majhwâr 45.
- Primogeniture,—Majhwâr 27.
- Prostitution,—Gandharb 3; Tawâif 9.
- Puberty ceremonies,—Bhuiya 13; Bind 6; Ghaziya 13.
- Punkâ balana, rite,—Kahâr 11.
- Pûrabi Devi, worship of—, Barhai 4.
- Purification,—Dângi 10.
- Pyârêjl, worship of—, Gôjar 11; Jât 31.

Q

Qâzi Sâhib ki chauki, rite,—Diwâna 3.

R

- Râdha Krishna, worship of—, Bundela 3.
- Râê Dâs, a religious reformer,—Chamâr 18.
- Rahu, worship of—, Dusâdh 14; Joshi 4.
- Râja Ben, legend of—, Thâru 7.
- Râja Chandol, worship of—, Kharwâr 15; Korwa 12; Majhwâr 43.
- Raja Lâkhan, worship of—, Kharwâr 15; Kol 18.
- Râjput tribes, tribal titles derived from—, Introduction IV., 9.
- Raksel, worship of—, Kol 18.
- Rāksha, worship of—, Thâru 7.
- Râma
Râmchandra } worship of —, Gond 9; Kachhwâha 5;

Lodha 5 : Sahariya 7 : Sej-
wari 6.
Râm Thâkur, worship of—,
Pâsi 14.
Randeo, worship of—, Jât
31.
Ratan Pânre, worship of—,
Majhwâr 47.
Ratinâth, worship of—,
Thâru 34.
Ratjaga, rite,—Aheriya 8.
Rats, used as food,—Beldâr
3 : Bind 11.
Recitation, religious—, Koiri 10.

Relationship—Chero 9 : Dharlâr 4 : Kol 10 : Kor-wa 8 : Majhwâr 34.
Rikheswar, worship of—,
Thâru 7.
Rings used in worship—,
Majhwâr 39.
River, tribal names derived from rivers—, Introduction IV., 2 : worship—,
Dom 40 : Kewat 4 : see Ganges worship.
Roads, goddess of—, Gola-
pûrab 1.
Rope worship—Nat 2.

S

Sadalu Lâl, worship of—,
Musahar 24.
Sahjâdi, worship of—, Dafâli
7.
Sahjamal, worship of—Ahe-
riya 11.
Sakat chauth, feast,—Bar-
wâr 9.
Sakrâi Mâta, worship of—,
Khandelwâl 4.
Sâl, a sacred tree,—Agariya
8.
Sâlivâhâna legend of,—Bais
6.
Salutation, modes of—, Baheliya 9 : Bânsphor 9 : Barwâr 12 : Basor 8 : Beriya
7 : Bhangi 61 : Bhar 10 :
Bhuiya 23 : Bhuryâr 22 :

Bind 11 : Dhânnk 9 :
Dharlâr 12 : Golapûrab 18 :
Jât 32 : Kachbwâha 5 :
Khatik 8 : Kol 24 : Korwa
13 : Majhwâr 58 : Oswâl
9 : Panka 15 : Ramaiya 8.
Saini, worship of—, Dom 51.
Sairi Devi } worship of—,
Sâyari Devi }
Chamâr 17 : Chero 13 :
Kalwâr 11, 12 : Parahiya
14.
Samai, worship of—, Bâns-phor 8 : Bhar 10 : Dom 31 :
Kumhâr 5 : Thâru 32.
Sânsmai, legend of—, Sâns-
siya 1.
Sânwar, worship of—Sahari-
ya 7.

- Saraswati, worship of—, Kathak 4.
- Sârda, worship of—, Bhât 8.
- Sarwar Lakhi, worship of—, Bhoksa 10
- Sati, worship of—, Bais 3 : Banjâra 8 : Kându 5 : Patwa 6.
- Sat jug ki Kursi,—Bhangî 41.
- Satvâi, worship of—, Lohâr 3 : Oṡwâl 7.
- Satya Nârâyan, worship of—, Bind 9.
- Saubhari Rishi, legend of—, Ahiwâsi 1.
- Sâwant, worship of—, Thâru 35.
- Sâwant Sinh, worship of—, Jât 31.
- Sayyid, worship of—, Basor 7 : Beriya 6 : Kâchhi 8 : Pâsi 14.
- Sayyid Hasan, worship of—, Bhând 2.
- Sayyid Mard, worship of—, Kâchhi 8.
- Sayyid Mohsin Khân, worship of—, Lodha 5.
- Scapegoat, the—Kol 18 . Majhwâr 53.
- Sen Bhagat, worship of—, Nâi 1 : sept the, Introduction IV., 13,
- Sewanriya, worship of—, Bhuiyâr 16 : Biyâr 16.
- Shahid }
Shahid Mard } worship of—, Basor 7 : Pâsi 14.
- Shâh' Madâr, legend of—, Madârî 3.
- Shaikh Saddu, legend of—, Bhangî 59 : Jât 31 : Saiqalgar 2 : Teli 5.
- Shaikh Sana, worship of—, Gandhi 1.
- Shaikh Zainuddin, worship of—Gandhi 1.
- Shaving—Baranwâi 2 : Dhobi 6 : Kalwâr 8 : Korwa 11 : Majhwâr 35.
- Sickle—worship of—Pâsi 11.
- Siloman Bâba, worship of—, Kâhâr 11.
- Sing Bonga, worship of—, Kol 17.
- Singursâl, worship of—, Kându 5.
- Sinha Bâba, worship of—, Bâwariya 11.
- Siater's son, respect for—, Bhuiyâr 18 : Dom 30 : Kol 13.
- Sita, worship of—, Kachh-wâha 5.
- Sitala worship of—Chero 13 : Dhângar 12 : Golapûrab 12 : Gûjar 11 : Halwâi 5 : Kâchhi 8 : Kasera 4 : Khatik 7 : Kori 4 : Kumhâr 5 : Kurmi 12 : Mallâh 7 : Mârwarî 14 : Murâo 3 : Pâsi 1 : Soeri.
- Sitârâm, worship of—Majhwâr 39.
- Sites, religious, tribal names derived from—Introduction IV., 4.

Siva, worship of—, Ramaiya
7 : see Mahādeva.

Siva Bhaiya, worship of—,
Banjāra 8.

Sivāna, worship of—, Ghasiya
18.

Small-pox goddess; see Māta, Sitala.

Snake, legend, of—Agarwāla
1 : Bachgoti 2 :—pipe
fetish, Nat 43 :—worship,
Agarwāla 1, 3 : Baheliya 8 :
Bais 8 : Bājgi 7 : Bānsphor 8 : Bhil 14 : Chero 6 :
Gindaoriya : Jāt 31 : Kharwār 17 : Kol 18 : Lohār 8 :
Taga 4.

Sokha Bāba, worship of—,
Barai 6 : Tamboli 4.

Somiya worship of—Saha-
riya 7.

Sonmat, } worship of—Sonwat }
Thāru 52.

Sorcery,—Khairwa 6 Thāru
30, 47.

Soul, theory of—Majhwar
48 : Thāru 28.

Srāvana, legend of,—Gangaputra 3.

Succession, Agariya 12 :

Bhuiya 10 : Bhuiyār 11 :

Bijār 8 : Dhāngar 8 : Gandharb 7 : Ghasiya 10 :

‘Irāqi 6 : Kharwār 10 :

Kol 11 : Majhwār 20.

Sugar cane, unlucky,—,
Raghubansi 1.

Sunstroke, caused by Bhavāni, Dharkār 10.

Sun worship—Baheliya 8 :

Chamār 17 : Gindaoriya :

Kalwār 12 : Kāndu 5 :

Kāthi 2 : Kharwār 15 :

Kol 17 : Lohār 8 : Majhwār 30 : Nimbārak.

Supa Bhagat

Supach Bhagat } a saint—

Arakh 8 : Balāhar 8 : Bānsphor 1 : Basor 1 : Bhanga

5 Dom 18.

Surāj Deo,

Sūrajnārāyan } worship of —Chamār 17 : Gond 10.

Surdhis, worship of—Kurmi
12.

Surgery, rural—Nat 36.

Sword worship,—Baiswār 3.

T

Taboos,—Agariya 23 : Barwār 11 : Basor 8 : Bhar
10 : Bhuiya 23 : Bhuiyār
21 : Chero 17 : Dāngi 13 :
Vol. IV.

Dhāngar 15 : Golapūab
15 Kāchhi 10 : Kāhār
12 : Kalwār 14 : Kapariya
10 Khairwa 7 : Kharwār

10 : Kol 22 : Majhwār 51 :

Panka 15 : Parahiya, 16.

Taka uthāoni rite, —Koiri 4.

Tambi, worship of—, Khan-
delwāl 4.

Tanks, —Bhar 3.

Tanning, —Chamār 27.

Tānsen, a saint, —Tawāif 10.

Tottōōng, Agariya 22 : Aheriya 13 : Bhuiya 28 : Bhui-yār 19 : Bind 11 : Biyār

10 : Chero 15 : Dhāngar 15 :

Dharkār 11 : Dom 37 :

Gond 4 : Majhwār 2 :

Musahar 32 : Nat 41.

Tejaji, worship of—, Jāt 31.

Telhardi, rite—, Agarwāla 6.

Telīya masān, worship of—,

Musahar 2.

Terha Deva, worship of—,

Chamār 17.

Territorial titles of castes,

Introduction Chapter

IV., para. 1.

Thākurdeo } worship of —,

Thākurji } Gandharb 8 :

Gond 10 : Kurmi 12.

'Thieves' argot, —Barwār 17 :

Bāwariya 5 : Hābūra 13 :

Qalandar 5 : Nat 59.

Tholiya, worship of—,

Sahariya 7.

Threshold, respect for—,

Korwa 12.

Tiger, ghost,—Dharkār 11 :

superstitions regarding

—, Kharwār 17.

Tiled houses, —unlucky,—

Raghubansi 1.

Timangari, rite,—Bāri 3.

Tirthankara worship,—

Oswāl 8 :

Toe ring, respect for—

Dharkār 12.

Tools, worship of—, Tha-

thera 6.

Totemism,—Agariya 3 : Ba-ghol 2 : Baiswār 2 : Bhangi

11, 23 : Bhuiya 4 : Bhuiyār

2 : Biyār 1 : Chāi 1 : Chero

6 : Dhāngar 2 : Dharkār 1 :

Dhuniya 2 : Ghasiya 2 :

Kāchhi 1 : Kalhāns : Kanjar

18 : Kathiyāra 2 : Khangār

3 : Kharwār 1 : Majhwār

3, 49 : Musahar 21 : Nat

11, 37 : Parahiya 14 : Sahariya 2.

Totemistic tribal titles,—

Introduction IV., 12.

Towns, tribal titles derived from—, Introduction,

IV., 5.

Tree,—marriage—, Ahir 20 :

Gadariya 6 : Tawāif 5 :

spirits,—Musahar 25 : Thāru 29 : worship,—Agariya

24 : Agarwāla 9 : Bānsphor

5 : Bhot 5 : Bhuiya 25 :

Dāngi 11 : Dhāngar 10 :

Dharkār 10 : Dhuniya 2 :

Dom 40 : Gaur Rājput 4 :

Gindmuriya : Golapūrab 12 :

Kalwār 12 : Kapariya 9 :

Kharwār 12 : Kurmi 10

Lohār 3, 8 : Majhwār 6

Nat 43 : Panka 12.

Tribal nomenclature,— —Introduction, Chapter IV.

Tribes, ancient, tribal names derived from—, Introduction,
IV., 7.
Tulja Devi, worship of—,
Banjara 8.

Turkin, a ghost—, Majhwâr
40.
Turnip, prohibited food—
Agarwâla 10
Twins, propitiation for birth of—, Aberiya 6.

U

Unmarried people, contempt for—, Kol 5.

Upanâyana, rite,—Brâhman
23 : Gujarâti Brâhman 21.

V

Vahîr nisarana rite,—Brâh-
man 19.
Vâlmîki, a saint,—Aheriya
12 : Baheliya 1.
Varuna, worship of—, Mal-
lâh 7.
Vatsa, legend of—Bachgoti.
Vena Raja—Thâru 7.
Village, form of—, Thâru 41.

Village gods, worship of—Dom 34 : see Dih, Deohâr.
Vindhyabâsini Devi, worship of—, Ahîr 23 : Bâns-phor 8 : Bhangî 31 : Cha-mâr 17 : Kanjar 15 : Nat
18.
Visali, worship of—, Kâchhi 8.
Viswakarma, worship of—Barhai 4 : Lohâr 2 : Thawai.

W

Weeping in salutation,
Majhwâr 58.
Well worship, Baheliya 5 :
Chamâr 17 : Hâbûra 6 :
Kâchhi 8. Lodha 5 : Orh 3 :

Thâru 33.
see Kuânwâla.
Wheel, worship of—, Kum-
hâr 5.

Widowhood, period of—,
Kol. 8.

Widow marriage,—Agariya
10 : Aheriya 5 : Ahir 10 :
Baheliya 1 : Baiawar 2 :
Bansphor 4 : Barai 5 : Barhai 3 : Bari 3 : Barwar 3 :
Basor 3 : Bhānd 2 : Bhar
5 : Bhel 5 : Bhuiya 8 : Bhui-yār 5 : Hind 4 : Biyār 5 :
Chamār 5 : Chero 8 : Dāngi
5 : Dhāngar 7 : Dhānuk
3 : Dharkār 3 : Dūdādh 5 :
Gadariya 4 : Ghasiya 7 :
Gond 7 : Gūjar 8. Introduction VI., 11 : Jāt 27 :
Kahār 9 : Irāqi 1 : Kathiyāra 2 : Kowat 3 : Kharwār
7 : Khatk 3 : Kol 8 : Kori

3 : Kerwa 7 : Karmi 9 :
Ichār 10 : Isoniya 1 : Majhwār 21 : Mallāh 5 : Murā-har 13 : Nat 13 : Paaka 6 : —, compulsory,—Kol. 6.

Witchcraft,—Banjāra 4 :
Bholā 11 : Bhuiya 27 :
Bhuiyār 20 : Biyār 20 :
Chero 16 : Dom 37 : Go-pārāh 14 : Irāqi 12 :
Kāchhi 9 : Kahār 12 : Kan-
jar 17 : Majhwār 53 :
Murāhar 31 : Rājji 13 :
Thiru 47.

Wives on trial,—Ghasiya 5.

Women, diet of—, Kol 21 :
—excluded from betel gardens—Barai 7 : status of—, Majhwār 59.

Y

Year, burning of—, Biyār 17 : Ghasiya 2.

Z

Zāhir diwan } worship of—,
Zāhir Pir }

Aheriya 11 : Balāi 3 : Banjāra 18 : Bāwariya 8 :
Bhangī 58 : Chamār 17 :
Hābūra 10 : Jāt 31 : Kathi

yāra 4 : Kori 4 : Nat 4 : Orh 3 : Rahwārī 3 : and see Gūga.

Zainuddin, worship of—,
Jāt 31.